MY DAUGHTER

WERE GATHERED AND ARRANGED

"JOHANNINE GRAMMAR" IS DEDICATED

PREFACE

IT was said in the first half of this work, Johannine Vocabulary (1879), "There are more ambiguities in the Fourth Gospel than in all the Three taken together, and it is easy to put one's finger on the cause of many of them." One object of Johannine Grammar is to classify, with the view of ultimately explaining, these ambiguous passages¹. For example, what Browning calls Hoti on my title-page may mean "that" or "because." Browning extols his Grammarian—alas! an ideal—who "settled Hoti's business." This work tries to help to "settle" it—unquestionably it has not yet been "settled"—for passages in the Fourth Gospel, in some of which our translators halt between "that" and "because."

Again, Johannine commentators of repute disagree as to who is speaking in certain portions of the Gospel. Take, for example, i. 16—18 "For he was before me. For of his fulness we all received.....the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared [him]." Origen attributed the italicised passage to the Baptist. So did Irenaeus. Heracleon, and many critics in Origen's time, maintained that it proceeded partly from the Baptist, partly from the evangelist. Alford and Westcott assert that the whole of it proceeds from the evangelist.

Next take iii. 15—21 "...that whosoever believeth may in him have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God sent not the Son...that they have been wrought in God." Concerning the italicised passage Westcott says "It contains the reflections of the evangelist and is not a continuation of the words of the Lord." Alford says that this view—although held by many commentators—is "as inconceivable as the idea of St Matthew having combined into one the insulated sayings of his Master." Westcott maintains that his own conclusion is consistent with the tenor of the passage and "appears to be firmly established from details of expression." Some of these details—such as "only begotten Son," "believe in the name of," "do truth," which are characteristic of the evangelist—belong to vocabulary rather than grammar. But in favour of Westcott's view there is a small point of grammar to which attention might have been called, as will be seen from the two passages to be next quoted.

One of these, according to Westcott, follows—or, according to Alford, is part of—the last words of the Baptist, thus: iii. 30—36 "He must increase, but I, must decrease. He that cometh from above is above all...For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for he giveth not the Spirit by measure...the wrath of God abideth on him." Concerning the whole of these six verses ("He that cometh...abideth on him") Westcott says that the section "contains reflections of the evangelist"; and he calls attention to the use of the title "Son" absolutely, and to other details, as well as to the tenor of the passage, as justifying his conclusion. Alford calls this view (which is not peculiar to Westcott) an "arbitrary proceeding"; but he himself abstains from any argument based on grammatical or verbal detail.

The next instance occurs in the Dialogue between our Lord and the Samaritan woman, iv. 9 (R.V.) "How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a Samaritan woman? (For Jews have no dealings with Samaritans.)"

PREFACE

Chrysostom takes the italicised words as uttered by the woman. The meaning would then be, "Jews as a rule do not condescend to have dealings with Samaritans: yet thou askest a favour from me!" But some authorities omit the italicised words. Alford and Westcott (the latter, with the caveat "if genuine") say that they are an explanatory note of the evangelist.

In favour of this last conclusion (that "Jews...Samaritans" is an evangelistic explanation) is the following grammatical argument. There are two words, ὅτι and γάρ, used by John¹ to express the conjunction "for." For the most part, in Christ's words, he uses the former; in his own comments, the latter (2066). The latter occurs not only in the Samaritan Dialogue but also in the two previously quoted passages. It is a matter of minute detail; but, so far as it goes, it confirms Westcott's view—favoured also by other grammatical considerations—that all three are evangelistic comments (1936).

The labour has been much greater, and the book longer, than I anticipated or desired. But the more fully I studied the Gospel and its most ancient MSS., versions, and commentators, the more necessary it seemed to give the evidence, if at all, at full length. Conclusions stated confidently, and with abundance of references, frequently assume an entirely different complexion when the references are verified and quoted accurately with their complete contexts.

As to the lines on which the book is constructed, they are the same as those of my Shakespearian Grammar—published nearly forty years ago but presumably still found useful as it is still in demand. Besides many points of similarity in detail, the two works have two broad assumptions in common.

¹ By "John" is meant, throughout the whole of this volume, the writer of the Fourth Gospel, of which the originator may have been (as the Gospel suggests) John the son of Zebedee, but of which the writer, the exact nature of the origination, and the exact extent to which the writer paraphrased, commented, and blended allegory with fact, are (in my opinion) at present unknown.

The Shakespearian Grammar assumed that Shakespeare wrote, with a style of his own, in English that he read and spoke. Hence North's Plutarch, Florio's Montaigne, the Elizabethan dramatists—and especially his own works compared with one another—were treated as safer guides to his meaning than Milton, Dryden, and Pope. A similar assumption is made in the Johannine Grammar. The Johannine language in general has been carefully classified with a view to the elucidation of particular passages; and the LXX, the Synoptists, the New Testament as a whole, Epictetus, and the Papyri of 50—150 A.D. have been recognised as safer guides than writers of the third century and far safer than those of the fourth. This assumption is even truer about John than about Shakespeare, to whom was given, in some measure, the very rare privilege of anticipating, or shaping, the language of posterity.

My Shakespearian Grammar also assumed that Shakespeare was a great poet. About John, I have tried to subordinate strictly to grammatical inferences my conviction that he, too, is a master of style and phrase, as well as an inspired prophet; but I have felt bound to assume that he did not at all events misuse words like the author of "the Second Epistle of St Peter," or "use one word for another" like a modern journalist describing a cricket-match or a boat-race. For example, where John is represented by our Revised Version as saying that Jesus "bowed his head" upon the cross, I argued, in "Johannine Vocabulary," that it must be rendered "laid his head to rest," and that, if so, the expression mystically implied "rest on the bosom of the Father." This rendering was based entirely on dry hard grammatical evidence shewing that the phrase had no other meaning in the Greek language. I have subsequently discovered that Origen thrice assumes this to be the meaning ("inclinasse caput super gremium Patris").

Besides these two assumptions, the Johannine Grammar recognises one strong probability—namely, that the author was an honest man (a fact that some commentators hardly seem to recognise), writing indeed some seventy years or more after the Crucifixion, but still with some knowledge of what he wrote about, and with some sense of responsibility to those for whom he wrote. His Christian readers (I assume) had read earlier Gospels, which, if authoritative, an honest writer of a new Gospel was bound to take into account. For example, the Synoptists express themselves differently and somewhat obscurely as to the "authority" possessed by Christ and imparted by Him to the disciples. The meaning of true "authority" is of great moral importance, and much discussed by Epictetus. It is assumed as probable that John's teaching on this point was intended to elucidate that of the Synoptists.

I venture to think that the Index to N.T. passages will supply something like a continuous commentary on the Fourth Gospel, and that the Index to Greek words will help the reader to compare Johannine, Synoptic, literary, and vernacular Greek. The English Index contains copious references to Origen, Nonnus, Chrysostom, Philo, and Epictetus, indicating lines of thought illustrative of the circumstances amid which the Gospel issued from its originator, was committed to writing by its author, and was interpreted by the earliest extant commentaries.

Many of the grammatical details must of course be abstruse and unsuitable for any but Greek scholars. But an attempt has been made—by translating literally many of the quotations, by comparing the Authorised with the Revised Version, and by illustrating Greek from English idiom—to make several interesting peculiarities of Johannine style intelligible to readers unacquainted with Greek literature except through translations. In order to give easy access to all such oases in the classical desert, and a bird's-eye view of some of them, the English Index has been made very copious. It contains, for example, two columns on "Ambiguity." The reader will also find references to "Allusiveness," "Emphasis," "Mysticism," "Narrowing Down," "Parenthesis," "Quotation," "Repetition," and "Self-correction." Many of these subjects will—I sincerely believe—be better understood by a student with little or no knowledge of Greek but much knowledge of literature, than by one case-hardened against intellectual interests by a long course of "the classical languages" unintelligently and unwillingly studied.

For my "Notes on preceding Paragraphs" (2664—799) I am under great obligations to Professor Blass's Grammar of New Testament Greek, even where I have been led to differ from its conclusions¹. To Dr Joseph B. Mayor, in whose works on the Epistle of St James and on Clement of Alexandria I have found rich stores of Greek learning, and to Dr W. Rhys Roberts, Professor of Greek at the University of Leeds, whose editions of Longinus, Dionysius, and Demetrius, are full of interesting and stimulative information on Greek style, I am indebted for correction of my proofs and for very useful criticisms and suggestions; nor must I omit brief but hearty thanks to the Cambridge University Press.

ADDENDUM

Blass=Second English Edition of Professor Blass's Grammar of New Testament Greek, Macmillan and Co., 1905. It did not come into my hands till this volume was in the press. But I have made copious use of it in foot-notes, and still more in the "Notes on Preceding Paragraphs" (2664—799). Dr Blass regards as interpolations some passages that I should treat as evangelistic comment; and he appears to me to attach too much importance to the testimony of Chrysostom (concerning whom Field, Chrys. Comm. Matth. vol. iii. p. 153 uses the weighty words, "Chrysostomo, Scriptori in libris citandis incuriosissimo," of which the reader will find ample proof in the following pages) and too little to that of Origen. But even where, as is frequently the case, my conclusions differ from his, I gladly acknowledge my obligation for his succinct statement of the evidence favouring his views, and for calling attention to points that had escaped my notice.

INTRODUCTION¹

§ 1. The scope of the proposed work

[1886] Obscurity of style in an inflected language is caused by ambiguity (1) in words², (2) in inflexions of words³, (3) in combinations of words⁴. The First Part of this work, Johannine Vocabulary, dealt with characteristic, or characteristically used, Johannine words, such as "believe," and "authority," with the principal Johannine synonyms, and with the relation between the Johannine and the Synoptic Vocabularies. But the words were almost exclusively verbs, nouns, adjectives, and adverbs. The article could not be represented statistically in the Vocabularies, nor could many of the pronouns and conjunctions; and only a general view could be given of the difference between the Johannine and the Synoptic use of prepositions. These words must therefore now be added to the two subjects above mentioned as remaining to be discussed—namely, inflexions, and combinations of words.

² E.g. "apprehend" (1443, 1735 e—g) may mean "understand" or "take prisoner."

³ "Inflexions" include those of all parts of speech.

[1887] In Johannine Grammar it is proposed to treat of these matters with a view to two objects. The first object is to ascertain the evangelist's meaning; the second is to compare or contrast his Gospel with those of the Synoptists. A great deal will be omitted that would be inserted in a Grammar of New Testament Greek, or in a Grammar that proposed to examine the differences between Johannine and, for example, Pauline style. On the other hand, a great deal will be inserted that would not find place in a treatise attempting simply to elucidate the obscurities of the Fourth Gospel. As in Johannine Vocabulary, so in Johannine Grammar, many remarks that may seem superfluous for explaining the special passage under discussion may be found to be justified hereafter by the use made of them in a commentary on parallel passages in the Four Gospels¹.

§ 2. The arrangement and proportions of the work

[1888] Logical arrangement, symmetry, and completeness, will be subordinated to the object of illuminating the Fourth Gospel as a whole, and passages of recognised difficulty in particular, by ready reference to groups of similar Johannine idioms. For this purpose, English alphabetical order will be adopted as regards subjects, e.g. Adjectives, Adverbs, Anacoluthon, Asyndeton etc., and Greek order, for the most part, as regards Greek words discussed separately under these several headings. Under "Adjectives"—in accordance with the promise to omit all that did not bear on Johannine style—very little will be said except as to John's use of two or three special words. For the rest, the reader will be referred to "Article"—since the repetition of the article with an adjective makes the latter emphatic. The same rule will apply to Adverbs. On the other hand, under "Anacoluthon" (i.e. want of grammatical sequence) space will be given to the discussion of several difficult passages; and "Asyndeton"—i.e. the omission of connecting particles between clauses and sentences—will receive a space proportioned to the number of instances in which it causes ambiguity.

[1889] Under "Mood," the reader will find hardly anything except a reference to other headings and especially to "Tense." The reason is that many Johannine distinctions of mood—occasionally (2511 foll.) so important as almost to amount to a distinction of word—arise from the evangelist's distinction between the present and the aorist in the same mood and may be most conveniently discussed as Presents and Aorists rather than as Imperatives, Subjunctives etc. Concerning the ambiguous πιστεύετε in xiv. 1 rendered by R.V. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me," with a marginal alternative "Believe in God," it was remarked three centuries and a half ago, "It may be read in four ways¹." There are several other passages of a similar character about which much the same thing is likely to be said till doomsday unless some conclusion can be arrived at by a grouping of similar Johannine ambiguities. The best heading for these appeared to be, not "Indicative" or "Imperative," but "Interrogative."

[1890] Under "Prepositions" will be given ἀνά, although it occurs in only one Johannine passage, ii. 6 "two or three firkins apiece," and ἀντί, although that, too, occurs only in i. 16 "grace for grace." In the latter, not much doubt as to the meaning exists; in the former, none at all. But some space has been given to both, because it happens that expressions similar to these occur in the Book of the Revelation of St John and in the works of Philo, and, if questions should arise hereafter, in dealing with the Fourfold Gospel, as to allusiveness or latent mystical meanings in either passage, these external quotations may be of use. Similarly, under

"Pronouns," in treating the Johannine "I am," an attempt will be made to ascertain, by reference to Hebrew and LXX usage (as well as to Johannine passages) when John uses it (if he ever does) to mean simply "I am the person you speak of," and when he uses it to mean (or to suggest) the divine I AM.

[1891] In those parts of the work which relate to the order and arrangement of words, something will need to be said about Philonian and Rabbinical canons of sacred expression, and about the repetitions so frequent in Hebrew poetry and in Jewish liturgy. For these may explain some curious twofold and threefold repetitions of the same statement, and some (logically speaking) superfluous combinations of affirmation and negation. But even when the most is made of these, much in the Johannine style will remain inexplicable, perhaps, except by particular influences and circumstances. The book seems to combine the occasional diffuseness of an old man with the general and pervasive subtlety of a master of words in the prime of intellect. It has curious sevenfold arrangements of events and sayings that strike a modern reader as highly artificial, and likely to have required much forethought and elaboration. Yet sometimes it halts, adds after-thoughts, breaks into parentheses, seems to make inexact statements and to correct them, and it certainly mixes words of the Lord and of other speakers with remarks of the evangelist in such a way that the most careful commentators are tasked to disentangle them.

[1892] Some of the phenomena above mentioned resemble phenomena that we find in the Apocalypse. Others indicate a subtle use of Greek grammatical forms quite unlike anything in that book. Yet the Gospel has not two styles. Indeed, as has been pointed out in the Preface, it has such a sameness of style that the words of the Baptist or of Christ—although distinguishable on close examination—appear to have been confused by some able critics with words of the evangelist. There may, however, have been one originator who did not write, and one writer, who did not originate. In other words, there may have been, in effect, two authors, of whom the second and later—while impressing his own character on the style of the whole—may have preserved here and there with special fidelity (sometimes at the cost of clearness, 1927 c) the traditions of the first, in whose name he wrote nominally as an amanuensis but actually as an expounder and interpreter. These considerations will come before us (2427—35) in discussing the remarkable textual variations in the passage about “the disciple that beareth witness of these things,” but they ought to be always so far present that our minds may be kept open to all evidence bearing on the question of authorship.

[1893] The Fourth Gospel is admitted by all Greek scholars to be, in parts, extraordinarily obscure. No honest writer of history is obscure, as a rule, except through carelessness or ignorance—ignorance, it may be, of the art of writing, or of the subject he is writing about, or of the persons he is addressing, or of the words he is using, but, in any case, ignorance of something. But an honest writer of poetry or prophecy may be consciously obscure because a message, so to speak, has come into his mind in a certain form, and he feels this likely to prove the best form—ultimately, when his readers have thought about it. Instances will come before us, for example, where ὅτι may mean “that” or “because,” and where καθώς may look back to what precedes or forward to what follows: and as to these we may say that the writer may have preferred to let the reader think out the meaning or the connexion for himself. But what are we to say to x. 38 “that ye may come to know definitely (γινώτε) and that ye may continue in the ever growing knowledge (γινώσκητε) that the Father is in me”? Here the difference between the aorist and the present subjunctive is so great as to amount almost to the difference between two distinct words:

but is it like a poet or a prophet to write after this fashion? We must frankly admit that such language—of which there are many instances (2524)—would appear highly artificial in any Greek writer unless there were special reasons for it, as, for example, a desire to protest tacitly against some popular and erroneous notions about “knowing” and “knowledge.” A Grammar is not the place to discuss the question whether such notions existed and whether the evangelist would be likely to protest against them; but it may be of use here to prepare the reader for a multitude of such minute grammatical distinctions. In an ordinary book, we should stigmatize them as pedantry; in the Fourth Gospel, they must be explained (we may feel sure) by very different reasons. The business of the Grammar will be to collect and classify these and other peculiarities so as to lead the way to an explanation that lies beyond the limits of a grammarian.

FORMS AND COMBINATIONS OF WORDS

General warning as to use of Index

[1894*] N.B. For all matter affecting Adjectives, Adverbs, Anacoluthon etc., and not occurring under these several headings, the reader is referred to the Index. For example, under the heading "Adjectives" in the following paragraphs nothing will be found about their frequent use with the reduplicated article for emphasis, nor about their occasional use with the ellipsis of a noun. But these deficiencies will be supplied under the heading "Adjectives" in the Index at the end of the book, where the reader will find references to "Article," to "Ellipsis," and to passages dealing with emphasis. Also, as regards some special adjectives, discussed at considerable length, but not here (e.g. ἴδιος, πολὺς, προβατική), the reader will be referred to the paragraphs dealing with them by the two Indices of Greek words, where they will be found in their alphabetical order. The Index to the "Vocabulary" will give the statistics of the words; the Index to the "Grammar," their grammatical use.

ADJECTIVES

(i). Used predicatively

[1894] The adjective is used predicatively in iv. 18 τοῦτο ἀληθὲς εἶρηκας, which is quite different from τοῦτο ἀληθῶς εἶρηκας. The latter might have meant (1) "Truly, i.e. in truth, thou hast said this," or (2) "Thou hast said this truly, i.e. with truth." But the former means "This, at all events, among all that thou hast said, is true"—implying that hitherto the woman has talked in a reckless and trifling way¹.

(ii) Special

(a) Μόνος

[1895] Μόνος occurs as follows in v. 44 (W.H.) "How can ye believe, receiving glory from one another:—and the glory that comes from the only [God] (τὴν δόξαν τὴν παρὰ τοῦ μόνου [θεοῦ]) ye seek not!" Θεοῦ is here omitted not only by B but also by a ("gloriam ab unico non quaeritis") and b ("honorem eius qui est solus")². If the omission occurred in B alone, it might be explained as an omission—sometimes occurring in that excellent ms.—in a group of similar letters³. But it occurs also in Origen⁴, which demonstrates that the reading was much earlier than the draughting of B. Moreover, the omission, being unusual, would suggest a lacuna, which scribes would be tempted to fill up, conforming the passage to "the only true God" later on, and to general usage⁵. The Greek "only" is used (as in Shakespeare, "the only man of Italy⁶") to mean "unique"—more than merely "first." In N.T. "only" is connected with ascriptions of glory⁷. Horace speaks of Jupiter as having "no like or second" although Pallas occupies "the place next in honour⁸." Aristotle says that the heaven is "one and alone and perfect⁹." But

[1894 b] In xiii. 34 ἐντολὴν καινὴν δίδωμι ὑμῖν ἵνα ἀγαπᾶτε ἀλλήλους—καθὼς ἠγάπησα ὑμᾶς, ἵνα καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀγαπᾶτε ἀλλήλους, the adj. "new" is not predicative. The meaning is, "I give you a new commandment": and it is "new" because it enjoins a new kind of "love," not revealed through the Prophets, but for the first time through the Son and through His love of men. Comp. 1 Jn ii. 7—8 "Not a new commandment do I write to you.....on the other hand (πάλιν) a new commandment do I write to you—which [paradox] (ὅ) is true in him and in you," i.e. it is "old" yet made "new" in Christ and in His newborn disciples.

³ [1895 b] See 2650: ΘΥ might be omitted coming between the ΟΥ of μόνου and that of Οὐ.

⁴ Orig. Huet i. 392, and see 2664. ⁵ Jn xvii. 3, Rom. xvi. 27, 1 Tim. i. 17.

⁹ De Cael. i. 9. 8.

no passage is alleged in the Thesaurus where Greeks call God ὁ μόνος: and such a use, if it existed, must have been rare among the Jews¹. More to the point is the saying of Philo that the words "It is not good for man to be alone" are uttered because "It is good that the Alone should be alone²," meaning the Only God. On the whole, it seems fairly probable that, when speaking about "glory" and its source, the evangelist used ὁ Μόνος—with allusion to the connexion of the word with "glory" both in Hebrew and Greek—to mean briefly "He that is alone glorious" i.e. "He from whom alone all glory comes."

(β) Πρῶτος

[1896] Πρῶτος is followed by a genitive, and is said by some to mean "first in regard of," in (α) i. 15 (R.V.) "He that cometh after me is become before me (ἔμπροσθέν μου); for he was before me (ὅτι πρῶτός μου ἦν)" and i. 30 (R.V.) "After me cometh a man which is become before me; for he was before me" (R.V. marg. in both verses "first in regard of me"). It is rendered by the conjunction "before," supplying a verb, in (β) xv. 18 (R.V.) "If the world hateth you, ye know that it hath hated me before [it hated] you (πρῶτον ὑμῶν)."

[1897] To deal first with (α). Stephen's Thesaurus quotes from Aelian³ "those who have investigated these things before me (οἱ πρῶτοί μου ταῦτα ἀνιχνεύσαντες)." But πρῶτός τινος ἐποίησά τι is different from πρῶτός τινος ἦν. More to the point is πρῶτος ὢν in the Scholiast's Preface to the Phoenissae of Euripides quoted in the Thesaurus thus: "Eteocles, as though he were first [in regard] of his brother (ἄτε πρῶτος ὢν τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ)," given by Dindorf (presumably correcting the text) as τῶν ἀδελφῶν. Another Scholiast explains (Hecuba 458) "firstborn palm (πρωτόγονός τε φοῖνιξ)" by saying "created first [in regard] of the bay-tree (πρῶτον γεννηθέντα τῆς δάφνης)." Origen seems to take πρῶτός μου as parallel to, and included in, *πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως*¹, i.e. "firstborn [brother] of all creation," so that πρωτός μου would mean "firstborn [brother] of me," i.e. "my eldest brother." His words are: "The Baptist teaches [us] how Jesus 'is become before him [by] being first [in regard] of him (ὡν πρῶτος αὐτοῦ)' since He was the firstborn (πρωτότοκος) of every creature²"; and the same view is suggested by παρά (implying the metaphor of a household) in the following words, "I understand that He was first[born in respect] of me and more honourable in the house of the Father (παρὰ τῷ Πατρὶ)."³ Chrysostom, without using the word "firstborn," argues that the words must refer to precedence *in point of time*³—not in point of rank, rank having already been expressed (as he says) by the words "become before me."

[1898] According to Luke, the Baptist was born before Jesus. If that was recognised as a historical fact by the earliest readers of the Fourth Gospel, "first in regard of me" could not appear to them to mean "born before me [on earth]." But some have supposed it to mean "begotten before me in the beginning." If so, why did the Baptist omit "in the beginning," which is essential, and insert "before me," which, had "in the beginning" been inserted, would not have been essential? Many will feel great difficulty in believing that John the Baptist, at this stage in his testimony to Jesus (if indeed in any stage) proclaimed to the Jews (1) the pre-existence of Jesus, as being the Messiah—and proclaimed Him, too, as pre-existent, not "from eternity" nor "from the beginning," but (2) relatively to himself. The former doctrine, the eternal pre-existence of the Messiah, may possibly have been entertained by some Jews in the Baptist's time: but, even if it was, it is difficult to believe that the Baptist gave it such prominence and in such a shape.

These passages shew that πρωτότοκος, suggesting supremacy among brethren, might be replaced by πρωτεύων, or πρῶτος, if one wished to say "my firstborn [brother]," because "my firstborn" would naturally be taken to mean "my firstborn [son]." The phrase "my elder [brother]," πρεσβύτερός μου, would convey none of the old associations of the blessing and supremacy belonging to the Firstborn.

[1899] The Synoptists¹, instead of "first in regard of me," have "mightier than I." This suggests that some word capable of meaning "firstborn" might also be interpreted as "superior to," "stronger than²." The Hebrew Rab, the root of "Rabbi," "Teacher," is capable of the two meanings (1897 b). The Baptist may have said, in effect, "Jesus of Nazareth numbers Himself among my disciples, but He was from the first my Teacher, or Rab." Now whenever a Jewish Teacher spoke about the divinely ordained relations between the elder and the younger, so prominent in Hebrew history, he might use the word Rab (420) to mean "firstborn," alluding to the supremacy of Jacob preordained in the words "the elder shall serve the younger³." But Rab is also used for "mighty" in Messianic passages such as "mighty to save" and "a portion with the *mighty*⁴." John may have taken the word in the former sense, the Synoptists in the latter.

[1900] Apart from the question—which cannot be answered with certainty—as to the original word used by the Baptist, we may be sure that this rare expression πρῶτός μου means something more than μείζων μου. Probably the writer had in view the Johannine traditions "I am the First and the Last⁵." As one can speak of "my God," "my Rock," "my Light," so one might speak of "my First," having in view the Firstborn of God, the Beginning. The evangelist, without supposing that the Baptist consciously intended hereby to set forth to the world the eternal pre-existence of Christ as the Logos, might very well represent him as unconsciously including in his language (after the manner of all the Prophets and the Psalmists) more than he included in his thought. According to this view, the Baptist meant "He was from the cradle my superior, my elder brother"; but he said words that might be interpreted as meaning

[1901] We come now to the use of πρῶτον with the genitive in (b), xv. 18 "If the world hateth you, ye know that it hath hated me (R.V.) before [it hated] you." No precedent is alleged from Greek literature for such a rendering of the italicised words. But πρῶτον rendered as above will make sense here: "It hath hated me, your First, i.e. your Chief." Something like this ("priorem vobis") is the rendering of the Vulgate and of one of the oldest Latin mss.; and others, though they omit "you," take πρῶτον as an adjective ("priorem¹"). Thus rendered—if "first" be taken as suggesting "firstborn brother"—the words prepare the disciples for the new sphere of life and thought that was to follow the Resurrection, wherein Christ was to become "the firstborn of the dead, the ruler of the kings of the earth²." He was not to be alone. He was to be "the firstborn among many brethren³." The whole Church was to be "the Church of the firstborn⁴," and He Himself was to be the First of the firstborn, the "first-fruits of them that had fallen asleep⁵." The Johannine context leads the disciples to regard themselves as branches in the Vine, "friends" (no longer "slaves") of the Son—"friends" that must henceforth partake in His life and in His secret counsels⁶. Being now destined to become younger brothers of the Firstborn, they must expect to share the Elder Brother's sufferings: "If the world now hateth you, adopted brethren of the Family of God, remember that it hath hated *me—the First[born] of you [all]*⁷." Possibly the evangelist wishes not so much to say this as to

The Syriac (Burk.) has "And he, Andrew, saw Simon Kepha and saith to him...", SS "And he, Andrew, saw Simon his brother on that day." It is generally supposed (1720 z) that the meaning is, "Andrew first found his own brother [before Andrew's companion John the son of Zebedee found his own brother James the son of Zebedee]." But there may be also some allusion to ancient traditions in which πρῶτον Σίμωνα, or (as in Mt. x. 2) πρῶτος Σίμων, occurred at the head of a list of the Apostles. If πρῶτος were read above, it would lay rather more stress on the fact that Andrew was the first Christian disciple that made a convert.

ADVERBS

(i) Intensive

[1902] The adverbs λίαν, περισσῶς etc. are rarely used by John, who differs greatly in this respect from Mark and Matthew, and slightly from Luke¹. When John wishes to emphasize an adverb or adverbial phrase he gives it an unusual place, e.g. at the beginning of the sentence, xvi. 31 Ἄρτι πιστεύετε, xii. 27 Νῦν ἡ ψυχὴ μου τετάρακται, xvi. 30 ἐν τούτῳ πιστεύομεν, vii. 14 ἤδη δὲ τῆς ἐ. μεσοῦσης, vii. 37 ἐν δὲ τῇ ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ..., xiii. 1 πρὸ δὲ τῆς ἐορτῆς τ. πάσχα, xvi. 22 πάλιν δὲ ὄψομαι ὑμᾶς². See 2636 c and 2668. On ἀμήν ἀμήν see 2611 a.

(ii) Special

(a) Ἄνωθεν

[1903] The most important adverb in the Fourth Gospel is ἄνωθεν, as used in iii. 3—7 (R.V. marg.) "Except a man be born from above (ἄνωθεν) he cannot see the kingdom of God....Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born from above." Nicodemus takes this as meaning "born a second time"; and he replies, "Can a man enter a second time into his mother's womb and be born?" Chrysostom says that our Lord here speaks obscurely in order to lead Nicodemus on to further question; and he adds, "Ἄνωθεν here means, some say 'from the heaven,' others 'from the beginning'³." The following facts indicate that our Lord is intended by the evangelist to mean "from heaven," and that Nicodemus is intended to be regarded as misunderstanding Him, or affecting to misunderstand Him, as though He meant "a second time."

² [1902 δ] But see 1914 as to the position of εὐθύς, and comp. xi. 29 ἡγέρθη ταχύ with xi. 31 ταχέως ἀνέστη, where ταχέως (2554 δ) before its verb appears to be more emphatic than ταχύ on which the voice does not rest. An adverb may also be emphasized by coming at the end of a sentence.

[1904] ἄνωθεν occurs in N.T. thirteen times. Apart from the passage under consideration, it never means "from the beginning" except thrice, and then it is joined to "again" or "knowing," or "ascertaining¹." The Thesaurus shews that (1) it often means "from the beginning" in connexion with the tracing of a genealogy, describing one's ancestry or early life, or a friendship of long date, relating ancient history, or speaking of ancient times, or repeating a story over again from the beginning; and Suicer shews that ἄνωθεν is thus used in connexion with πάλιν, and with ἐξ ἀρχῆς. On the other hand (2) it means "from above" in a spiritual sense in Jn iii. 31 "he that cometh from above," xix. 11 "given to thee from above." In the Epistle of St James, it refers once to "every perfect gift" as being "from above, coming down from the Father of lights...By his will (βουληθεῖς) he brought us forth (ἀπεκύησεν) by the word of truth"—thus connecting "from above" with spiritual generation: in two other passages St James connects it with "the wisdom that is from above²." In the LXX, it always has a local meaning, except once (where it is joined with πάλιν) in the Wisdom of Solomon³.

[1905] Apart from LXX and N.T. usage, the rendering "from above" in the Dialogue with Nicodemus is also favoured by the probability that the intention is to fix the attention not on being born "over again"—which might be a change for the worse—but upon being born into a higher life. This latter thought is approximated to by Philo, in various phrases including ἄνωθεν, when he speaks of "him that is inspired from above" (in connexion with those who avoid the life of the flesh and live to God) and of those who "philosophize, so to speak, *from above*⁴." Commenting, also, on the calling up of Moses to Mount Sinai, he describes it as "a second birth better than the first," where there is "no mother, but only a father, the Father of all¹."

[1906] The use of "from above" to describe a heavenly ideal is common in Jewish literature. St Paul speaks of "Jerusalem that is above" as being free, in contrast with "the present Jerusalem," which is in bondage². The Apocalypse speaks of "the new Jerusalem," but adds "coming down from heaven"³. Somewhat similarly St Paul says that the first man is of the earth, earthy, "the second man is from heaven"⁴. In the one case "new," and in the other "second," might be used to paraphrase the expression "from heaven"; and similarly "generate anew" might be a substituted paraphrase for "generate from heaven." But to say that a man on earth must be "born from above" implies that he must also be "born anew," so that the former has the advantage of being ampler. The former is also more in accordance with Johannine doctrine, as well as with Johannine use of ἄνωθεν. Again, all the Synoptists say that Jesus asked the Jews whether "the baptism of John" was "from heaven or from men"⁵; and "from heaven" in such a context might naturally be expressed by the Aramaic "from above." Moreover, the very beginning of the Bible describes, shortly after the motion of the Spirit on the waters, a separation between "the waters and the waters," or, as the Jerusalem Targum has it, "the waters above and the waters below."

[1907] Thus, from several points of view, if a Rabbi came to consult Jesus about baptism, and if our Lord wished to insist on the need of a spiritual, and not a mere external, regeneration, we might expect that the phrase "from above" would occur in His mention of the operation of the Spirit. If Christ had said "new" or "anew," this could not have been misunderstood; for the Aramaic "new," like the Greek καὶνός, cannot be confused with "above." Moreover if the evangelist had desired to represent in Greek the mere thought of "regeneration" he might have used ἀναγεννᾶν. But "regenerate"—unless qualified as it is in St Peter's

Epistle¹—does not necessarily convey the notion of a birth unto righteousness. Nicodemus was familiar with the doctrine of “new birth” applied to baptized proselytes, and he knew that very often it did not mean much². But this doctrine of Jesus about “birth from above,” he dimly felt, meant a great deal more, some fundamental change—what he would call a “miraculous” change. He therefore asks what the miracle is to be: “It cannot be that a man is to be literally born a second time³?”

[1908] In deciding this question we have to consider, not only what our Lord may have said, but also how the author of the Fourth Gospel,—in view of the misunderstandings of what He had said as

² [1907 b] On our Lord’s opinion of some proselytes, see Mt. xxiii. 15 “twofold a child of hell.”

[1907 d] Justin Martyr Tryph. 63 ἀνωθεν καὶ διὰ γαστρὸς ἀνθρωπείας (describing the birth of Christ) appears to mean [“by the action of the Spirit] from above and through a mortal womb” (although the Psalm (cx. 3) from which Justin has quoted refers to birth (LXX) “before the morning star”). Comp. Epiphanius (Haer. li. ch. 6, vol. i. 428) about Mark as “nowhere saying [that] the birth [was] from above (οὐδαμοῦ ἀνωθεν λέγων τὴν γέννησιν)” and (ib.) τῆς ἀνωθεν καταγωγῆς θεοῦ λόγου. So Simon Magus (Hippol., ed. Duncker, vi. 18) speaks of the generating principle as “from above.” In Artemid. Oneirocr. i. 13, γεννᾶσθαι ἀνωθεν undoubtedly means “to be born again,” but there the meaning is prepared for in a peculiar way by the context: “If a man dreams that he is being born.....this indicates that he will have a son in every respect like himself: for thus he might seem to be born over again (οὕτω γὰρ [ἂν] ἀνωθεν αὐτὸς δόξειε γεννᾶσθαι).” And there it should be noted that the meaning is not “to be born into a better life,” but “to be born over again in every respect like what one was before.”

it had been recorded by the Synoptists—might think it right to recast the saying. Christ's doctrine, "Become ye as one of these little ones," might be in danger of being misunderstood literally (somewhat after the manner of Nicodemus) as encouraging childishness rather than childlikeness (1 Cor. xiv. 20). It is in accordance with the Johannine method that John should illustrate this danger by exhibiting a great Rabbi as actually misunderstanding the doctrine at its first utterance. It is also in accordance with his method of "narrowing down" (2290) that he should first introduce a general term "from above" including as St James says "every perfect gift" that comes from heaven—and then define it as a spiritual influence. The saying of Christ, that a proselyte,—who was compared by the Jews to a new-born child,—might be made a "child of hell," is of itself sufficient to explain why it might be necessary to emphasize the truth that regeneration must be "from above." See 2573.

(β) Ἀπτι see Νῆν (1915 (i) foll.)

(γ) Ἐγγύς

[1909] This adverb is used (1718) more frequently by John than by the Synoptists all together. In Jn it never describes the nearness of a person except in vi. 19, "they behold Jesus walking on [the edge of?] the sea and becoming near the boat (ἐγγύς τοῦ πλοίου γινόμενον)." Ἐγγίζω, "draw near," is frequent in O.T. and N.T., and the Synoptists sometimes (Luke most frequently) apply it to Christ, but John never uses it. Under "Prepositions" (2340—6) reasons will be given for thinking that John regards the Lord as "on the sea shore," and not as advancing over the sea to the boat. If so, he may use γινόμενον ἐγγύς as we speak of the coast "coming into view" when we ourselves "come" within sight of it. The words and their context are susceptible of a spiritual interpretation. At first the disciples, in terror and unbelief, beheld (1598) Jesus "becoming near." Then (vi. 21) "they willed to receive him"; and "straightway the boat was on the land." That is to say, like the Ephesians, "they that had been far off were made to be near¹."

(δ) Ἐθέως and εὔθως

[1910] Mark (1693) never uses ἐθέως, but he uses εὔθως abundantly. Matthew uses both pretty often. Luke uses ἐθέως and παραχρῆμα pretty often, but εὔθως only once. John uses ἐθέως thrice, and εὐθύς thrice. Whenever Matthew uses εὐθύς (7), it is found in the parallel Mark. The question arises whether John distinguishes between the two words, or whether he uses now one, now another, as Matthew appears to do, because he uses now one, and now another, source of evangelic tradition.

[1911] As to εὐθύς "straightway," Phrynichus blames "many" who used εὐθύ ("straight away") instead of it. Hesychius says about it simply Εὐθύς, ἀντίον, which indicates that he took it to mean "straight opposite [to]," "coming face to face with." He also says, Εὐθύς, ὀρθόν, ἀπλοῦν, ἐγγύς, παραχρῆμα, εἰς εὐθείαν. Bonitz's Index shews that Aristotle uses εὐθύς of place, before ὑπό, πρὸς, μετά to mean "immediately under," etc. and also to mean "to take the first instance that presents itself," i.e. "for example," which it also means in Epictet. i. 19. 2 (where Schweigh. refers to many other passages)¹. In LXX, as a rendering of Hebrew, εὐθύς occurs only in Gen. xv. 4 καὶ εὐθύς φωνῇ Κυρίου ἐγένετο πρὸς αὐτόν, xxiv. 45 εὐθύς Πρεβέκκα ἐξεπορεύετο, xxxviii. 29 καὶ εὐθύς ἐξῆλθεν ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ, where the Hebrew has "behold!" Similarly, parallel to Mk xiv. 43 "and straightway...there cometh up," Matthew and Luke have "behold!" A Scholiast on Thucydides, who describes the Plataeans as "killing their prisoners straightway," says that here εὐθύς does not mean immediately but offhand and without reflection², which is probably implied. Very likely Mark's εὐθύς may be a loose rendering of an original Semitic "behold"³. But even without any such hypothesis the above-mentioned variety of meanings suffices to explain why Luke almost always avoids the word.

[1912] Mark's non-use of εὐθέως does not require explanation in view of the fact that it is never used by Aeschylus and (though thrice by Sophocles⁴) only once by Euripides in a fragment⁵, whereas both writers use εὐθύς frequently. In the Indices of Epictetus and Lucian, εὐθύς is found, but not εὐθέως, and Bonitz's Index to Aristotle shews a very great preponderance of the former. The LXX Concordance

² [1911 a] Steph. on Thuc. ii. 5 οἱ δὲ Πλαταιῆς.....ἀπέκτειναν τοὺς ἀνδρας εὐθύς, "Ilic enim schol. ait εὐθύς non esse παραχρῆμα, sed ἐξευθείας et ἀσκόπως."

³ [1911 b] It has been shewn (352—3) that "behold" in Mt.-Lk. freq. corresponds to some verb of "coming to" in Mk. This may be illustrated by Hesych. εὐθύς, ἀντίον i.e. "coming to meet."

gives εὐθέως as only once representing a Hebrew word. It occurs almost exclusively in Maccabees (especially book II). The insertion of such a word (whether in Hebrew or in Greek) might depend on the author's taste. The Jerusalem Targum has (Gen. i. 3) "And immediately there was light," and in Susannah (29) LXX and Theodotion severally insert εὐθέως and omit it. Aquila uses the word (Micah ii. 7) to mean "straightforwardly," "righteously."

[1913] In N.T., apart from the Gospels, εὐθέως is used frequently in the Acts, and occasionally elsewhere¹. Εὐθύς occurs nowhere except in Acts x. 16 "Now this was done thrice and straightway (εὐθύς) the vessel was taken up to the heaven." This occurs in a Petrine passage describing the vision that resulted in the conversion of Cornelius. But when Luke rewrites this in Peter's speech, he alters the expression (Acts xi. 10) "Now this was done thrice and everything was caught up again to the heaven²." This indicates (1) that εὐθύς might be expected in a Petrine Gospel such as Mark's is generally believed to be, (2) that Luke, although occasionally retaining it as part of an old document, might be expected to alter it in re-editing or re-writing.

[1914] Coming to Johannine usage we find (a) εὐθέως in the Cure at the Pool of Bethsaida, the Walking on the Water, and the Denial of Peter³. Only as to the last of these ("immediately the cock crew") does the word occur in the parallel Synoptic narrative—where Mark has εὐθύς but many authorities omit it, Matthew has εὐθύς but many authorities read εὐθέως, Luke has παραχρῆμα⁴. (b) Εὐθύς occurs in Jn xiii. 30—2, "Having taken the sop, therefore, he [Judas] went out straightway (εἰξήλθεν εὐθύς). Now it was night. When, therefore, he went out, Jesus saith, (lit.) Now was the Son of man glorified and God was glorified in him. And God will glorify him in himself and will straightway glorify (εὐθὺς δοξάσει) him," xix. 34 "One of the soldiers pierced his side with a spear and there came out straightway (ἐξῆλθεν εὐθὺς) blood and water.” Comparing (a) and (b) we must bear in mind that the Cure at the Pool has many points of resemblance with the Cure of the Paralytic where Mark and Luke describe the act as immediate, and that the Walking on the Water is recorded by Mark and Matthew—so that we may say generally that the instances in (a) have some connexion with Synoptic narrative while those in (b) have not. In xiii. 30 the emphasis rests on εὐθὺς, which comes at the end of the sentence (“rushed forth straightway”). In xix. 34 the voice passes on from εὐθὺς to αἷμα καὶ ὕδωρ, but the adverb indicates that the “fountain” against “sin and uncleanness” (Zech. xiii. 1) was foreordained and ready to gush forth. Having regard to the rarity of the adverb we seem justified in thinking that, in xiii. 30—2, John deliberately uses it twice in one and the same passage concerning the “immediate” departure of Judas and the “immediate” advent of “glory,” the former being subordinate to the latter.

[1915] The conclusion is, that εὐθὺς and εὐθέως are used in N.T., not indiscriminately but with reference to meaning, or because they occur in documents of this or that style. The only instance of εὐθὺς in Luke is in the passage about the house without foundation (vi. 49) “against which the river burst and straightway it fell in a heap (εὐθὺς συνέπεσε),” where Matthew (vii. 27) differs. It is quite intelligible that Luke might be willing to apply to the fall of a house an adverb that he might think unfit to apply to the actions of Christ.

(ε) Νῦν and ἄρτι

[1915 (i)] In 1719, νῦν was shewn to mean “at the present time” (as distinct from ἄρτι “at this moment”) and to imply, in Jn, a contrast for the most part between the present and the past. This is its general use in the Epistles, especially in contrasting the past darkness with the present light (“ye were once darkness but now are ye light in the Lord¹”). But the interpretation of καὶ νῦν in xi. 22 (1719) is complicated by the use of the phrase in LXX, where “and now” is often connected with the thought “And now in this crisis, or, at this stage, or, in these difficulties, or, in conclusion, what is to be done?" e.g. "And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require from thee?" "And now, Lord, what wait I for? My hope is in thee?" So Peter, after reproaching the Jews for crucifying Christ, says, "And now, brethren, I know that in ignorance ye did it," where the underlying thought appears to be, "And now, what is to be done? Acknowledge your past ignorance²."

[1915 (ii)] In 2 Thess. ii. 5—6, the words "Remember ye not that while I was still with you I used to say these things to you," come after a prediction about "the man of lawlessness" and before the words "And now ye know that which hindereth (καὶ νῦν τὸ κατέχον οἴδατε)," where Lightfoot doubtfully inclines to the logical meaning ("Well, then, ye know") and says "this usage is particularly noticeable with οἶδα following." But he suggests alternatively "and as to the present time ye know what it is that restraineth"—a transposition like that in Jn iv. 18 "for thou hast had five husbands, and he whom thou now hast (καὶ νῦν ὃν ἔχεις) *is not thy husband*³."

[1915 (iii)] These facts indicate that καὶ νῦν, especially in an author like John, prone to transposition and asyndeton, will depend, for its meaning, on its context. As in 2 Thess. ii. 5, there is a reference to past teaching in 1 Jn ii. 18, παιδιά, ἐσχάτῃ ᾧρα ἐστίν, καὶ καθὼς ἠκούσατε ὅτι Ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται, καὶ νῦν ἀντίχριστοι πολλοὶ γεγόνασιν, the meaning is "even as ye heard the prediction in past time, even so (καὶ) at the present time (νῦν) it is fulfilled¹." There is also some reference to past time in 1 Jn ii. 27—8, but the passage comes at the end of a section enjoining "[steadfast] abiding," and καὶ νῦν appears to be logically or rhetorically (not temporally) used, "But as (ὥς) his anointing teacheth you...and even as (καὶ καθὼς) it taught you, abide in it. And now [in conclusion, I repeat] abide in it²."

[1915 (iv)] There is again a reference to past teaching in 1 Jn iv. 3, "and this is the [spirit] of antichrist, [as to] which ye have heard that 'it cometh,' and now (καὶ νῦν) in the world it is already (ἤδη)³." Without any addition, καὶ νῦν might have meant "and [accordingly] at the present time [in accordance with past prediction]": but by adding ἤδη, the writer shews that he intends the meaning to be "before expectation." In 2 Jn 5 there is reference to past teaching, "I have found some of thy children walking in the truth, even as we received commandment from the Father, and now (καὶ νῦν) I ask thee...that we love one another," where the temporal and the logical meaning seem combined, but the latter predominates. These are all the instances of καὶ νῦν in the Johanne Epistles. Νῦν, apart from καί, occurs in them only once, 1 Jn iii. 2 "beloved, now are we children of God." This follows the mention of what the Father's love has done for us, and precedes the mention of what we shall become; and νῦν suggests the thought of the isthmus between the past and the future.

¹ [1915 (iii) α] But probably there is a double force in καὶ so that it also suggests "even now is antichrist here."

[1915 (v)] Returning to xi. 22 καὶ νῦν οἶδα ὅτι ὅσα ἂν αἰτήσῃ... we find that many mss. and versions insert ἀλλά before καὶ so as to make the meaning (A.V.) "But...even now..." R.V. has "And even now," apparently taking καὶ νῦν as "even now" and supplying "and" for the sake of English connexion. This indicates a tendency to take the phrase according to classical Greek idiom. But, having regard to the fact that καὶ νῦν or καὶ νῦν ἰδοῦ, with οἶδα, occurs in N.T. elsewhere Hebraically (1915 (i) c) or with a suggestion of Hebraic meaning, and that καὶ νῦν in the Johannine Epistles is frequent and sometimes Hebraic, we are justified in preferring a Hebraic meaning here, like that of the Psalmist ("And now Lord, for what do I wait?"). In that case the meaning will be: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. [But it pleased thee to be absent although we sent unto thee.] And now [Lord, what am I to say? My hope is still in thee.] I know that whatsoever thou shalt ask God, God will give it to thee." This is confirmed by two other passages where καὶ νῦν seems to introduce a last word, before the speaker passes from one subject to another: xiv. 29—30 "And now I have said [it] to you before it come to pass...No longer shall I speak much with you," xvii. 4—5 "I have glorified thee on the earth having perfected the work...and now glorify thou me."

[1915 (vi)] *Ἀρτι is distinguished from νῦν as "this moment" is distinguished from "this present time¹." *Ἀρτι is practically (485 b) not a LXX word, and ἀπ' ἄρτι does not occur in LXX at all. "The present [dispensation]," τὸ νῦν, might be said to date "from the moment (ἀπ' ἄρτι)" when the revelation of the Father had been consummated through the Son², and Jesus says to the disciples, "From this moment ye know him (the Father)." Ἐως ἄρτι is used in v. 17 ("My Father worketh (A.V.) hitherto") of that which has been going on "up to the present moment" and is still continuing, as also in 1 Jn ii. 9 ("is in the darkness up to this very moment¹). In the following, a distinction (though a slight one) is drawn between ἄρτι and νῦν, xiii. 33—7, “And as I said to the Jews ‘Where I go ye cannot come,’ to you also I say [it]—for the moment (καὶ ὑμῖν λέγω ἄρτι).” Then, in answer to Peter’s question, “Whither goest thou?” Jesus replies “Where I go, thou canst not follow me at the present time (νῦν), but shalt follow later (ὕστερον).” The saying is only “for the moment,” but He gradually reveals to the disciples that the absence will be more than momentary extending through “the present time.” Peter, in his second question, is not content with the promise that he shall follow “later,” nor even “at the present time (νῦν).” “Why,” he asks, “can I not follow thee at this moment (ἄρτι)?”²

(ζ) Οὔτω

[1916] “Thus” in iv. 6 (R.V.) “Jesus...being wearied (κεκοπιακώς)...sat thus (οὕτως) by the well,” is scarcely intelligible. But R.V. marg. says “or, as he was.” In classical Greek, οὕτως is often used of something that happens before circumstances have time to alter, e.g. of a speaker “departing thus,” i.e. without another word, of an assailant “departing thus,” i.e. without suffering in return. Similar to these is “I cannot answer thus,” i.e. offhand. So here the meaning is, “he sat down just as he was, being thoroughly tired out.” Probably Chrysostom is right in suggesting that the adverb calls attention to the “sitting” as being in some sense casual, although it was divinely foreordained to bring about the conversion of the Samaritans. It also suggests, as he says, the indifference of the true King to the external symbols of royalty³. Almost all the

In v. 17 the meaning appears to be, “My Father worketh [on the sabbath from the beginning] until this moment, and I accordingly work [such acts as my Father prescribes on the sabbath].”

² [1915 (vi) ε] Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 12 “For we see for the moment (ἄρτι) through a mirror.” When Jn uses νῦν thus, he adds μέν in xvi. 22 “and ye now indeed (νῦν μέν) have sorrow...but I will see you again and your joy none shall take from you.”

[1915 (vi) δ] Νῦν, in Mk xiii. 19, Mt. xxiv. 21 ἕως τοῦ νῦν, Mk xv. 32, Mt. xxvii. 42, καταβάτω νῦν ἀπὸ τ. σταυροῦ, and also in Mt. xxvi. 65, xxvii. 43 has almost the meaning of ἄρτι, “at this moment.” But in Mk x. 30 νῦν ἐν τ. καιρῷ τοῦτῳ it means “at the present time.” These are all the instances in Mk-Mt. In Lk. (1719) it is much more frequent.

Latin mss. omit the adverb, and SS has "sat [so] that he might rest himself," perhaps confusing κοπιάω and κοπάζω.

[1917] This passage prepares us for the true reading, and rendering, in xiii. 25 (R.V.) "He [the beloved disciple] leaning back, as he was (οὕτως), on Jesus' breast, saith unto him, 'Lord, who is it?'" where many authorities omit οὕτως. The meaning probably is, that the beloved disciple, instead of turning round to speak to Jesus (which would have attracted attention) merely "leaned back a little, keeping the same attitude." But further, if any reader asked, "How could any of the disciples venture to ask such a question?" this adverb suggested an answer, "He did it, at Peter's suggestion, and being so close to the Lord, 'just as he was,' i.e. *unpremeditatedly*¹."

(η) Παρησία

[1917 (i)] Παρησία, "speaking all [one's mind]," "freedom of speech," when applied to language, may be opposed—as Lightfoot (on Col. ii. 15) says—"either (1) to 'fear,' as John vii. 13, Acts iv. 29, or (2) to 'ambiguity, reserve,' Joh. xi. 14, xvi. 25, 29; but 'misgiving, apprehension' in some form or other seems to be always the correlative idea. Hence when it is transferred from words to actions, it appears always to retain the idea of 'confidence, boldness'....The idea of publicity may sometimes be connected with the word as a secondary notion, e.g. in Joh. vii. 4, where ἐν παρησίᾳ εἶναι 'to assume a bold attitude' is opposed to ἐν κρυπτῷ ποιεῖν (comp. xviii. 20); but it does not displace the primary sense." Hence, in Col. ii. 15 (R.V.) "he made a shew of them openly (ἐν παρησίᾳ) triumphing over them in it [i.e. in the cross]," Lightf. substitutes "boldly," and (earlier) paraphrases thus, "As a mighty conqueror He displayed these His fallen enemies to an astonished world, leading them in triumph on His cross."

[1917 (ii)] This view of the adverbial παρρησία, namely, that it "appears always to retain the idea of 'confidence, boldness,'" is confirmed by its use as a noun in the rest of N.T. where R.V. regularly renders it to that effect¹. Moreover in the Johannine Epistle it occurs four times, and always to express the "boldness," or "confidence" of Christ's followers, confidence "toward God," or confidence as to future judgment². Even in xi. 14 "then therefore Jesus said to them without more reserve (παρρησία) 'Lazarus is dead,'" the meaning may be, that Jesus, having prepared His disciples for the disclosure, revealed the truth without (as Lightfoot says above) "misgiving or apprehension" lest their faith should fail: for a teacher will not use παρρησία unless he is "confident" as regards his pupils, that they are ready to receive the teaching. This, too, may explain xvi. 25 "I will announce to you without reserve concerning the Father"; and xvi. 29 "Behold, now speakest thou without reserve," i.e. frankly, and fully, and clearly.

[1917 (iii)] There remain two questions as to παρρησία in the Gospels. (1) Why do Matthew and Luke omit it in the single passage where Mark employs it (viii. 32) "and he [i.e. Christ] was boldly (R.V. openly) speaking the word"? (2) What is the reason for the abundant use of the word in the Johannine Gospel and Epistle where it occurs thirteen times, as often as in all the rest of N.T. together (setting aside the Acts, where it occurs five times)? Out of these may arise a third question. (3) Is there any reason for thinking that this is one of the many passages where John intervenes to explain something in Mark that is omitted by Matthew and Luke?

[1917 (iv)] In order to understand Mark's use of "boldly" (Mk viii. 32 "boldly speaking the word") we must bear in mind that Christ's prediction of His own crucifixion was the prediction of a Gospel that proved "to the Jews a stumbling block and to the Gentiles foolishness¹." The shock caused by "the word" to the disciples, and especially to Peter, shews that their Master had need of "boldness" (not for Himself in facing death, but for them in predicting it—boldness in believing that He would ultimately carry them with Him and that they would not abandon Him irrevocably). But still, to readers that did not realise the circumstances of the moment, Mark's brief phrase might seem obscure. Some might take παρρησία as "openly," i.e. to all the world. These might say that the phrase was misplaced, since Christ was addressing the disciples alone. Others might take the view of the Sinaitic Syrian, the Arabic Diatessaron, and the Codex Bobbiensis, which agree (1252) in making the words part of a prediction of Christ, that, after death, He would rise again and speak the word "openly" or "with confidence" to the disciples. Matthew and Luke—perhaps for one of these two reasons—omit the phrase. Clearly this tradition called for explanation on the part of any writer of a fourth authoritative Gospel.

[1917 (v)] Moreover, at the close of the first century, there were special reasons why attention should be called—among Christians, among non-Christian Jews, and among Greeks—to παρρησία as the mark of a great Teacher of divine truth. It was a time of religious impostures. Many people made money out of them. St Paul lays great stress on his own "sincerity," "confidence," and "boldness" (or "frankness"). He is not one (he says) of those who "water down" the Gospel for gain². Speaking from another point of view, there was a "veil," he adds, on the face of Moses proclaiming the Law (which was unto death) but not on the face of Christian teachers: "Having such a hope [as I have above described] we use great boldness—and not as Moses used to put the veil on his face³."

Rom. i. 16 "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel, for it is the power of God...to the Jew first and also to the Greek" with 1 Cor. i. 23—4 "We preach Christ crucified—unto Jews a stumbling block and unto Gentiles foolishness, but, unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and [Christ] the wisdom of God."

² 2 Cor. ii. 17 "watering down" or "making merchandise" καπηλεύοντες, "of sincerity" ἐξ ειλικρινείας, iii. 4 "confidence," πεπολιθῶσιν.

Philo, describing the freedom of speech used by Abraham toward God, classes παρρησία among "admirable virtues," the sign of a "good conscience," and quotes with approval the saying of a comic poet that a slave may be a storehouse of knowledge and yet "a rascal" unless you "give him a spice of *παρρησία*¹." Arrian, too, publishing the sayings of Epictetus, just as he had heard them, describes them as intended to be "notes to remind himself of the teacher's understanding and *παρρησία*²." Epictetus had been a slave; but his teaching is permeated with a twofold παρρησία. He is free from all misgivings as to the truth of his teaching; he is also absolutely free from personal fear as to the consequences of uttering what he thinks right to utter.

[1917 (vi)] These facts may well explain the prominence given by John to Christ's παρρησία, and the different circumstances in which he mentions it—so as to suggest that traditions might vary about it and yet might be reconciled. For example, Christ's brethren urge Him, indirectly, to "*take a bold attitude*³." He refuses, at the moment, because His "hour was not yet come." Soon afterwards, the multitude is represented as "not speaking boldly through fear of the Jews," and this timid multitude testifies to Christ, "Behold, he speaketh *boldly*⁴." Later on, it is said that Jesus would no longer walk and teach "boldly" among the Jews; but this is almost immediately followed by His final journey to Jerusalem and to death⁵. To the Jews, who say "If thou art the Christ, tell us boldly," He replies in a dark saying; yet to the High Priest He protests "I have spoken boldly to the world⁶." The impression left by these Aristotle Eth. Nic. iv. 3. 28 says that the μεγαλόψυχος must be παρρησιαστικός. Plutarch ii. 68—9 (De Adulatore 27—9) has a long discussion on the good and bad παρρησία rather inclining against παρρησίαν κυνικήν κ. λόγους τραχεῖς.

superficial inconsistencies is that our Lord always spoke "boldly," but not always "clearly,"—at least not clearly to the disciples because the disciples were "not able to bear¹" the clear and full doctrine as yet. They also suggest a probability that John may have had in view misunderstandings arising from the doctrine of Mark, that "Jesus taught the word boldly." Perhaps, too, he may have had before him a version of Mark like that of SS, namely, that Christ would "rise from the dead and speak the word boldly": for this is very much like the Johannine tradition, "The hour cometh when I shall no longer speak to you in proverbs, but shall announce to you without reserve concerning the Father²."

(θ) Τάχειον

[1918] Τάχειον (or τάχιον) occurs in xiii. 27 and xx. 4 "the other disciple ran on before more quickly than Peter." In N.T., it occurs also in Hebrews xiii. 19 (R.V.) "that I may be the sooner restored to you," and xiii. 23 "if he come (R.V.) shortly," but the meaning is doubtful (2554 d)³. John also uses both ταχέως and ταχύ⁴. We pass to the important passage xiii. 27 ὁ ποιεῖς ποίησον τάχειον. R.V. renders this "do quickly." But it seems reasonable to suppose that John does not use the form τάχειον exactly like ταχέως and ταχύ. And it makes excellent sense to suppose that Judas, who had not been originally purposing to commit the act of treachery on that night, was

² [1917 (vi) a] xvi. 25. It is interesting to note that the disciples, in spite of this warning as to the need of waiting for the παρρησία, persist in affirming that Christ already speaks (xvi. 29) ἐν παρρησίᾳ. It should be added that παρρησία occurs (5 or 6) in Canon. LXX, but only once (cf. Oxf. Conc. Lev. xxvi. 13 "upright," i.e. "with head erect as freemen") with correct Heb. equiv. Levy iv. 103—4 says that the Hebraized word may mean (1) "publicly," (2) "mit lauter Stimme."

³ [1918 a] The Thesaurus indicates that θάσσον is frequently used (perhaps meaning θάπτον λόγον, "quicker than one can tell it") for "at once," as it is also in the second book of Maccabees iv. 31, v. 21, xiv. 11 (A.V. "in all haste," "no sooner but"), and τάχιον is also thus used, though not nearly so many instances are given. Τάχιον occurs thus in Diod. Sic. and in Plut. Moral. 240 D "Unless you turn the stranger (ξενύλλιον) out of doors at once, he will corrupt you." It belongs to vernacular Greek and is condemned by Phrynichus.

driven to quicker action by the words of Jesus. In other words, Judas had in his mind some thought similar to that expressed by the chief priests in Mark and Matthew¹, "Not on the feast day lest there be an uproar of the people": but he was forced to do the deed "more quickly." And so it was brought about that the crucifixion took place on the Day of the Passover. Luke omits all mention of this original intention to delay the arrest of Christ. If John's τάχειον refers to it, it is one of the many instances where Luke omits and John intervenes.

ANACOLUTHON

(i) Generally

[1919] Anacoluthon² (lit. "not following") is the name given to a grammatical irregularity wherein, though the meaning may be clear, what is expected to follow does not follow, e.g. xv. 6 (R.V.) "If a man (τις) abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered; and they gather them (αὐτά) [i.e. the branches] and cast them into the fire." Here "as a branch" is simile, but "he is withered" is metaphor: and strictly "them" ought to be "it." Moreover, the following words tell only what becomes of the branches, not what becomes of the man. But the sentence is clear in meaning and calls for little comment.

(ii) The Subject suspended

[1920] Several instances may be illustrated by the Hebrew custom of putting the subject at the beginning of a sentence, and then repeating it as a pronoun, e.g. "The Lord, he is God." So in Revelation (iii. 12, 21) "He that conquereth (ὁ νικῶν)" is followed by "I will make him a pillar," "I will give to him." Somewhat more correct Greek is given earlier (Rev. ii. 7, 17) "To him that conquereth I will give to him." Compare Josh. ix. 12 οὗτοι οἱ ἄρτοι... ἐφωδιάσθημεν αὐτούς, Ps. ciii. 15 ἄνθρωπος, ὥς ἐλ χόρτος αἱ ἡμέραι αὐτοῦ etc. The following passages may be thus explained.

[1921] vi. 39 "...In order that all ($\pi\hat{\alpha}\nu$) that he hath given me I may lose none of it"; vii. 38 "He that believeth (δ πιστεύων)... rivers...shall flow from his belly"; x. 35—6 "Whom ($\delta\nu$) the Father sanctified...do ye say [to him] 'Thou blasphemest,'" best explained as [$\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\iota\nu\sigma$] $\delta\nu$ (in the light of the preceding passages); xv. 2—5 "Every branch ($\kappa\lambda\eta\mu\alpha$) in me that beareth not fruit he taketh it away...and every [one] ($\pi\hat{\alpha}\nu$) that beareth fruit he purifieth it...he that abideth (δ μένων) in me and I in him, he ($\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$) beareth much fruit"; xvii. 2 "In order that all ($\pi\hat{\alpha}\nu$) that thou hast given to him [i.e. to the Son] he [i.e. the Son] should give to them eternal life." Here, grammatically, the meaning would be that the Son should give all that He has received from the Father, namely, eternal life. But the meaning is that He should give eternal life to the whole Church (comp. vi. 39 above). See 2422.

[1922] 1 Jn ii. 24—7 "Ye (emph.) ($\upsilon\mu\epsilon\iota\varsigma$), that which ye heard from the beginning—let it abide in you. If in you there abide that which ye heard from the beginning, ye also shall abide in the Son and [in] the Father...And ye (emph.) ($\upsilon\mu\epsilon\iota\varsigma$), the chrism that ye received from him abideth in you, and ye have no need that any man should be teaching you." Here the writer emphasizes those that confess Christ ("ye") as opposed to those previously mentioned, who deny Him; and he may perhaps have begun by intending to say, "Ye, abide ye (imperat.) in the Son." But he deviates into saying, "let the chrism of the Son abide in you and then ye will abide in the Son."

Having regard to the instances in which the initial word ("he that conquereth," "he that believeth," "ye") is clearly nominative, it is probable that it is nominative in other cases, where the ambiguous neuter ($\pi\hat{\alpha}\nu$, $\kappa\lambda\eta\mu\alpha$) would allow the accusative.

(iii) Digression

[1923] In the last section, anacoluthon sprang from the desire to insist and repeat. More often it digresses, e.g. in v. 44 "How can ye (emph.) believe, receiving glory from one another and—the glory that [is] from the only God ye seek not?" The writer perhaps began with the intention of saying "receiving from one another...and not seeking from God," and then strayed away into the definite statement "ye seek not." In viii. 53 "Art thou greater than our father Abraham, who ($\theta\omicron\sigma\tau\iota\varsigma$) is dead? and the prophets are dead; whom makest thou thyself?," as in the preceding example, the writer deviates from the logical continuation of the interrogative ("and greater than the prophets who are dead?") into a more brief and trenchant affirmation. This deviation is favoured by ὅστις ἀπέθανεν, which may imply an affirmation, "Now he (or, for he) is dead," so as to prepare the way for a second affirmation. In xii. 35 "Walk as (ὡς) (2201) ye have the light, lest (ἵνα μὴ) the darkness overtake you and [then]—he that walketh in the darkness knoweth not where he goeth," the speaker digresses from a particular consequence ("and lest ye walk in darkness and know not") into a general one ("and then—what is the consequence? A man that walketh in darkness, knoweth not whither he goeth").

[1924] It was pointed out above (1919) that after mentioning "branch" John speaks of "them" instead of "it." So he has vii. 49 "This multitude that understandeth not the Law—[they] are [all] accursed (ἐπάρατοί εἰσιν)," which is more emphatic than the singular. Also xxi. 12 "No one (οὐδεὶς) of the disciples was bold enough to question him, 'Who art thou?' knowing [all of them] (εἰδότες) that it was the Lord," though ungrammatical, is brief and clear¹.

(iv) Impressionism

[1925] Anacoluthon in John often proceeds from his desire to let readers receive impressions of things in his pages as they receive them in nature, that is to say, first seeing the most striking of a group of things at a glance, and then gradually taking in the rest. In order to effect this, he may even deliberately let pass a statement that he afterwards corrects, as where he says that Jesus was baptizing and then adds that He Himself did not baptize, but His disciples did (iii. 22, iv. 1—2). Take, for example, the way in which he introduces (a) the Baptist's testimony concerning the coming of Christ, (b) Mary Magdalene's testimony concerning the Resurrection: (a) i. 15 (W.H. marg.) Ἰωάννης μαρτυρεῖ περὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ κέκραγεν λέγων, Οὗτος ἦν ὃν εἶπον· ὁ ὀπίσω (or, ...ὃν εἶπον 'Ο ὀπίσω) μου

¹ [1924 a] Clear so far as concerns the pl. But the participle, in such a context, suggests two interpretations, (1) "They did not dare to question though they knew it was he," (2) "They did not dare to question because they knew it was he." The Latin has the pl. part., SS has "because they were believing that it was he," (Walton) "since they knew that it was our Lord." See 2273.

ἐρχόμενος... (W.H. txt λέγων—οὗτος ἦν ὁ εἰπών—'Ο ὀπίσω...)¹, (b) xx. 18 ἔρχεται Μαριάμ ἡ Μαгдаληνὴ ἀγγέλλουσα τοῖς μαθηταῖς ὅτι Ἐώρακα τὸν κύριον καὶ ταῦτα εἶπεν αὐτῇ.

[1926] In the latter (b), W.H. give no various reading: but A.V. follows a text (similar to that of D and some Latin versions) that creates regularity by turning both clauses into reported speech, "M. M. came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord and [that] he had spoken these things unto her²." The true text, however, gives prominence to the all-important words—all-important, at least, for the speaker—"I have seen the Lord." Then there is a drop into reported speech ("and he said these things to her," where "these things" refers to the message just recorded by the evangelist and therefore not repeated). Some might have expected ὅτι to be omitted before the direct speech, and to be inserted before the reported speech. But the writer reverses this, apparently using ὅτι (2189—90) to mean "these were her words," as the sign of quotation, (lit.) "There cometh M. M. bringing tidings to the disciples that"—i.e. these were her words—"I have seen the Lord"—and [that] he said these things to her³."

[1927] In the earlier passage (a) above quoted (1925), we should expect οὗτος ἦν ὁν (or, περὶ οὗ) εἶπον ὅτι—if the meaning had been "This was he [concerning] whom I said that he that cometh after me is become before me⁴." Consequently we are led to another

³ [1926 b] Jn xiii. 29 "For some thought...that Jesus was saying (λέγει) to him [i.e. to Judas Iscariot] Buy (ἀγοράσον) the things we have need of for the feast, or, that he should give something to the poor (ἢ τοῖς πτωχοῖς ἵνα τι δῶ) is perhaps hardly to be called anacoluthon, but rather variation, the sentence passing from a direct to an indirect imperative. The change seems to be one from definiteness to vagueness, from the authoritative "buy" to "instructions about giving"—as to which Judas, the (Jn xii. 6) "thief," might be supposed to need a stimulus ("do (1918) more quickly").

rendering, "This was he that I said," i.e. "meant, or contemplated, [in all my utterances]"; and the following words ("He that cometh") may be a new statement of the Baptist's. Later on, the Baptist uses a preposition, thus "This is [he] in behalf of whom (or, about whom) I said, 'After me cometh a man...¹.'" It is reasonable to infer that in the first passage the Baptist must not be supposed to mean "in behalf of whom (or, about whom)," for else the evangelist would not have varied the phrase². On the whole we may believe that, at some cost of immediate clearness of detail, the evangelist wishes to put briefly before his readers the essence of the Baptist's testimony as being, from the beginning, twofold:—in the first place one of prediction, or anticipation, in the next place one of subordination. Then he can fill in the details afterwards. The first point is that when Jesus first appeared, the Baptist at once testified "This was he that I said," the second, "After me yet before me." Later on, he connects the two. At first he places them side by side without connexion³.

APPOSITION

(i) With proper names

[1928] Apposition is a method of expressing the phrase "that is to say" without writing it, by "apposing" a second word with a case-ending to a first word with the same case-ending, as in xi. 16 "Thomas, [that is to say] he that is called Didymus," xx. 24 "Thomas, [that is to say] one of the Twelve, [that is to say] he that is called Didymus," vi. 71 "This man (i.e. Judas Iscariot) was destined to deliver him up [(?) that is to say] one of the Twelve," xii. 4 "Judas Iscariot, [that is to say] one of his disciples, he that was destined to deliver him up." This construction conduces to brevity and force, but sometimes to obscurity as is seen in the above queried vi. 71 οὗτος γὰρ ἔμελλεν παραδιδόναι αὐτόν—εἰς ἐκ τῶν δώδεκα. This may be mere apposition, but it may be an abbreviation of εἰς ὧν, "being one," understood to mean "though he was one¹." There is also serious ambiguity in xix. 25 "His mother and the sister of his mother Mary the [daughter] of Clopas and Mary Magdalene." Here it is impossible to tell, from the text apart from other evidence, whether "the sister of his mother" is "Mary the [daughter] of Clopas," or whether they are two persons.

(ii) In subdivisions

[1929] Apposition is used after a broad statement to define its parts. But the first of the instances given below is not a certain one. John is referring to a previous statement that Jesus "found in the Temple those that were selling oxen and sheep and doves." What follows may mean that Jesus (ii. 15) "drove all [of them] out of the Temple, both sheep and oxen (πάντας ἐξέβαλεν ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ, τά τε πρόβατα καὶ τοὺς βόας)," i.e. the men and what they sold, indicating that "all [of them]" included their belongings, "sheep sellers and ox sellers, sheep and oxen." And this may be his meaning in using τε—which occurs nowhere else in this Gospel without introducing a verb². If so, the instance is appositional. Whatever the con-

[1928 b] It is worth noting that, in John, these appositional constructions have to do with (a) Thomas, who was called by some (Enc. Bib. 5058) "Judas Thomas," with (b) Judas Iscariot, and (xiv. 22) with (c) "Judas not Iscariot"—all of whom might need to be distinguished. But in other cases also, when the Gospels came to be read publicly in sections, there would be found great use and clearness in appositional clauses defining personality at the beginning of a section, even though such a clause had been already inserted on the introduction of the character in an earlier section.

² [1929 a] Τε occurs only thrice in this Gospel. The other two instances are iv. 42 τῇ τε γυναικὶ ἔλεγον, vi. 18 ἣ τε θάλασσα...διεγείρετο. In ii. 15, A.V. has "drove them all out...and the sheep," R.V. "cast all out of the temple, both the struction may be, the context implies that Jesus dealt in one way with the sellers of cattle and in another with the sellers of doves.

[1930] R.V., in v. 3 "A multitude of them that were sick (ἀσθενούντων), blind, halt," apparently takes the participle as parallel to the adjectives; but A.V. takes the participle as including them, "a multitude of impotent folk," i.e. "of blind, halt...." In that case, the construction is appositional. If the former had been intended, we should have expected ἀσθενής the adjective, or some more special word, such as "paralysed." Other instances of subdivisinal apposition in v. 29, ix. 2, xx. 12, are perfectly clear, and call for no comment.

(iii) Explaining, or defining (not with Participle)

[1931] In most of the following instances the writer places at or near the end of a sentence some word or clause introduced without any preparatory or connecting word. Often, but not always, the clause is of such a nature that we may suppose it to have taken the hearer by surprise, when first uttered. They may be conveniently grouped here together and discussed severally in 1932—6.

i. 45 "[Him of] whom Moses...wrote...we have found—Jesus, son of Joseph, the [Jesus] of Nazareth"; iii. 13 "He that came down from heaven—the Son of man"; vi. 4 "Now there was at hand the passover, the feast of the Jews" (W.H. enclose "at...passover" in half brackets. Contrast vii. 2); vi. 27 "For him did the Father seal—God"; vi. 71 "For this [man] was destined to deliver him up—one of the Twelve," i.e. probably "though he was one of the Twelve"; vii. 2 "Now there was at hand the [great] feast of the Jews—the feast of tabernacles"; viii. 40 "Ye seek to kill me—(lit.) a man, [me] who have spoken to you the truth" (As to this difficult passage, see 1934—5); viii. 41 "We have one Father—God"; viii. 44 "Ye are of [your] father—the devil"; ix. 13, 18 "They bring him (αὐτόν) to the Pharisees—(lit.) the once blind [man] (τόν ποτε τυφλόν)"..."they called his parents—[the parents of] him that had recovered sight¹"; sheep and the oxen." The former is hardly in accordance with Gk idiom. But in a writer so fond of parenthesis as Jn the meaning might be, "He cast them all out of the temple—both the sheep and the oxen [did he cast out]—and he poured forth the money...."

¹ [1931 a] Τοὺς γονεῖς αὐτοῦ τοῦ ἀναβλέψαντος (which, strictly, belongs to apposition with participle, 1937), would mean, in ordinary Greek, "the parents of the very man that had recovered sight." But this, besides making poor sense,

xii. 46 "I (emph.), light, have come into the world"; xiii. 14 "If I (emph.), then, have washed your feet—the lord and the teacher..." (perhaps generally interpreted as meaning "though I am the lord and the teacher," but possibly meaning "because I am the lord and the teacher," if Christ assumed that it was the attribute of the lord to serve); xiv. 16, 26 "And another Paraclete shall he give to you...the Spirit of truth," "But the Paraclete, the Holy Spirit...he shall teach you"; xv. 26 "But when the Paraclete shall have come—the Spirit of truth"; xvii. 3 "That they may grow in the knowledge of thee, the only true God, and of him whom thou sentest—Jesus Christ"; xviii. 16 "The other disciple—the friend (ὁ γνωστός) of the high priest...."

[1932] Some of the above quoted instances require little comment, being simply short and sudden ways of implying "that is to say," or "and it is," e.g. (viii. 41, 44) "We have one Father [and it is] God," "Ye are of [your] father [and it is] the devil." Similarly xviii. 16, "the other disciple, the friend..." means "now he was, as I said before, a friend of the high priest, and hence he was able to introduce Peter into the house." In i. 45, "son of Joseph" and "of Nazareth" are mentioned abruptly by Philip as attributes of the Messiah, whom he accepts. In i. 46 and vi. 42 the same phrases are mentioned as reasons for rejection¹. The abruptness with which Philip obtrudes them (so to speak) on the learned Nathanael (who is shocked by "Nazareth") may be intended to illustrate Philip's character and faith. In iii. 13 the words "coming down from heaven" followed, not by "the Son of God," but by "the Son of man"², stimulate the reader to think of what was

would be a rare Johannine usage. In the only Johannine instance of αὐτὸς ὁ applied to persons (xvi. 27) "The Father himself (αὐτὸς γὰρ ὁ πατήρ)," it means, "of himself" (2374)—that is, unsolicited by me. These clauses ("the once blind" etc.) are not needed for clearness. They suggest the reason for the "bringing" and the "calling." More amply it might be expressed by "'Here,' said they, 'is the man that was once blind,'" or "full of astonishment at the cure of the man that was once blind."

¹ [1932 a] Also in vii. 42, "Nazareth" is (in effect) tacitly indicated as an objection, by the mention of "Bethlehem" as the foreordained birthplace of the Messiah.

meant by "heaven," and "coming down." In xiv. 16, 26, xv. 26, emphasis is laid on the Paraclete, or Advocate, as not being one of the ordinary kind—the kind that takes up a client's cause, good or bad, and makes the best of it—but as being "holy," and—which is twice repeated—"a Spirit of truth."

[1933] In the above quoted xii. 46 "I, light (ἐγὼ φῶς), have come into the world," the appositional clause comes exceptionally near the beginning of the sentence. It is not parallel to iii. 2 "From God thou hast come *a teacher*¹," because the emphasis in the former lies on "I, light," but in the latter on "from God" (and the pronoun "thou" is not expressed). It may mean, either, "I, though I am and have been Light from the beginning, have come into this world of darkness," or, "I, because I am Light, and because it is the mission of Light to enlighten, have come into the world." The reader is probably intended to think of both these meanings and to prefer the latter, as being in harmony with the saying in the Prologue, "There was the Light, the true Light, enlightening every human being—coming [as it does continually] into the world."

[1934] In viii. 40, there is a very great difficulty fully appreciated by Origen and Chrysostom, and by the translators of some Latin versions. Our Lord is proving to the Jews that they are not true children of Abraham: "If ye are children of Abraham, the deeds of Abraham ye are doing (2078—9). But as it is ye are seeking to kill me, (lit.) a human being (or man, ἄνθρωπον), who have told you the truth, which I heard from God²." On this Origen has frequent comments, trying (2412 a) to explain the insertion of "human being" on the ground that it refers to Christ's human nature, which alone can be killed etc.³ It is difficult to accept these explanations, and Chrysostom dispenses with the need of them by dropping "human being" thus: "Ye seek to kill me because (ὅτι) I have told you the truth." Also two Latin versions (f and e) have "hominem qui locutus est" ("a man that has," not "a man, me who have"). Doubtless either Origen is right in thinking that "human being" has some definite and emphatic meaning, or Chrysostom is right in thinking that the text must be altered.

[1935] But the text may be retained and may receive a very natural and beautiful meaning if we suppose that our Lord assumed a connexion, in the minds of those whom He was addressing, between "Abraham" and "man" (in the sense of "mankind" or "human being"), and also between "Abraham" and "truth," so that Jesus might be understood to say "You say you are Abraham's children; but you do not act like him. He loved men and loved God's truth. I am a man, and I am telling you God's truth, and you are seeking to kill me." Philo (ii. 30) speaks of Abraham's "love of man (φιλανθρωπία)¹" as being the natural accompaniment of his piety. Abraham also is the first of Biblical characters to use the words "brethren" and "men" together in a passage in which he sets a precedent for peace-making. His words and his deeds all suggest "humanity," φιλανθρωπία. Again, the first mention of the word "truth" in the Bible is connected with God's manifestation of His "kindness and truth" to Abraham². Moreover the statement (made a little later on) that the Patriarch "saw the day" of the Messiah "and rejoiced³," implies—if at least the Messiah is the ideal of humanity—that Abraham was the friend of man as well as the friend of God. These considerations indicate the meaning of part of this obscure passage to be, "Ye profess to be the children of Abraham the friend of man, and yet ye desire to kill a man."

[1936] On xvii. 3, "And this is life eternal, that they should know thee, the only true God, and [him] whom thou sentest—Jesus Christ," Westcott (ad loc.) says, "(1) The use of the name 'Jesus Christ' by the Lord Himself at this time is in the highest degree unlikely...(2)... 'the only true God'...recalls 'the true God' (1 Jn v. 20) and is not like any other phrase used by the Lord, (3) the clauses, while perfectly natural as explanations, are most strange if they are taken as substantial parts of the actual prayer." These arguments demonstrate that this is one of the many⁴ passages where evangelistic explanation of a Logion or utterance of the Lord has made its way into the Logion itself. But what distinguishes this from other cases is, that the saying not only retains the second person, but is also addressed to God. The Epistle says (1 Jn v. 20) "...that we should know the true [One] and be in the true [One] in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life." The evangelist, or some editor, seems to have applied this definition of "eternal life" to the explanation of words in the Prayer (xvii. 2) "that all that thou hast given him—he may give to them eternal life"; and, in order to continue in the language of prayer, he perhaps changed the "we" of the Epistle into "they," and "the true One" into "thee, the only true God."

(iv) With Participle

[1937] Apposition between a noun and a participle with the article may be ambiguous. For example, ὁ χριστὸς ὁ ἐρχόμενος might mean either (1) "the Christ that is to come" (like Tennyson's "the Christ that is to be"), or (2) "the Christ, He that is to come." The former would not be true apposition but definition. Possibly the first of the following instances may be of the nature of apposition, although the participle has no article: i. 6 "There came into being (ἐγένετο) a man (ἄνθρωπος)—[one] sent from God (ἀπεσταλμένος παρὰ θεοῦ)." Here (a) ἐγένετο seems to be contrasted with the previous ἦν in i. 1 ("In the beginning was (ἦν) the Word"), (b) ἄνθρωπος, "a man," with ὁ Λόγος, "the Word," and (possibly) (c) ἀπεσταλμένος παρὰ "sent from the house of," with ἦν πρὸς "was with" ("the Word was with God").

[1938] i. 18 "Only begotten, God, HE THAT IS in the bosom of the Father—he (emph.) declared him (Μονογενής, Θεός, ὁ ὢν εἰς τὸν κόλπον τοῦ πατρὸς—ἐκεῖνος ἐξηγήσατο)." The passage is one of great difficulty: but it seems best to punctuate (differently from W.H.) as though the Logos here receives three distinct titles. Ἐκεῖνος, i.e. "He, and he alone," would be called an instance of apposition in a classical author; but, in John, it is the imitation of Hebrew idiom for the purpose of emphasis (1920). In i. 29 "The lamb of God—(?) he that taketh away the sin of the world (ὁ ἀμνὸς τοῦ θεοῦ—ὁ αἴρων τὴν ἁμαρτίαν τοῦ κόσμου)," theoretically the construction might be non-appositional, "the lamb that," i.e. "among lambs offered in sacrifice this is the one that taketh away sin." But practically the evangelist's fondness for apposition almost decides that the construction is appositional here, "the Lamb of God, He that taketh away the sin of the world."

the water (οἱ δὲ διάκονοι ᾗδουσιν, οἱ ἡντληκότες τὸ ὕδωρ),” probably apposition, “—[that is to say, not exactly the attendants, but only] the men that had drawn the water.” Non-appositionally it would mean (as W.H. punctuate) “the attendants that had drawn,” i.e. such of the attendants as had drawn. The meaning is the same in both cases, but the way of putting things is different. If there is apposition, it defines, or rather corrects, the larger and incorrect statement; and this corrective manner is a Johannine characteristic (1925). Moreover, if the participle had been non-appositional it would probably not have been separated from its noun by the intervention of the verb. In iii. 29 “But the friend of the bridegroom, [that is to say] he that standeth and hearkeneth unto him (ὁ δὲ φίλος τοῦ νυμφίου, ὁ ἐστηκὼς καὶ ἀκούων αὐτοῦ),” the construction is certainly appositional and W.H. punctuate it so. It does not mean “That one of the bridegroom’s friends whose task it is to stand and hearken.” “The ‘friend’ of the bridegroom” might be expressed in modern English, “The bridegroom’s ‘best man.’” In iv. 25, “I know that Messiah cometh—he that is called Christ (Μ. ἔρχεται, ὁ λεγόμενος Χριστός),” the appositional clause is clearly an evangelistic addition. On iv. 23 “seeketh such—namely, those that worship him [in such wise],” see 2398.

[1940] In iv. 26 “I am [Messiah] (2205)—he that talketh to thee (ἐγὼ εἰμι, ὁ λαλῶν σοι)” the appositional clause is added as a repetition of a statement so startling that the Samaritan woman might hardly believe that she heard it rightly: “When I say ‘I,’ I mean ‘he that talketh to thee.’” In vi. 14 “This is of a truth the prophet (?) [he] that is to come into the world (ὁ προφήτης (?) ὁ ἐρχόμενος),” W.H. place no comma after προφήτης. But John has, previously (i. 21), “Art thou the prophet?” as though that were a title by itself, familiar to the people; and Matthew and Luke both represent the Baptist as sending to say to Jesus (Mt. xi. 3, Lk. vii. 19) “Art thou he that is to come (ὁ ἐρχόμενος)?” On the whole, the evidence of Johannine usage (1635—9) favours apposition, “the prophet, he that is to come.” This applies also to xi. 27 “The Christ, the Son of God, he that is to come into the world.”

[1941] In xi. 45 “Many therefore of (ἐκ) the Jews,—those that had come to Mary and beheld (πολλοὶ οὖν ἐκ τῶν Ἰουδαίων, οἱ ἐλθόντες πρὸς τὴν Μαριάμ καὶ θεασάμενοι)...,” A.V. has “the Jews which came.” R.V. inserts a comma, “the Jews, which came.” Perhaps neither version would be generally understood to mean what the Greek means, namely, "Many therefore of the citizens of Jerusalem¹ —[by 'many,' I mean] *those that had come to Mary*²."

[1942] The passage presents great difficulty. That John should here use "Jews" not in his usual hostile sense but apparently to mean citizens of Jerusalem (as also seemingly in xi. 18, 19, 31 and xii. 9) need not surprise us much: but the sense seems to demand, after "Jews," the genitive τῶν ἐλθόντων, "Many therefore of the Jews [I mean many] of those [Jews] that had come to Mary...believed, but some of them [i.e. of those Jews that had come to Mary] gave information to the Pharisees." This is actually the reading of D³. But Origen, in a very long comment in which he mentions the phrase "those that had come unto Mary" some seven or eight times, gives express reasons why τῶν ἐλθόντων should not be read⁴. Chrysostom does not commit himself to anything definite in his brief statement, "Some marvelled; but others went and carried word to the Pharisees⁵."

² [1941 b] "Many" is a relative term. It would probably mean a very much larger number in (1) "Many of the citizens died of the plague," than in (2) "Many of the citizens used to come out to see us as our village was only a couple of miles off." In xi. 45, there was need to define "many." It needed no definition in xi. 18—19 where the context defined it.

[1941 c] The difficult question remains, Why does Jn repeat a phrase ("many of the Jews") that meant one thing above (xi. 18—19), and would mean quite a different thing here—unless he hastened to explain it? The explanation may be, that the original text presupposed some distinction between (xi. 19) those Jews that "came to Martha and Mary," and those that came to (? SS "because of") Mary at the tomb of Lazarus. Some may have remained in the house when Mary went out of it. In that case, (1) "the Jews" in xi. 45 mean the Jews above mentioned, who "came to Martha and Mary." (2) "Many of these [Jews]" had "come to Mary" at the tomb of Lazarus and "believed." (3) "But some of these [Jews]" did not come to Mary at the tomb, and these did not believe but gave information to the Pharisees.

³ [1942 a] SS, quite altering the sentence, has "Many Jews that came unto Jesus because of Mary from that hour believed in Jesus."

[1943] The impression left by Origen's long commentary is that he distinguishes the Jews that followed Mary to the tomb from other Jews that remained in the house. All had come to comfort the two sisters; but only those that followed Mary, in the belief that she was going to weep at the tomb, were by her means drawn out of the house so that they unexpectedly met Jesus and witnessed the miracle. Concerning these one might say, in the words of SS, that "they came unto Jesus because of Mary." Origen speaks of them as the persons for whose sake the miracle was mainly wrought¹. Perhaps he regards them as a type of the Church or of the Jewish section of it.

[1944] Justin Martyr and Irenaeus² regarded Rachel as the type of the Church. Origen, according to an extract from Cramer, connects Rachel with persons weeping for their children and not yet instructed by the Resurrection of Christ, and says that she is a type of the Church³. Whether Origen connected Rachel weeping for her children with Mary weeping for Lazarus we do not know, as his comment on the weeping is lost: but he compares the stone rolled away by Jacob (for Rachel) with the stone rolled away from the grave of Lazarus⁴. Origen censures Martha's want of faith. Justin says that Leah, because she had weak eyes, was a type of the Synagogue, and Irenaeus says that Rachel was a type of the Church because she "had good eyes." By this is meant that Rachel could discern the truth, which Leah could not. The Johannine narrative does not justify anyone in drawing this marked distinction between Martha and Mary; but it certainly leaves on us the impression that Mary was in some way superior to Martha, and that in very ancient times, "those that came to Mary" were regarded as typical of those Jews "who came to Jesus because of Mary," and that this coming was associated with the message of Resurrection⁵.

⁵ [1944 a] This phrase ("those that came to Jesus because of Mary") might come into use in connexion with the part played by Mary Magdalene as the first announcer of Christ's Resurrection. A great deal remains to be explained about the different Maries, about the sisters Mary and Martha, and the household of [1945] xii. 4 "Judas Iscariot, one of his disciples—he that was destined to deliver him up (εἰς τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, ὁ μέλλων αὐτὸν παραδιδόναι)." Judas Iscariot has been previously mentioned in the same connexion, vi. 71 "for he was destined (ἔμελλεν) to deliver him up—one of the twelve": and now, reversing the clauses, John repeats the statement, when explaining that the words xii. 5 "Why was not this ointment sold?" were uttered, not (as Matthew says) by "the disciples," or (as Mark says) by "certain persons," but by "one of his disciples," namely, Judas Iscariot. It happens that Luke omits, in his description of the Last Supper, the words of the Lord reported by Mark and Matthew, "*One of you shall deliver me up*¹." To these Mark alone adds "*One of the twelve*²." John follows Mark and Matthew in the former statement, "*One of you shall deliver me up*³"; and it is perhaps in view of this pathetic utterance of Jesus—"one of you," or "one of the twelve"—that he prepared his readers for it at the very first mention of Judas Iscariot, and now repeats it.

(v) Noun repeated in Apposition

[1946] A noun is repeated in apposition in i. 14 "And we beheld his glory—glory as of [an] only begotten." This is perhaps intended to suggest that the "glory" cannot be defined by such words as "light," "splendour," "brightness," or by anything except repetition, with some qualifying phrase to denote unique personality.

(vi) Of Pronoun with preceding subject

[1947] On the apposition, or quasi apposition, of a pronoun with a preceding subject, as in i. 33 ὁ πέψας....ἐκεῖνος, see 1920 and 2386. Bruder (Moulton) p. 678 gives this construction (of ὁ with participle etc. followed by demonstrative pronoun) as occurring Mk (3), Mt. (6) (including Mt. iv. 16 where it is a transl. of the Heb. idiom in Is. ix. 1), Lk. (1), Jn (17). On κακεῖνος thus used, see 2151.

ARTICLE

(i) Before Nouns in general

[1948] The Fourth Gospel, more than the Three, represents Jesus as using the Article to denote (1) ideals such as the Good Shepherd, the Way, the Truth, the Door, the Life, and (2) types, such as "the wolf," "the porter," "the bridegroom," "the woman [of the house]," i.e. the wife¹, "the grain." In the last instance, R.V. has xii. 24 "Except a grain of wheat (ὁ κόκκος τοῦ σίτου) fall into the earth," perhaps from a sense that in English, though we can say "the seed," we could not say "the wheat-grain." But we lose in this translation the recognition of the fact that "the grain" (no less than "the sower," and "the earth"), was present before our Lord as one of the familiar instruments, so to speak, in His Father's hand. Somewhat similarly Mark alone speaks of "the candle," where Matthew and Luke have dropped the article².

(ii) Inserted, or omitted, before special Nouns

(1) "Fathers"

[1949] vi. 58 "Not as the fathers ate and died," vii. 22 "Not that it [i.e. circumcision] is from Moses but from the fathers." In vi. 58, "the fathers" must mean "the generation that received the law and died in the wilderness." But, in the New Testament generally, "the fathers" means "the patriarchs" (and especially Abraham) regarded as the original receivers of the Promises of God³; and the language of the Epistle to the Hebrews, "God, who...spake to the fathers in the prophets⁴," is quite exceptional (2553 e). Hence, in the Acts, when the people of Israel (and not the Patriarchs) is denoted, "our" (or "your") is perhaps invariably inserted⁵: 'and we should expect a Jew to speak and write "our fathers" when mentioning his own people. The preceding words are, "This is the bread that came down from heaven," whereas, in this Gospel, Jesus is always (1952—8) represented as saying "from the heaven." These facts suggest that vi. 58 may be an evangelistic summary of the Doctrine of the Bread from Heaven.

[1950] In vii. 22 "For this cause Moses gave you circumcision—not that it is from Moses but from the fathers—and on the sabbath ye circumcise a man (1961)," the exact historic truth would require, not "from the fathers," but "from Abraham." But "the fathers," meaning "the patriarchs," might be loosely used to express the fact that circumcision, beginning with the first of the Patriarchs, was continued by the rest of them, and was thus passed on to Moses, who, though he "gave," did not originate it. If John wrote vi. 58 in his own person, but vii. 22 in the person of Christ, it is comparatively easy to explain how "the fathers" might mean "Israel in the Wilderness" in the former, and "the Patriarchs" in the latter¹. It is more in accordance with the Johannine method of expression that our Lord should speak of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as "the fathers" than that He should give this name to the generation that wandered forty years in the wilderness.

(2) "Feast"

[1951] vii. 2 "Now there was at hand the [principal] feast of the Jews, the feast of tabernacles (ἡ ἑορτὴ τῶν Ἰ. ἡ σκηνοπηγία)." Josephus calls this (Ant. viii. 4. 1) "by far the most holy and important feast among the Hebrews," and (iḥ. xv. 3. 3) "most of all observed among us." John's reason for calling attention to this is given in the context. The brethren of Jesus urge Him to shew Himself in of Stephen's speech, "the fathers" (according to W.H., following NBD) occurs exceptionally thus, Acts vii. 19 "the same dealt subtilly with our race, and evil entreated the fathers, that they should cast out their babes." Is this to be explained from the special context, as meaning "the fathers of newly born children"? Stephen calls the sons of Jacob "the patriarchs (οἱ πατριάρχαι) when they sell Joseph, and "our fathers" when they are sent to buy corn, and subsequently (Acts vii. 9, 12, 15). In Acts iii. 22 (A.V.) the words "unto the fathers" are an interpolation. The title (in Sir. xlv.) "[The] Song of [the] Fathers," LXX ὕμνος πατέρων, is, in Heb., "Praise of the Fathers of the World."

public, "Manifest thyself to the world," and this particular feast was the best occasion for obtaining publicity¹.

(3) "Heaven"

[1952] The article is always used by John (16 times) with "heaven" except in i. 32 "I have beheld (τεθέαμαι) the Spirit descending as a dove from heaven (ἐξ οὐρανοῦ)"; vi. 58 "This is the bread that descended from heaven (ὁ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ καταβάς)—not as the fathers ate and died—he that eateth this bread shall live for ever." Of the sixteen instances of "heaven" with the article, thirteen occur in the phrase "from the heaven." This makes the two exceptions all the more remarkable.

[1953] As a rule, "the heaven" means heaven regarded as a place distinct from "the earth," whereas "heaven" means what is heavenly or divine as distinct from what is mortal or human. In the Synoptic Tradition, "The doctrine of John, was it from heaven (ἐξ ὁ.) or from men³?" "from heaven" means divinely inspired, but "from the heaven" would have implied a suggestion of an angelic message, or vision (Acts xi. 5) "sent down from the heaven." Different writers might take different views of the Lord "hearing from heaven." Solomon in the book of Kings uses the article, Nehemiah does not⁴. But the same author may reasonably be expected to take the same view, and not to use the phrase with and without the article indiscriminately.

[1954] John habitually represents Jesus as asserting that He has come down "from the heaven," using the noun metaphorically in a spiritual sense like "the bosom of the Father," "the light of the world," "the bread of life" etc. If he had used the phrase "from heaven," it would have predicated about our Lord what might also have been predicated—as we have seen above—concerning the doctrine of John the Baptist. Therefore in the Fourth Gospel both Christ and Christ's doctrine, the Bread of Life, are said as a rule to

² [1952 a] All have ἐκ, except vi. 38 ἀπό.

have descended "from the heaven." Thus John reverses the usual custom of speech. Most writers would speak of "the birds of the heaven," and would describe a bird as coming down "from the heaven," meaning "the sky," whereas they would say that a prophet's message comes "from heaven, not from earth." But John prefers to take "the heaven" as a materialistic term used by him always in a metaphorical sense to imply that the Lord Jesus Christ, the Bread of Life, was not merely of a heavenly origin but came down in a unique manner from the abiding-place of the Eternal God.

[1955] What bearing has this on the first of the two above-mentioned exceptions, i. 32 "I have beheld the Spirit descending as a dove from heaven (ἐξ οὐ.)"? The answer is complicated by several facts. (1) The Baptist is speaking, not our Lord, nor the evangelist in his own person. (2) It is not clear whether "from heaven" should be taken with "as a dove" or with "descending." (3) Mark and Matthew in their parallel description of the descent of the Spirit, mention "the heavens" and "from the heavens": but Luke has "the heaven" and "from heaven." If John had written "from the heaven," it might have been taken literally in connexion with "dove," so as to mean "like a dove from the sky"; or it might have been taken metaphorically, "from the very habitation of God." Perhaps neither of these meanings is contemplated in the Fourth Gospel. More probably John regarded the Baptist as speaking of a vision that came "from heaven" and as using the ordinary phrase about it. This phrase he places exceptionally in the Baptist's mouth in order to distinguish it, on the one hand, from any bodily dove visible to all, and, on the other hand, from those unique spiritual descents concerning which Jesus spoke, which were from "the heaven of heavens." See 685—724.

[1956] The other instance, vi. 58 "This is the bread that came down from heaven" (οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ καταβάς), follows, in the same chapter, no less than eight instances of "bread from the heaven" or "come down from the heaven," and, in particular, vi. 50—1 "This is the bread that is [continually] coming down from the heaven...I am the living bread that came down from the heaven." The two challenge, as it were, comparison or contrast. So do their several contexts: (a) vi. 58 "This is the bread that came down from heaven—not as the fathers ate and died; he that feedeth on (τρώγων) this bread shall live for ever," (b) vi. 49—51 "Your fathers ate in the wilderness the manna and died. This is the bread that is continually coming down from the heaven that anyone may eat thereof and not die (ἀποθάνῃ) (or, be liable to death, ἀποθνήσκῃ). I am the living bread that came down from the heaven. If anyone eat of this bread he shall live for ever."

[1957] The first point to be noted is that in (a) the passage under discussion, the eaters of the manna are called "the fathers," but in (b) "your fathers." This, as has been shewn above (1949), may indicate that (b) is a saying of the Lord, while (a) is evangelistic comment. The next point is that the anacoluthon, or breaking off, implied in "not as (οὐ καθώς)," is paralleled by Westcott here to 1 Jn iii. 12—"not as Cain was of the evil one"; and neither here nor in the Epistle does Westcott refer to any other N.T. instance of such a construction¹. These two peculiarities of John himself, as distinct from the words of Christ recorded by John, when combined with "from heaven"—instead of the phrase regularly assigned to Christ ("from the heaven") both here and elsewhere—indicate that the evangelist is here speaking in his own person and summing up the whole of the Eucharistic discourse. According to this view, the teaching of the Lord in the Synagogue at Capernaum concluded with the words (vi. 57) "He that feedeth on me, he also shall live for my sake." Then John himself thus sums up the doctrine and the circumstances in which it is delivered: "This is² the bread that came down from heaven [not from men]—not as the fathers [of Israel] ate in

² [1957 b] "This is" both in (a) and (b) is ambiguous. It may mean, "This [bread] is the bread that came down," or "This [man] is the bread that came down (1974)." In Jn, Christ is never represented as saying οὗτος ἐστίν except here, and in His lips it probably means "This [bread] is." But it is quite characteristic of Jn that he should repeat the words of the Lord giving them their inner sense "This [man] is." The phrase occurs several times in testimony to Christ, i. 30 (from the Baptist) "This is he about whom I said," i. 33 "This is he that baptizeth," i. 34 "This is the Son (or, Chosen One) of God," iv. 42 (from the Samaritans) "This is in truth the Saviour of the world," comp. vi. 14, vii. 40 "This is in truth the prophet," vii. 41 "This is the Christ." In some of these passages, e.g. i. 34, iv. 42, it comes at the close of a narrative. In xxi. 24 it comes near the close of the Gospel, "This is the disciple that testifieth these things." In the Epistle it occurs thrice: ii. 22 "This is the antichrist," v. 6 "This is he that came through water and blood," v. 20 "This is the true God and eternal life." The phrase comes appropriately in Jn vi. 58 as part of an evangelistic utterance testifying to the truth of Christ's Eucharistic doctrine. Comp. 2621—2.

the wilderness and died. He that feedeth on this bread shall live for ever. These things he said in synagogue teaching in Capernaum."

[1958] In i. 51, "Ye shall see the heaven opened (perf.)," the meaning is probably something quite different from a vision of a "rending" in the sky such as might be inferred from Mark's use of the word "rend" in the description of Christ's baptism. Taken in conjunction with John's context about "angels ascending and descending," the words (642) "promise a continuous revelation and a permanent avenue opened up between heaven"—the spiritual heaven—"and earth." The evangelistic use of the word with the article in xii. 28 "There came therefore a voice from the heaven," and in xvii. 1 "Having lifted up his eyes to the heaven," perhaps denotes in both passages an outer and an inner meaning; for non-believers, that lower heaven which men call "the sky"; for believers, "the heaven of heavens¹."

(4) "Man"

[1959] In the following passages, "the man" is used (like "the dog," "the vine" etc.) to mean "man in general," "mankind," or "human nature"; Jn ii. 24—5 "But Jesus himself (2374) would not trust himself to them because he understood all [men] (πάντας) and because he had no need that any one should testify about human nature (lit. the man) because he himself (2374) could understand what was in human nature (lit. the man)."
Mark alone has (ii. 27) "the sabbath was made for the man and not the man for the sabbath."
But Mk vii. 15 "There is nothing outside the man (i.e. man in general) that, going into him, is able to defile him" is imitated by Mt. xv. 11. In Genesis, vi. 5 "God saw that the wickedness of the man, i.e. mankind, was great," viii. 21 "the imagination of the heart of the man, i.e. mankind," LXX has 1st "the men," 2nd "the man." Comp. Eccles. iii. 11 "so that the man cannot find out," where LXX has "the man," but Aquila "man," and iii. 19 "the man hath no preeminence above the beasts," where LXX and Theod. have "the man," but Sym. "man." So 1 Cor. ii. 11 "Who among men knows the things of the man?" i.e. the facts of human nature. The Hebrew phrase is identical with "the Adam," so that the Pauline phrases "the old man," and "the new man," are equivalent severally to (1) "the old Adam," or "first Adam," and (2) "the last Adam," or "second man," who is said to be "from heaven."

[1960] In vii. 51, "the man" may very well refer to previous context, which describes an attempt on the part of the Sanhedrin to arrest Jesus. Nicodemus, a member of the Sanhedrin, pleads that Jesus ought at all events to be heard: "Will (or, doth¹) our Law judge the man except it first hear from him...?" i.e. the man you have been trying to arrest. The term is perhaps slightly contemptuous, and exhibits Nicodemus as affecting to speak from a detached and superior position—in spite of the fact that he has visited Jesus by night. Somewhat similarly, in Matthew, Peter detaches himself under pressure of fear, and, when he is questioned about his Master, says, "I do not know *the man*²." In classical Greek, ὁ ἄνθρωπος often means "the poor man," "the poor creature," and there is probably a tinge of this mixture of pity and contempt in Pilate's saying (xix. 5) "Behold the man," i.e. "Behold the poor creature—whom you are persecuting, and who is surely beneath your hostility!" But Pilate, like Caiaphas (xi. 50), may also be regarded as speaking "not from himself," so that he unconsciously uses an expression that may mean "Behold the man!" i.e. the Man according to God's Image, the ideal Man³.

² [1960 δ] Mt. xxvi. 72, 74 τὸν ἄνθρωπον, Mk xiv. 71 τὸν ἀ. τοῦτον ὃν λέγετε. Lk. xxii. 58, 60 has ἄνθρωπε. Mk softens the harshness, Lk. gets rid of it.

[1961] In vii. 23 "If a man (ἄνθρωπος) receiveth circumcision on the sabbath," W.H. have [ὁ] ἄνθρωπος, and B inserts ὁ. But the high authority of B is weakened as regards the article by the fact that it makes frequent mistakes (2650—2) about ο and the similar letter c, e.g. v. 7 προεμοῦ for προεμοῦ, vi. 19 ωσταδιοῦς for ωσσταδιοῦς, vii. 38 εἰεμε for εἰεμε, and even vii. 43 cχιμα for cχιμα (where, as in vii. 23, the error of insertion or omission could not arise from the juxtaposition of similar letters). Possibly in vii. 23 the scribe of B may have referred to the previous words ("and on the sabbath ye circumcise a man") and he may have supposed the text to proceed, "if the man [just mentioned]...." In any case "man" is as emphatic here as it is in Mark's statement "The man is not made for the sabbath"; and the emphasis is illustrated by vii. 22 "On the sabbath ye circumcise a man." "A man" might have been omitted if emphasis had not required it. But the argument is: "You do not hesitate to break the sabbath by circumcising a human being. If human beings on the sabbath are allowed to receive this partial purification, are ye angry with me for having made a whole human being (ὅλον ἄνθρωπον) sound on the sabbath?" The plea is, in behalf of humanity, for a humane judgment ("judge righteous judgment"). And the whole passage illustrates the use of ἄνθρωπος alleged above (1934—5) to mean "human being" in connexion with Abraham whose "love of men" is eulogized by Philo.

(5) "Mountain"

[1962] In Genesis (xix. 17) (LXX) "Look not behind thee nor stand in any of the surrounding country (τῇ περιχώρῳ), escape into the mountain," the context defines "the mountain" as the mountainous country near Sodom. So in Mark, before the Choosing of the Twelve, (iii. 13) "he goeth up into the mountain," is defined by the previous mention of (iii. 7) "the sea"—presumably the sea of Galilee—as being the mountainous country near the sea of Galilee¹: but the parallel Luke (vi. 12) "he went forth into the mountain to pray" is not defined by anything—unless we suppose it to follow closely on Christ's teaching in (vi. 6) "the synagogue," and assume this to mean the synagogue of Capernaum, so that "the mountain" means "the mountainous country" near that city. In Mark and Matthew

¹ Τὸ ὄρος means "the mountain," or "the mountainous country," defined by something implied or expressed, like "the Highlands," "the Lakes."

Christ's going "into the mountain to pray," after the Feeding of the Five Thousand, follows a previous mention of going in "a boat," presumably on the sea of Galilee¹. In the story of the Gerasene demoniac, "the mountain" is also defined (in Mark and Luke) by a previous mention of "the sea," or "sailing," as well as by "Gerasa²." When the Transfiguration is described, Mark and Matthew speak of "a high mountain"³ (as also does Matthew in the Temptation⁴) but Luke has "He went up into the mountain to pray⁵."

[1963] A review of the contexts of the passages in which Mark mentions "the mountain" makes it probable that he uses the phrase to mean the mountainous country in view of Capernaum—not that which was actually nearest to the city on the west of the Lake, but that which lay on the east of the Lake. The former, though near, could not be seen by the citizens of Capernaum who lived under it, so to speak: the latter, being constantly visible to them, might naturally be called "the mountain." This is not always clear in the Synoptists. But John defines the position thus in the only passages in which "the mountain" is used by him absolutely, vi. 1—15 "Jesus went away on the other side of the sea of Galilee....Now Jesus came up into the mountain....he withdrew again into the mountain." Luke makes no mention of "the mountain" in connexion with the Feeding of the Five Thousand, Mark and Matthew mention it once, John mentions it twice. It is a case where Luke omits and John intervenes.

(6) "Only begotten"

[1964] i. 18 "No man hath seen God at any time. Only begotten (Μονογενής), God, HE THAT IS in the bosom of the Father,—he hath declared him." Under the head of Apposition (1938) reasons have been given for punctuating as above, and for regarding "Only begotten," "God," and "HE THAT IS" (ὁ ὢν qualified by "in the bosom of the Father") as three titles of the Logos. The Greeks, and Philo (the Jewish interpreter of Greek philosophy) called God "that which is," τὸ ὄν, neuter. John adopts the Apocalyptic phrase "He that is," ὁ ὢν⁶, so as to make God a Person, not a thing. He then adds "in the bosom of the Father" to indicate

¹ Mk vi. 46 "went away to pray," Mt. xiv. 23 "went up to pray," following Mk vi. 32, Mt. xiv. 13.

² Mk v. 11, Lk. viii. 32, following Mk v. 1, Lk. viii. 26.

⁶ Rev. i. 4, 8 etc.

a Person, in whom the defining characteristic is not strength or wisdom but filial union with a Father. Thus an expression implying both paternal and filial love closes the list of titles and descriptions of the Logos enumerated in the Prologue. In the last three of these titles, the first place is given to "Only begotten," which, both in Greek and Hebrew—owing to the connexion between an only Son and a beloved son (803)—implied "beloved Son." It is not likely that John meant us to render the word "an only begotten," any more than to render θεός, "a God." As a Christian would not render Χριστός "an Anointed," but "the Anointed," or "Christ," so John intends us to render Μονογενής, "the only begotten," or else, as a proper name, Monogenes, i.e. "Only begotten." The alterations of this text are numerous and natural as John has strained to the utmost the elastic Greek language to express briefly the intensity of his conviction that the Father is known only through the Son.

(7) "Prophet"

[1965] In i. 21 "Art thou the prophet?" A.V. has "that prophet," apparently (unless "that" is "ille" as in 1 K. xviii. 7 (A.V.)) regarding it as a repetition of the previous question "Art thou Elijah?" Origen, with more probability, supposes it to refer to the "prophet" mentioned in Deuteronomy xviii. 15, 18, whom the Jews (825) seem not to have identified with the Messiah, although the prophet is thus identified in Acts iii. 22.

(8) "Teacher [of Israel]"

[1966] iii. 10 "Thou art the teacher of Israel (ὁ δ. τοῦ Ἰ.) and knowest not these things!" is probably ironical, meaning "the [well-known] teacher." That John would not indiscriminately insert and omit the article in such phrases, may be inferred from his general carefulness and subtlety in linguistic discrimination and, in particular, from i. 49 "thou art the Son of God, thou art King of Israel," the utterance of Nathanael, as compared with xii. 13 "the king of Israel," the utterance of the crowd, in the Entry into Jerusalem. "The Son of God" reigns over, or is "king of," all the nations of the earth including Israel. David, or Hezekiah, or a merely Jewish Messiah, might naturally be called "the king of Israel," i.e. the king for the time being. Nathanael is made to utter a confession much more inclusive than that of "the great multitude¹."

(iii) Before Names

[1967] The article before a name may mean (1) "the [above-mentioned]," (2) "the [well-known]." This leaves room for great variety of usage in different writers, and even in the same writer (when writing in different moods). Mark is singularly consistent in his use of the article with the nominative, "Jesus." He omits it in the first mention of the name (i. 9) but never again, except in the phrase (x. 47) "Jesus the Nazarene"—where custom requires its omission as the name is defined by "the Nazarene." Matthew and Luke omit the article at first, but omit it also (with the non-predicative nominative) in about five and eight instances, severally, later on (besides the parallel to Mk x. 47).

[1968] In John—excluding such instances as "Jesus the Nazarene" and others where we might expect omission—we find the article omitted about sixty-five times¹. With λέγει, John, more often than not, has ὁ Ἰησ., but he has ἀπεκρίθη Ἰησ. about twenty-two times and ἀπεκρίθη ὁ Ἰησ. only once for certain². In phrases with ἀπεκρίθη and names, the LXX regularly omits the article. John may have been influenced, in using this word, by LXX usage, while, in the use of λέγει, he follows Greek usage. With indeclinable names, case-inflexions are sometimes indicated by the article for the apparent purpose of clearness; and perhaps it is sometimes inserted in accordance with an unconscious sense of rhythm so as to avoid monotony in the long dialogues that characterize the Fourth Gospel.

[1969] John's general rule is to introduce a personal name uniquely, the name given to the sovereign of the East, and ὁ βασιλεύς, "the king" of this or that barbarous tribe. There is perhaps an inner evangelistic meaning in the protest³ of the priests, xix. 21 "Write not, 'the king of the Jews,' but that 'He said, I am king of the Jews (β. τῶν Ἰ. ἐμῶν)," besides some allusiveness to the Synoptic differences concerning the inscription. See 2669.

¹ [1968 a] The statistics are doubtful owing to the similarity of ο to c and the weakness of codex B on this point (1961 and 2650—2). But 65 is probably the minimum.

² [1968 δ] vi. 29. In iii. 5, xviii. 37, W.H. have [ὁ]. On the other hand where αὐτοῖς is inserted after ἀπεκρίθη we often find ὁ or [ὁ] before Ἰησοῦς. Perhaps where αὐτοῖς or αὐτῷ is inserted, referring back to the person spoken to, a corresponding ὁ is more often inserted to refer back to Jesus.

[1968 ε] Johannine variations may be illustrated by the use of "John (the Baptist)" which occurs with article (13), without (5), doubtful (1). Contrast i. 28 ἐν Β...δπου ἦν ὁ Ἰ. βαπτίζων (where there has been much said about John in context) with x. 40 εἰς τὸν τόπον δπου ἦν Ἰ. τὸ πρῶτον βαπτίζων.

*without the article*¹, and there appear only three or four exceptions to this. One is "Pilate" in xviii. 29 "There went out therefore the [governor] Pilate," and this may be paralleled by Luke's first mention of him in the Passion, "they led him to the [governor] Pilate," where Mark has no article ("they delivered him up to Pilate") and Matthew "they delivered him up to Pilate the governor"².

[1970] The other exceptions are indeclinable nouns: i. 43—5 "He findeth Philip...now the [aforesaid] Philip was from Bethsaida... Philip findeth (lit.) the Nathanael (τὸν Ναθαναήλ)." Here "Philip" is introduced, according to rule, without the article; "Nathanael," against the rule, with the article: i. 45 "We have found Jesus, (lit.) a son of the Joseph ('Ι. υἱὸν τοῦ Ἰωσήφ)." Contrast this with vi. 42 "Is not this Jesus, the [well-known] son of Joseph ('Ι. ὁ υἱὸς Ἰωσήφ)?" In iv. 5 "the well that Jacob gave to [the] Joseph his son," the reading is doubtful, and W.H. bracket τῷ Ἰωσήφ is shewn to be dative by υἱῷ αὐτοῦ, but the article conduces to immediate clearness. If "Nathanael" were not indeclinable, we might suppose the article to imply distinction such as is implied in the words of the Lord ("Behold an Israelite indeed"), but can this be the meaning of the article just afterwards ("a son of the Joseph"), and does it seem likely that John would speak of anyone as distinguished ("the [great] Nathanael") when describing his first approach to Jesus?³

² [1969 b] Jn xviii. 29, Lk. xxiii. 1, Mk xv. 1, Mt. xxvii. 2. Mk subsequently has ὁ Π. invariably, Mt. has it except in xxvii. 62 (pec.). Lk. has it exc. in xxiii. 6, 13, 24. Jn has ὁ Π. 19 times, and once, according to W.H., (xviii. 31) simply Π. Probably W.H. are wrong in following B here, especially as ο may have been omitted after the preceding c in ΔΥΤΟΙC (1961, 2650—2).

³ [1970 a] Possibly i. 45 υἱὸν τοῦ Ἰωσήφ may shew traces of some tradition about "the carpenter Joseph," and the evangelist may intend a contrast between the beginning of the Gospel (when Jesus was described as υἱ. τοῦ Ἰωσήφ) and the development of the Gospel (after which Jesus was described as ὁ υἱ. Ἰωσήφ).

[1970 b] The article before names of persons introduced for the first time is rare in LXX; but it occurs in 2 K. xxii. 3 to represent eth, the sign of the objective case, before "Shaphan...the scribe." The parall. 2 Chr. xxxiv. 8 has eth, but LXX omits τὸν. For the article with names of places, see 2670 foll.

(iv) With Participle and "is" or "are"

[1971] In the Synoptists, this construction is comparatively rare, e.g. "Who is it that smote thee (τίς ἐστιν ὁ παίσας σε)¹?", "These are *they that were sown*²," "These are the things that defile (ταῦτά ἐστιν τὰ κοινούντα) the man³," "Who is it [really] that gave (τίς ἐστιν ὁ δούς) thee this authority⁴?" In the last instance, the parallel Mark and Matthew have "Who gave thee?" The construction with the article assumes the existence of some person or thing defined as doing something. Isaiah writes, "There is at hand one-justifying-me," LXX renders this, "There is at hand he that justified me (ὁ δικαίωσας με)." Isaiah proceeds, "Who will contend against me?" varying the construction. But LXX does not vary it, "Who is he that contendeth with me (τίς ὁ κρινόμενός μοι)?" The Epistle to the Romans loosely follows LXX "God [is] he that justifieth: who is *he that shall condemn*⁵?" In classical Greek it is necessary to insert the article in representing the Hebrew "one justifying me." If ὁ were omitted above before δικαίωσας, the meaning of the Greek would be "he is at hand, having justified me⁶."

[1972] Whereas Luke scarcely ever uses this construction in the Words of the Lord⁷, John uses it frequently as follows (1) v. 31—2 "If I be testifying about myself my witness is not true. Another is [really] he that testifieth (ἄλλος ἐστὶν ὁ μαρτυρῶν) concerning

² [1971 a] Mk iv. 16—20, Mt. xiii. 19—23, comp. Lk. viii. 12, 14, the explanation of the Sower.

³ [1971 b] Mt. xv. 20 (? Mk vii. 15), not in Lk. Mt. also has this construction in iii. 3 οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ῥηθεῖς.

⁴ Lk. x. 2 parall. Mk xi. 28, Mt. xxi. 23 τίς σοι ἔδωκεν;

⁵ Rom. viii. 34 (quoting Is. l. 8) θεὸς ὁ δικαίων, τίς ὁ κατακρινῶν;

[1971 d] In classical Greek prose it would probably be hard to find an instance of ἐστὶ and a participle, without ὁ, meaning e.g. "is scattering"—unless the meaning were "is really scattering." The instances given by Jelf § 376. 4 are mostly from poetry and not in the present. Plat. Legg. 860 E (and Demosth. p. 853. 29) ταῦτα οὕτως ἔχοντά ἐστιν means "these things are really so."

me...,” and then Jesus goes on to say that this “Testifier” is not the Baptist, nor even the works that He Himself does, but the Father, invisible to those whom He is addressing. Ἄλλος ὁ μαρτυρῶν would have sufficed (like St Paul’s θεὸς ὁ δικαιοῶν) if the meaning of “is” were not intended to be emphatic. The meaning really is twofold (1) “Another and distinct from myself is he that testifieth,” (2) “Another [really] exists [whose existence ye perceive not], namely, he that testifieth.” The first is expressed, the second is suggested. Ἄλλος means “another [of the same kind]” (2675—7).

[1973] (2) v. 45 “Do not imagine that I (emph.) (ἐγώ) will accuse you to the Father. There is [indeed] (ἔστιν) he that accuseth you, [namely] Moses..., i.e. “The very person to whom you look for testimony in your behalf (because you claim to be observing his law) is all the while testifying against you¹.”

[1974] (3) vi. 33 “For the bread of God is [not a thing of the past but of the present] the [one] that is ever descending from heaven and offering life to the world².” Here comes into play the ambiguity (comp. 1957 δ) sometimes inherent in ὁ with the participle, since it may refer to the masculine noun last mentioned, namely “bread,” or “loaf,” ἄρτος “the loaf of God is the [loaf] that is descending.” And this the Jews take to be the meaning, for they proceed to ask “Give us evermore this bread.” But Jesus replies “I am the bread of life.” Ἐστίν is not here so emphatic as in the last instance: but the context indicates that stress is being laid on the difference between the manna—a detail of the historic past—and the ever present, ever descending, bread of life. It is probable that John intends “the [one] that is ever descending” to mean the Man, quite as much as the Bread, or, primarily, the Man, and secondarily, the Man regarded as the Bread.

[1975] (4) vi. 63 “The spirit is that which giveth life (τὸ πνεῦμά ἐστιν τὸ ζωοποιῶν), the flesh doth not profit at all³.” The words

² [1974 a] A.V. “the bread of God is he which,” R.V. “that which,” ὁ γὰρ ἄρτος τοῦ θεοῦ ἐστίν ὁ καταβαλὼν.

might mean: "The Spirit (i.e. the Holy Spirit) is [distinguished from all other spirits by being] the [spirit] that giveth life," repeating πνεῦμα after ζωοποιεῖν: and it may be fairly argued that similarly R.V. (against A.V.) has repeated ἄpros in the passage last quoted ("the loaf is the [loaf] that descends"). But in that instance there was perhaps a deliberate ambiguity, and possibly the primary meaning did not require the repetition. Here there is no question of any distinction between one spirit and another, but only between "the spirit" and "the flesh."

[1976] The words are of very great difficulty owing to the different meanings that may be attached, not only to them (taken by themselves) but also to their context (2210 foll.). One meaning may be "It is the spiritual part of man that must give vitality to all doctrine by receiving it spiritually," as St Paul says¹, and this suits the antithesis of "the flesh." But we have to bear in mind that (1) the phrase "life-giving spirit" is rare, (2) it occurs here in connexion with a preceding mention of "the Son of man ascending" and it is followed by a mention of "words" that are "life," (3) in N.T. elsewhere it occurs twice: "The letter killeth, *the spirit giveth life*²," "The last Adam [became] *a life-giving spirit*³," (4) the verb occurs twice in John elsewhere concerning the Father, who "giveth life" and the Son who "*giveth life*⁴." In the light of these facts does it seem likely that John would use the phrase "give life" concerning the Spirit of man? Would he not more probably use it of the Spirit of Christ, "the last Adam," the Son of Man in heaven? If so, the meaning here would seem to be, "the Spirit [of the Son] is that which giveth life⁵."

³ 1 Cor. xv. 45.

⁴ Jn v. 21 (hēs).

⁵ [1976 a] Perhaps there is a play on the word "spirit" as meaning also "breath" in Hebrew and Greek, that cannot well be reproduced in English. As there is a spirit that gives life beneath the letter that killeth, so there is a spirit that gives life beneath words that (taken literally) may "kill." The disciples of Jesus have to go back beyond the sound of His uttered words to the breath, spirit, or personality, that uttered them. Compared with the inner meaning, breath, or "spirit," of a word, the outward meaning or sound may be called its "flesh." "The words that I have spoken to you," says our Lord, "they are spirit and they are life, because they have not been mere 'flesh words,' or external sounds, but have passed, breathing life, into your spirits." And accordingly Peter says (vi. 68) "Thou hast words of eternal life."

[1977] Some such thought appears to have been in the mind of the originator of the version in SS, "He [i.e. the Son of Man] is the Spirit that giveth life to the body." He arrives at this by repeating "Son of Man" as the subject of "is," by taking τὸ π. τὸ ζ. as "the Spirit that giveth life," and by altering the subsequent words. The version may be of value as testifying to a very early interpretation connecting "giving life" to the dead with "giving life" to words, and both of these with the Son of man.

[1978] (5) viii. 50—1 "I honour my Father and ye dishonour me. But I seek not my own glory; there is [indeed] he that seeketh and judgeth (ἔστιν ὁ ζητῶν καὶ κρίνων)," i.e. as explained above (1971—3) "there is, all the while, though ye know it not." And the "judging" is regarded as going on (iii. 18) "already." Later on it is said (xii. 48) "He that is rejecting me and not receiving my words (ῥήματά μου) hath him that judgeth him (ἔχει τὸν κρίνοντα αὐτόν)," where a clause in the future follows: "The word (λόγος) that I spake—that (ἐκείνος) shall judge him in the last day." The Logos is judging now, and the judgment will be summed up hereafter.

[1979] (6) viii. 54 "If I (emph.) should glorify myself, my glory is nothing. It is [indeed] my Father that is glorifying me, of whom ye (emph.) say that he is your God, and [yet] ye have not recognised him; but I know him¹." Here the context indicates that the emphatic "is," expressed by ἔστιν at the beginning of a sentence, describes an action going on in the presence of men ignorant both of the action and of the agent. The "glorifying" is manifested by the works that the Son receives from the Father to do in the presence of men.

[1980] (7) xiv. 21 "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it [really] is that loveth me (ἐκεῖνός ἐστιν ὁ ἀγαπῶν με)." This follows xiv. 15 "If ye be loving me ye will keep my commandments," and it adds, in effect, "If ye keep them, then, and only then, will ye be really loving me," or, in the third person, "He that keeps them, he and he alone, is really loving me¹."

[1981] Besides occurring in the Words of Jesus, this construction is found in the words of the Baptist and other speakers. Thus, whereas the Synoptists represent the Baptist as saying concerning the future Messiah "He shall baptize you," John gives the words as "He it is that is baptizing you"²: and the Jews and others also speak thus³. But the phrase appears to have commended itself to the evangelist as especially suited to the Logos, who Himself sees everything, and describes it to others, as it really is, going on visibly before His eyes, though not before theirs.

(v) With Non-Possessive Adjectives⁴

[1982] The reduplication of the article changing a noun-adjective phrase, e.g. (1) "the third day" to (2) "the day the third," adds weight and emphasis to the adjective. In Christ's predictions of the Resurrection Matthew always gives the former: Luke, in the parallel to one of these, gives the latter. The latter is also used in the formal and traditional enumeration of the appearances of Christ after death in the First Epistle to the Corinthians⁵. The Revelation has the former in speaking of "the third living creature," or "the third angel"; but in more solemn phrases we find "he opened the seal the third," "the woe the third cometh quickly"⁶.

[1983] In the Synoptists, the reduplication—apart from words of Christ and the Voice from Heaven ("My Son my beloved")—

¹ [1980 a] Other instances of δ with the participle and $\acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}$ are iv. 10 "If thou hadst known who it [really] is that saith unto thee ($\tau\acute{\iota}\varsigma \acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\nu \delta \lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\omega\nu \sigma\omicron\iota$)...", iv. 37 $\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\omicron\varsigma \acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\nu \delta \sigma\pi\epsilon\acute{\iota}\rho\omega\nu \kappa\alpha\iota \acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\omicron\varsigma \delta \theta\epsilon\rho\acute{\iota}\xi\omega\nu$ where $\delta \sigma\pi\epsilon\acute{\iota}\rho\omega\nu$ and $\delta \theta\epsilon\rho\acute{\iota}\xi\omega\nu$ are, in effect, nouns. In ix. 37 $\kappa\alpha\iota \acute{\epsilon}\omega\rho\alpha\kappa\alpha\varsigma \alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\nu \kappa\alpha\iota \delta \lambda\alpha\lambda\omega\nu \mu\epsilon\tau\grave{\alpha} \sigma\omicron\upsilon \acute{\epsilon}\kappa\epsilon\acute{\iota}\nu\omicron\varsigma \acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\nu$, the subject is $\delta \lambda\alpha\lambda\omega\nu$, and $\acute{\epsilon}\kappa\epsilon\acute{\iota}\nu\omicron\varsigma$ is not (as mostly) repetitive but means "that very Son of Man about whom you ask 'Who is he?' as though he were far off."

² Jn i. 33, Mk i. 8, Mt. iii. 11, Lk. iii. 16.

³ Jn v. 12 "Who is the man that said...?" v. 15 "...that Jesus was (lit. is) he that had made him whole," xxi. 20 "Who is he that is to deliver thee up?"

is very rarely used, except in a few special phrases. Lk. ii. 7 has "her Son her firstborn"; Mark has often, and Luke twice (viii. 29, ix. 42) "the spirit the unclean"; Luke has (i. 26) "the month the sixth" (ii. 26, iii. 22, also Mk iii. 29, xiii. 11, Mt. xii. 32) "the Spirit the Holy¹."

[1984] John, as a rule, reduplicates the article only in utterances of the Lord or in weighty sayings about Him, as in the Prologue, "This was the light, the true [light]²." In the less weighty clauses of the Lord's utterances he does not reduplicate it, as in "the true worshippers³," contrasted with "I am the Vine the true [vine]⁴."

[1985] One or two perplexing instances of reduplication in John may be perhaps explained by a desire to suggest to the reader some latent thought, as when he says that Andrew "findeth first his brother his own [brother] Simon⁵." Here the evangelist is supposed to mean that Andrew's unnamed companion also found his brother, James the son of Zebedee, but not till Andrew had "first" found Simon. Antithesis is certainly expressed elsewhere in "his name his own [name]⁶," "his glory his own [glory]⁷." In "the day the third [day]" at Cana—if the text is correct—there is perhaps a mystical meaning⁸. In "the five loaves the barley [loaves]⁹" and "the ear the right [ear]" of Malchus¹⁰, symbolism may be latent, apart from the fact that (comp. 1983 a) John is adding details not mentioned by Mark and Matthew¹¹.

¹¹ [1985 b] In xviii. 17, the person previously described as (xviii. 16) "She that kept the door," is now called "the 'maid,' she that kept the door." This is probably not emphasis but afterthought; the evangelist wishes to retain the old Synoptic tradition that the Apostle was confused and abashed by a mere "maid," whom he had previously described as "she that kept the door." The meaning, then, is, "The maid, she [whom I described above as the one] that kept the door."

[1986] The following are the instances in Greek :

(α) i. 9 Ἦν τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινόν. Comp. vi. 32 τὸν ἄρτον ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ τὸν ἀληθινόν, xv. 1 ἡ ἄμπελος ἡ ἀληθινή. Contrast iv. 23 οἱ ἀληθινοὶ προσκυνηταί. See above (1984).

Contrast iv. 44 ἐν τῇ ἰδίᾳ πατρὶδι, x. 3 τὰ ἴδια πρόβατα, where there is no expressed antithesis. In the latter, there is no antithesis till x. 12.

(γ) ii. 1 τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ τρίτῃ γάμος ἐγένετο, but marg. τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ (1982 b).

(δ) In iii. 16, τὸν υἱὸν τὸν μονογενῆ, "He gave his only begotten son," the adj. is more emphatic than in iii. 18 τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ μονογενοῦς υἱοῦ τοῦ θεοῦ, "because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God," where "God" attracts much of the emphasis.

(ε) iv. 9 ἡ γυνή ἡ Σαμαρεῖτις (the context lays stress on her Samaritan origin, "from me being a woman that is a Samaritan").

(ζ) vi. 13 ἐκ τῶν πέντε ἄρτων τῶν κριθίνων, "from the five loaves—that were, as I have said, of barley." This detail is not given by the Synoptists (1985).

(θ) xviii. 10 τὸ ὠτάριον τὸ δεξιόν (1985).

(ι) xviii. 16 ὁ μαθητὴς ὁ ἄλλος ὁ γνωστὸς τοῦ ἀρχ. (? distinguished from Peter, who was not "an acquaintance of the High Priest"). Contrast xx. 2, 3, 4, 8 ὁ ἄλλος μ., xx. 25, xxi. 8 οἱ ἄλλοι μ.

(κ) xviii. 17 ἡ παιδίσκη ἡ θυρωρός (called previously (xviii. 16) "the door-keeper" (fem.), and now, "the maid that [as I said] was doorkeeper").

(vi) With Possessive Adjectives

[1987] The adjective is frequently possessive, and, in that case, is almost always accompanied by a reduplicated article. Instances are given below in Greek. The student will find in almost every case that the phrase with the reduplicated article, e.g. x. 26—7 "the sheep that are my own (τὰ π. τὰ ἐμά) hearken to my voice," lays more stress on the owner than is laid in the phrase with the possessive genitive xxi. 16—17 "feed my sheep (τὰ π. μου)." The "love" of Christ is to be regarded as unique, and the command to "love one another" with that kind of love is a "new commandment," which our Lord might call His own special commandment. Hence He says, xiv. 15, "If ye love me, ye will keep my own [special] commandments (τὰς ἐ. τὰς ἐμάς)." But this is followed by an unemphatic repetition of the clause because the emphasis is to be thrown on something else, xiv. 21 "He that hath my commandments (τὰς ἐ. μου) and keepeth them—he it is that really loveth me." So the emphatic is followed by the unemphatic in xv. 9—10 "Abide in my [special] love (ἐν τῇ ἀ. τῇ ἐμῇ)...If ye keep my commandments ye will abide in my love (ἐν τῇ ἀ. μου)," where the last words amount to little more than, "Ye will do this." On the other hand, the unemphatic is followed by the emphatic in xv. 10—12, "If ye keep my commandments (τὰς ἐ. μου)...this is my [special] commandment (ἡ ἐ. ἡ ἐμή) that ye love one another even as I have loved you." Here, as often elsewhere, an if-clause, being less emphatic than a predicate, expresses ownership in the unemphatic form.

(α) iii. 29 αὐτῇ οὖν ἡ χαρὰ ἡ ἐμὴ πεπληρωται. There is harmony, not antithesis, between "my [own] joy" and "your joy" in xv. 11 ἵνα ἡ χαρὰ ἡ ἐμὴ ἐν ὑμῖν ᾗ καὶ ἡ χαρὰ ὑμῶν πληρωθῇ. Ὑμέτερος (1774) is very rare. Comp. xvi. 22, 24, τὴν χαρὰν ὑμῶν and xvii. 13 ἵνα ἔχωσιν τὴν χαρὰν τὴν ἐμὴν πεπληρωμένην ἐν ἑαυτοῖς.

(β) v. 30, viii. 16, ἡ κρίσις ἡ ἐμὴ δικαία (ἀληθινή) ἐστίν.

(γ) v. 30, vi. 38, τὸ θέλημα τὸ ἐμόν (antithesis in context).

(δ) vii. 6 ὁ καιρὸς ὁ ἐμός...ὁ δὲ καιρὸς ὁ ὑμέτερος (antithesis). On repetition the writer (1987) adopts the less emphatic form vii. 8 ὁ ἐμὸς καιρὸς.

(ε) viii. 17 καὶ ἐν τῷ νόμῳ δὲ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ, "yea, and even in your very own law." There is no antithesis but very strong emphasis. Contrast vii. 51, x. 34, xviii. 31, ὁ νόμος ὑμῶν (ἡμῶν).

(ζ) viii. 31 ἐὰν ὑμεῖς μείνητε ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τῷ ἐμῷ, 37 ὁ λόγος ὁ ἐμός οὐ χωρεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν, 43 τὸν λόγον τὸν ἐμόν, xvii. 17 ὁ λόγος ὁ σός. Contrast v. 24 τὸν λόγον μου, viii. 51 τὸν ἐμόν λόγον, 52 τὸν λόγον μου, xiv. 23 τὸν λόγον μου, 24 τοὺς λόγους μου, xvii. 6 τὸν λόγον σου, 14 τὸν λόγον σου.

(η) viii. 43 τὴν λαλίαν τὴν ἐμήν. Contrast iv. 42 τὴν σὴν λαλίαν (marg. τὴν λαλιάν σου).

(θ) viii. 56 τὴν ἡμέραν τὴν ἐμήν, emphatic in a Messianic sense.

(ι) x. 26, 27 τὰ πρόβατα τὰ ἐμά emph. Contrast xxi. 16, 17 τὰ προβάτιά μου.

(κ) xii. 26 ὁ διάκονος ὁ ἐμός, "my own [true] minister."

(λ) xiv. 15 τὰς ἐντολὰς τὰς ἐμὰς, xv. 12 ἡ ἐντολὴ ἡ ἐμή. See 1987 and contrast xiv. 21, xv. 10 τὰς ἐντολὰς μου.

(μ) xv. 9 μέινετε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ τῇ ἐμῇ, (ιβ. 10) μενεῖτε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ μου (see 1987).

(ν) xvii. 24 τὴν δόξαν τὴν ἐμήν. Contrast viii. 50, 54 ἡ δόξα μου.

(ξ) xviii. 35 τὸ ἔθνος τὸ σόν (contemptuously emphatic on the part of Pilate).

(ο) xviii. 36 ἡ βασιλεία ἡ ἐμή (bis)...οἱ ὑπηρέται οἱ ἐμοί. There is antithesis implied between "my own kingdom" and kingdoms derived "from this world," and the same applies to "my own officers (1388 a)."

[1989] The non-reduplicated article before a possessive adjective is rare, but occurs as follows: iv. 42 οὐ διὰ τὴν σὴν λαλίαν (marg. τὴν λαλίαν σου) fairly emphatic, being antithetic to an implied "because of our own hearing," v. 47 τοῖς ἐμοῖς ῥήμασιν, antithetic to τοῖς ἐκείνου γράμμασιν. In vii. 8 ὁ ἐμὸς καιρὸς occurs after an emphatic (vii. 6) ὁ καιρὸς ὁ ἐμός. The non-reduplicated form (though more emphatic than ὁ καιρὸς μου would have been) is probably not so emphatic as the reduplicated. In vii. 16 ἡ ἐμὴ διδαχὴ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμή, "that which is [in one sense] my teaching is [in another sense] not [really] mine," the first ἐμή is moderately emphatic. In viii. 51 τὸν ἐμὸν λόγον, "if anyone keep my word," the emphasis is moderate. This construction seems to indicate an emphasis greater than that of the possessive pronoun but less than that of the possessive adjective with the reduplicated article. As regards xiv. 27 εἰρήνην τὴν ἐμήν, which must be taken with its context, see 1993.

(vii) Omitted, or misplaced

[1990], In xi. 19 "Now many of the Jews had come to Martha and Mary (πρὸς τὴν Μάρθαν καὶ Μαριάμ) to comfort them (αὐτάς) concerning their brother (περὶ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ)," we should have expected τὴν either to be omitted before Μάρθαν, or, if not, to be repeated before Μαριάμ. D omits it before Μάρθαν: A has "to the household (πρὸς τὰς περὶ) of M. and M.," and so too has C³ (περη): SS (Burk.) has "went forth to Beth Ania that they might comfort Martha and Mary," omitting "concerning their brother." The facts indicate that "the Martha-and-Mary" was felt by some scribes to be a combination intended to mean "the household" of the two sisters, and hence they (perhaps influenced also by the proximity of [αὐ]τὰς περὶ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ [?taken as an error for "the household of the deceased brother,

τ. π. τὸν ἀδελφόν]) substituted τὰς περὶ for τήν. The reading of SS suggests that the translator took [αὐ]τὰς περὶ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ to mean "Martha and Mary," as being "the household of the brother (Lazarus)." "To Beth Ania" may have been supplied by SS for sense or may be a further error arising out of "household," confused by SS with "house," Beth.

[1991] The best Greek mss. have probably preserved the correct text, the intention of the writer being to represent, by the unusual omission of the article, that Martha and Mary now made up one household, of which Martha was the leader. Comp. 1 Thess. i. 7—8 ἐν τῇ Μακ. καὶ ἐν τῇ Ἀχ....ἐν τῇ Μ. καὶ Ἀχ. (R.V.) "an ensample to all that believe in M. and in A.....not only in M. and A. but in every place" (A.V. (bis) "in M. and A.")—where the article is omitted in the second clause, partly because one abbreviates in repetition, but more because there is, in the second clause, an antithesis between "M. and A." (as being one place)¹, and "every [other] place."

[1992] xii. 9—12 (W.H.) ἔγνω οὖν ὁ ὄχλος πολλὸς ἐκ τῶν Ἰουδαίων.... Τῇ ἐπαύριον ὁ ὄχλος πολλὸς ὁ ἐλθὼν εἰς τὴν ἑορτήν is uncertain owing to the variation of mss. But it has been suggested above (1739—40) that it is written with allusion to Mk xii. 37 ὁ πολλὸς ὄχλος, and that John took advantage of some irregular expression in ancient tradition, in order to shew that he regards the phrase as meaning, not "the illiterate rabble," but "the multitude in full force."

[1993] In xiv. 27 εἰρήνην ἀφίημι ὑμῖν, εἰρήνην τὴν ἐμὴν δίδωμι ὑμῖν, if Jn had written, in the second clause, τὴν ἐ. τ. ἐμὴν, the article would have suggested, for the moment, a reference to the ἐ. in the first clause ("the peace just mentioned"). Instead of that, the writer breaks off to indicate that it is something more than the common kind of peace: "Peace I leave unto you. Peace [do I say? nay, a new kind of peace] the [peace] that is mine I give you." In this special context the phrase with the single article conveys even more emphasis than the phrase with the article doubled.

[1994] In iv. 34 ἐμὸν βρῶμά ἐστιν ἵνα ποιήσω... we ought not to say that the article is omitted but rather that the predicate is placed before the subject¹. The words might have run otherwise, "To do the will of the Father—that is food for me (or, my food)." But the disciples were saying to themselves, in effect, "What is his food?" ("Hath any man brought him aught to eat?"). And Jesus answers their implied question by putting it foremost in His reply, because it is foremost in their thoughts: "My food, you ask: What is my food? it is to do the Father's will." The subject of the sentence is the subject of Christ's thought, namely, doing the Father's will².

(viii) With Infinitive

[1995] The Article with the Infinitive is almost non-occurrent in John. Its rarity deserves notice as being in striking contrast with its frequency in Luke, in whom alone there are more instances than in the other three Gospels together³.

ASYNDETON

(i) Johannine use of

[1996] A sentence in Greek is mostly connected with the preceding one by some conjunction. This has the disadvantage of sometimes defining rather narrowly the relation between one thought and another: and a foreigner, writing Greek without a native knowledge of its conjunctions, might define the relation wrongly. But it has great advantages, especially for readers of an ancient Greek MS.—written before punctuation had been introduced. For it often helps us to discern the beginning of a sentence. From the want of such a conjunction springs the ambiguity noted by R.V. marg. in the words "Without him was not made anything. That which (ὃ)

² [1994 b] In Jn iv. 43 (R.V.) "after the two days," A.V. has omitted "the." It refers to iv. 40 "they besought him to abide with them and he abode there two days," and it means that He abode there those two days and no more. In Jn xviii. 3 (R.V.) "the band (marg. cohort)," A.V. ("a band") has missed the reference to "the band" that regularly kept guard in the fortress called Antonia.

hath been made," where many have taken the meaning to be (as R.V. text) "anything that hath been made¹."

[1997] The omission of the conjoining words commonly called conjunctions is called "Asyndeton," i.e. "not fastened together." John abounds in instances of asyndeton of the most varied and unexpected kind, too numerous to quote, especially with an initial verb ("[There] cometh Mary," "[There] findeth Philip Nathanael" etc.); with any form of the pronoun "this"; with the conjunctions "if" and "even as"; with an adverbial phrase ("in him was light"); with a participle with the article ("he that believeth (ὁ πιστεύων)," or sometimes "everyone that (πᾶς ὁ) believeth"). Sentences frequently begin abruptly with "now" or "already," or with the emphatic "I" or "ye," expressed by Greek pronouns, which would not be inserted if emphasis were not intended. There is hardly any part of speech, or word, that might not come at the beginning of a Johannine sentence without a conjunction, e.g. "Because I live ye shall live also," "Excommunicated shall they make you²."

[1998] The contrast in the use of asyndeton between the Fourth Gospel and the Three is well illustrated by what the evangelists place severally after the statement of the Baptist that he baptizes with water :

Mk i. 8	Mt. iii. 11	Lk. iii. 16	Jn i. 26
"I baptized you with water, but he shall baptize (δέ)..."	"I on the one hand (μέν) bap- tize you in water to re- pentance, but he that(ὁ δέ)..."	"I on the one hand (μέν) bap- tize you with water, but there cometh (δέ)..."	"I baptize in water : midst of you stand- eth (μέσος ὑμῶν στήκει) one..."

[1999] Under the head of "Conjunctions, καθώς," instances will be found where the absence of a γάρ, δέ, or καί, makes it difficult to tell whether καθώς is to be taken as beginning a new sentence or continuing a preceding one. Moreover, in the same sentence, the absence of conjunctions makes it sometimes difficult to determine which is the most prominent of two or three clauses in it, or whether each clause is to be regarded as a separate sentence, e.g. "There came into being (ἐγένετο) [as distinct from ἦν applied to the Logos] a man (ἄνθρωπος) [as distinct from θεός applied to the Logos] sent from God. His name was John. This [man] came for witness¹....” The presence of asyndeton is most remarkable in the Prologue of the Gospel (i. 1—18) and in the Prayer to the Father (xvii. 1—26). The absence of asyndeton is very remarkable in xvi. 2—11 (which includes, as initial conjunctions, ἀλλά, καί, ἀλλά, δέ, δέ, ἀλλ’, ἀλλ’, γάρ, δέ, καί, μέν, δέ, δέ). Ἀλλά, “nay,” “but indeed,” “but on the contrary,” often occurs in emotional utterances in Greek literature generally. Both the presence and the absence of asyndeton appear appropriate to the tenor of these two passages.

(ii) Classification of references

The following attempt at classification of instances of asyndeton—according to the part of speech in connexion with which the conjunction is omitted—may be of use to students investigating the connexion between sentences in the Fourth Gospel.

[2000] (1) With Adverbs, or Adverbial Phrases :

(α) ἕως ἄρτι, ἀπ’ ἄρτι, νῦν, οὐκέτι, ἤδη, iv. 36, xii. 27, 31 (δὲ), xiii. 19, xiv. 7, 30, xv. 3, 15, xvi. 24, 30, xvii. 7; ἔτι, xvi. 12; μικρὸν καί, xvi. 16.

(β) ἔπειτα, εἴτα, xi. 7, xiii. 5, xx. 27; οὕτως, iii. 8.

(γ) τῇ ἐπαύριον, i. 29, 35, 43, vi. 22, xii. 12.

(δ) ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, xiv. 20, xvi. 26.

See also 2006 for διὰ τοῦτο, μετὰ ταῦτα etc.

[2001] (2) With Conjunctions :

(α) εἰάν, ἂν, εἰ, iii. 12, v. 31, 43, vi. 51, vii. 4, 17, 23, viii. 19, 46, ix. 33, x. 24, 35, 37, xi. 9, 48, xii. 26, xiii. 17, xiv. 7, 14, 15, 28, xv. 6, 7, 10, 18, 19, 20 (δὲ), 22, 24, xviii. 36, xx. 23 (δὲ).

(β) καθώς, and οὐ καθώς, v. 30, vi. 57, x. 15, xiv. 27, xv. 4, 9, xvii. 18, xx. 21.

(γ) ὅτι, xiv. 19 ὅτι ἐγὼ ζῶ καὶ ὑμεῖς ζήσετε.

(δ) ὅταν, iv. 25, viii. 44, ix. 5, x. 4, xv. 26.

[2002] (3) With Imperatives :

ii. 16, iii. 7, v. 8, 28, v. 39 (?) ἐραυνᾶτε τὰς γραφάς (but see 2439 (i)), v. 45, vi. 20, 27, vii. 24, 52, xii. 35, xiv. 1, 11, 27, 31, xv. 4.

(4) With Interrogatives :

v. 44 πῶς, vi. 42 πῶς, vii. 19 οὐ Μωυσῆς, vii. 42 οὐχ ἡ γραφή.

(5) With Negatives :

i. 8, v. 30, v. 37 οὐτε, vi. 44 οὐδείς, vii. 7, viii. 27, 29, xiii. 18, xiv. 6 οὐδείς, xiv. 18, xv. 16, xvii. 9, 15, xxi. 12 οὐδείς.

[2003] (6) With the Object :

(α) Object followed by Verb, vi. 68, viii. 26, 41, ix. 21, 25, x. 18, xiii. 34, xiv. 27 (bis).

(β) Object followed by Verb with Adverb or Clause intervening, v. 41, xiii. 37.

(γ) Object qualified by Relative or Participial Clause, xiv. 10, xv. 2; or with Adj., xvi. 2 ἀποσυναγώγους ποιήσουσιν ὑμᾶς, xv. 13 μείζονα ταύτης ἀγάπην οὐδείς ἔχει.

[2004] (7) With Participles :

(α) Participle without Article, i. 42 ἐμβλέψας αὐτῷ, xiii. 25 ἀναπεσὼν ἐκεῖνος οὕτως, xx. 16 στραφεῖσα ἐκείνη λέγει αὐτῷ, xxi. 20 ἐπιστραφεὶς ὁ Πέτρος.

(β) Participle preceded by Article (with or without intervening Adverb or Adverbial Phrase), iii. 6, 18 (bis), 29, 31 (bis), 33, 36, v. 23, vi. 35, 54, 58, vii. 18, 38, viii. 12, 47, xi. 26, xii. 25, 48, xiv. 9, 21, 24, xv. 5, 23.

(γ) Participle preceded by Article and πᾶς, vi. 45, xviii. 37, xix. 12.

(8) With Prepositions :

(α) Preposition and Noun, i. 1, 10, 11, iv. 31, ix. 32, xiv. 2, xvi. 33, xvii. 16.

(β) Preposition and Pronoun, v. 3, x. 9. See also 2006.

[2005] (9) With Pronouns :

(α) ἐγώ (apart from ἐγὼ εἰμι) iv. 38, v. 43, vii. 8, 29, viii. 15, 23, x. 10, 30, xii. 46, xiii. 18, xvi. 33, xvii. 4, 9, 14, xviii. 20, 37.

(β) ἐγὼ εἰμι vi. 48, 51, viii. 18, x. 9, 11, 14, xv. 1, 5.

(γ) ἡμεῖς ix. 4 (accus.), ix. 24, 29; at beginning of speech viii. 41, xii. 34, xix. 7; at beginning of clause iv. 22.

(δ) σύ xxi. 17 (πάντα σὺ οἶδας, σὺ γινώσκεις).

(ε) ὑμεῖς iv. 22, v. 33, vii. 8, viii. 15, 23, 41, 44, xiii. 13, xiv. 17, xv. 14, xvi. 20.

(ζ) ἄλλοι iv. 38, v. 32, vii. 41, ix. 9 (bis), x. 21, xii. 29.

(η) αὐτός ix. 21, iii. 28 αὐτοὶ ὑμεῖς

(θ) ἐκεῖνος iii. 30, v. 35, viii. 44, ix. 9, xvi. 14, xx. 15.

(ι) οὗτος (apart from ταῦτα) i. 2, 7, 30, iii. 2, iv. 18, 47, v. 6, vi. 50, 58, viii. 40, x. 3, xxi. 14, 24.

(κ) ταῦτα i. 28, vi. 59, viii. 30, ix. 6, 22, xi. 11, xii. 16, 36, xii. 41, xiii. 21, xiv. 25, xv. 11, 17, xvi. 1, 25, 33, xvii. 1, xviii. 1, xx. 14 (for μετὰ ταῦτα, see 2006).

(λ) οὗτος, ταύτην, ταῦτα etc. in agreement, ii. 11, viii. 20, x. 18, x. 6, xv. 12 αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἐντολὴ ἡ ἐμή.

[2006] Forms of οὗτος with Prepositions :

(α) διὰ τοῦτο vii. 22, viii. 47, ix. 23, x. 17, xii. 39, xiii. 11, xvi. 15, xix. 11.

(β) ἐκ τούτου vi. 66, xix. 12.

(γ) ἐν τούτῳ xiii. 35, xv. 8, xvi. 30.

(δ) μετὰ τοῦτο ii. 12, xix. 28.

(ε) μετὰ ταῦτα iii. 22, v. 1, 14, vi. 1, xxi. 1.

[2007] (10) With Relative clauses introduced by ὃ, ὅπου, ὡς, ὅτε : i. 4, iii. 32, viii. 21, xii. 36, xvii. 12.

(11) With the Subject :

(α) Subject followed immediately (or with intervening Adverb or Adverbial Clause) by Verb¹, i. 15, iii. 8, 35, iv. 20, vi. 49, 63, viii. 13, 35, 52, 56, ix. 41, x. 10, 11, xviii. 35, xix. 29. (In xvii. 17 the verb is ἀληθείᾳ ἐστίν.)

(β) Subject qualified by Relative Clause or by Participle, i. 18, vi. 37, 63, x. 8, 12, 25, xii. 48².

[2008] (12) With the Verb (not including ἀπεκρίθη, εἶπε, or λέγει)³ :

(α) Verb absolute, or followed by Adverbial Phrase, iv. 30, xiv. 1, xvi. 28 (bis, the second time preceded by πάλιν), xxi. 3.

(β) Verb followed immediately by Subject or Predicate, i. 6, 9, 40, 41, 45, 47, ii. 17, iv. 7, 50, v. 15, vii. 32, viii. 50, 54, ix. 4, 35, xi. 35, 44, xii. 22, xiii. 23, xvi. 25, xviii. 25, xx. 18, 26, xxi. 13.

(γ) Verb followed thus, but with Adverb or Adverbial Phrase intervening, x. 22, xiii. 22 ἔβλεπον εἰς ἀλλήλους οἱ μ., xxi. 2.

(δ) Verb followed immediately by Object (with or without intervening Adverb or Possessive Genitive), i. 42, vii. 34, ix. 13, x. 30, xiii. 33, xvii. 6.

(ε) Verb followed by ὅτι, viii. 37, ix. 31, οἶδα and οἶδαμεν, xiv. 28 ἠκούσατε.

(ζ) To these add vi. 45 ἔστιν γεγραμμένον, ix. 40 ἤκουσαν ἐκ τῶν Φαρισαίων ταῦτα, where ἐκ τῶν Φ. is the Subject.

² Asyndeton is also found in i. 39, iv. 7, xix. 14 ὦρα ἦν, and x. 22 χειμῶν ἦν.

³ Asyndeton with these initial verbs is too frequent to permit or need a collection of all the references.

CASES

I ACCUSATIVE

(i) Adverbial

[2009] This occurs in Jn vi. 10 τὸν ἀριθμόν, viii. 25 τὴν ἀρχήν, on which see 2154—6, xv. 25 δωρεάν (from Ps. lxix. 4) which needs no comment. The present section will deal only with vi. 10 (R.V.) “Make the people (τοὺς ἀνθρώπους) sit down... So the men (οἱ ἄνδρες) sat down in number about five thousand (τὸν ἀριθμὸν ὡς πεντακισχίλιοι).” A distinction is probably intended by R.V. between “the people,” i.e. the whole number, including women and children, and the “men,” who are described by Matthew as (xiv. 21) “about five thousand men (ἄνδρες) beside women and children.” But, if this distinction were insisted on in the R.V. of John, the meaning would be that although the Lord commanded that all the “people” should be made to sit down, including the women and children, yet, for some reason or other, only “the men” sat down. We can however retain a distinction between ἄνθρωποι and ἄνδρες by dropping οἱ with W.H. marg. “they sat down therefore, [being] men [exclusive of women] to the number of five thousand¹.”

[2010] “In number” is not inserted by the Three Synoptists in the Five Thousand narrative, nor by the Two in the Four Thousand. Cramer quotes a Greek commentator, “He numbers the men alone, following the customs of the Law²”; and it is probable that John means this. John may have considered that Matthew was right in inferring, from some ancient phrase about the “numbering,” that “women and children” were not included: but if the old Tradition did not mention “women and children,” and Mark and Luke did not mention them, John may have preferred to return to the exact words, while suggesting the truth of Matthew’s interpretation by the contrast between “men” and “people.”

[2011] The noun “number,” apart from Lk. xxii. 3 “Judas... being of the number of the twelve,” and Rom. ix. 27 (Hos. i. 10) is used only in Acts and Revelation. In the former, it is always (with one exception) used to describe the growth of the Church¹; and it is appropriate here in a narrative that is typical of that growth. In the Pentateuch, it is frequently used in connexion with numbering prescribed by the Law, and κατ' ἀριθμόν is frequent. But the adverbial τὸν ἀριθμόν rarely or never occurs in canon. LXX².

² [2010 a] Cramer ii. 242 Παρουσῶν δὲ γυναικῶν σὺν τέκνοις μόνους τοὺς ἄνδρας ἀριθμεῖ ταῖς κατὰ τὸν νόμον συνηθείαις ἀκολουθῶν.

(ii) Absolute, or suspensive

[2012] On vi. 39 ἵνα πάν...μὴ ἀπολέσω ἐξ αὐτοῦ (where π. may possibly, but not probably, be accus., see 1921—2), and on xv. 2 πάν κλημα...αἶρει αὐτό...πάν τὸ καρπὸν φέρον καθαίρει αὐτό, see 1920—2.

(iii) Denoting time, but not duration

[2013] iv. 52—3 “‘Yesterday, [about] the seventh hour (ὥραν ἐβδόμην) the fever left him.’ The father, therefore, recognised that [it had left him] at that same hour (ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ)³.” The accus. is freq. in LXX in the phrase τὴν ὥραν ταύτην αὐριον, which was apparently intended by the translators to mean “about this time to-morrow” (but see Gesen. 453) representing the Hebrew “as the time” or “at the like of the time”: and it occurs in Rev. iii. 3 “thou shalt not know what hour (ποίαν ὥραν) I will come against thee⁴.” It is perhaps vernacular, like our “what time did it happen?” If so, the servants speak in the vernacular, as well as loosely, not knowing that their master wanted to know the time exactly. Subsequently the dative is used to denote the exact point of time. The father, hearing the words “about the seventh hour,” recognised the coincidence between “seventh” and the exact hour when Jesus pronounced the words “Thy son liveth.”

¹ Acts iv. 4, vi. 7, xi. 21, xvi. 5. The exception is v. 36.

² [2011 a] It occurs in 2 Macc. viii. 16 ὄντας τὸν (A om.) ἀ. ἐξακισχιλίους, 3 Macc. v. 2 τοὺς ἐλέφαντας ποτίσαι ὄντας τὸν ἀ. πεντακοσίους, also in Susan. 30 of the kinsfolk and attendants ὄντες τὸν ἀριθμὸν πεντακάσιοι παρεγένοντο (Theod. om.). In classical Gk it is freq. e.g. Aristoph. Av. 1251.

⁴ [2013 b] See Ex. ix. 18, 1 K. xix. 2, xx. 6. In Acts x. 3 ὥσει περὶ ὥραν ἐνάτην τ. ἡμέρας, D is wanting, and W.H. follow the best mss. in inserting περὶ. The accus. of duration in Jn is too frequent and regular to need comment. Mk xiii. 35 μεσόνυκτιον is prob. an adverb (2678).

(iv) Cognate

[2014] Such a cognate accusative as vii. 24 τὴν δικαίαν κρίσιν κρίνετε requires no comment. But it is very unusual that this construction should accompany an accusative of the person as in xvii. 26 ἡ ἀγάπη ἣν ἡγάπησάς με, and it is surprising that (according to Alford) no Greek uncial except D has substituted ἡ for ἣν. It is probably more than a mere coincidence that the only other such combination of personal and cognate accusative is a similar phrase, Ephesians ii. 4 διὰ τὴν πολλὴν ἀγάπην αὐτοῦ ἣν ἡγάπησεν ἡμᾶς. But there the relative may have been attracted to the case of the antecedent. Here no such explanation is possible, and the dative might have been used as in iii. 29 χαρᾷ χαίρει, “rejoiceth with joy.” Possibly the evangelist, in these last and most solemn words of the Son’s Last Prayer, shrank from representing the love of God as instrumental (“wherewith”). God, he says elsewhere, “is love,” and the love “wherewith” men would describe Him as loving, is really a part of Himself, emanating from Himself. Therefore a cognate accusative is preferred even though combined—uniquely in N.T.—with an accusative of the personal object¹.

(v) With special verbs

(α) Ἀκοῶ

[2015] Ἀκούω with accusative is sometimes to be distinguished from ἀ. with genitive, the former meaning “perceive by hearing,” “catch the sound of,” while the latter means “understand by hearing,” “catch the meaning of.” See 1614.

(β) Γεύομαι

[2016] Γεύομαι with accusative occurs in ii. 9 (R.V.) “And when the ruler of the feast tasted the water now become wine (ὥς δὲ ἐγεύσατο ὁ ἀ. τὸ ὕδωρ οἶνον γεγεννημένον) and knew not whence it was (but the servants which had drawn the water knew) the ruler of the feast calleth the bridegroom....” A.V. has “the water that was made wine,” which would require τό to be repeated after ὕδωρ. R.V. marg. has “tasted the water that it had become wine.” This would explain the construction here as parallel with that of γεύομαι meaning

“taste and see that,” in Hebrews “Having tasted [and seen that] the word of God [is] good¹.” But that construction is very rare. The writer is there quoting from the Psalms, and perhaps erroneously, as he differs both from the Greek and from the Hebrew.

[2017] In Jn viii. 52 “he shall not taste of death,” the genitive is used, and the question in ii. 9 is, whether the accusative is used like the genitive to mean “taste of” or to mean “taste and perceive that.” Outside LXX γεύομαι is rarely used with accusative: but in LXX the accusative is fairly frequent². In N.T., γεύομαι is never used with the accusative except in Hebrews as above mentioned and here³. On the whole the grammatical evidence favours the view (of R.V. marg.) that John would not have used the accusative if he had not meant something different from “tasted of the water.” But there is great difficulty in harmonizing with the context the marginal reading of R.V. “tasted the water that it had become wine.” For this is the first indication in the narrative that the water has become wine, and we should expect—if the taster knew that the liquid had recently been water—“tasted the water and found to his astonishment that it had become wine.” Besides, if John meant “taste and see that,” why did he use the accusative and not ὅτι as in Proverbs (2016 a)? The context indicates that the taster knew nothing of the conversion of the water to wine but simply pronounced the wine unusually good.

[2018] These facts are almost conclusive against R.V. margin. The difficulty of R.V. text may be diminished by punctuating some of the words as part of a parenthesis and by rendering γένομαι with the accusative (as in Proverbs) “tasted” in the sense of “tested.” The writer speaks of “the water—[now] become wine,” somewhat as he speaks of the blind man of Siloam, when healed, in different phrases—“the formerly blind,” “the blind,” “the man that had recovered sight¹.” So here, the wine might be called “the formerly water” or “the now wine.” The attendants brought it as “water,” the master of the feast tested it as “wine.” The evangelist combines the facts thus: “Now when the master of the feast tasted the water—[now] become wine (and² (καί) he knew not whence it was, but the attendants knew, they that had drawn the water)—the master of the feast called the bridegroom and said....” This is almost equivalent to “Now when he tasted the water—[I say water, but] it had become wine...³.” This brief and parenthetical statement of the first of Christ’s miracles—in which the reader is let into the secret in two words (“become wine”) while the master of the feast talks, outside the secret, in twenty (“Every man—until now”) is highly characteristic of the Fourth Gospel.

(γ) Προσκυνέω

[2019] Προσκυνέω in the following passage is used, first, with dative, then with doubtful case, then again with dative, and then with accusative: iv. 21—3 “Ye shall worship the Father (dat.) Ye worship [that] which (?) ye know not, we worship [that] which (?) we know⁴... shall worship the Father (dat.)...the Father seeketh...those worshipping him (accus.). God is Spirit, and they that worship him (accus.) must worship in spirit and truth.” See 1640—51, where it is shewn that (1) the dative is the regular form in LXX, but the accusative in classical Greek; (2) the dative emphasizes the notion of “prostrating oneself to a person, idol, or God,” while the accusative means “adore” without this emphasis. Here, as between the Jews and the Samaritans, Jesus uses the Hebrew construction “Neither in this

² Possibly καί means “and yet,” or “but,” see 2136—45.

³ [2018 a] Codex a actually reads “aqua,” but probably through scribal error: “cum autem gustasset architriclinus aqua vinum factum.....”

⁴ [2019 a] In iv. 22 π. δ οὐκ οἶδατε.....δ οἶδαμεν, the antecedent may be dat. or accus. Heracleon (Orig. Comm. Huet ii. 213 B ἤδεσαν τίνι προσκυνούσι) took it to be dative.

mountain nor in Jerusalem shall ye bow yourselves down to the Father"; and this is repeated: "They shall bow down to the Father [not in any place but] in spirit and truth." But when the doctrine proceeds to base this prediction on the general statement that God is Spirit, and seeks such worshippers, the Greek phrase is used, "those worshipping him (accus.)."

II DATIVE†

(i) Of instrument

[2020] xxi. 8 "But the other disciples came by the little boat (τῷ πλοιαρίῳ ἦλθον)," appears to mean something different from coming "in (ἐν) the boat," the phrase used by Mark¹. In Mk vi. 32, Tischendorf follows the authorities that omit ἐν², and there the meaning may be that Jesus avoided the multitude by departing "by boat," as distinct from "on foot" which is mentioned by Mark in the context. Chrysostom here contrasts "coming by the boat" with "swimming."

(ii) Of time (completion)

[2021] ii. 20 (R.V.) "Forty and six years was this temple in building," τεσσαράκοντα καὶ ἑξ ἔτεσιν ὑποκοδομήθη ὁ ναὸς οὗτος, is generally taken by modern commentators as referring to the Herodian Temple, which, it is supposed, was still being built at the time when the Jews uttered these words, so that they would mean, in effect, "Forty-six years is it since the building of this Temple began [and it is not yet finished]." This would practically give a "dative of duration of time." Such a dative is found in late Gk, e.g. Joseph. Ant. i. 3. 5 τὸ ὕδωρ ἡμέραις τεσσαράκοντα ὅλαις κατεφέρετο, Euseb. v. 1 πολλοῖς ἔτεσιν... διατρίψας, but always in passages where there is no possibility of confusing the dative of duration with the dative of

¹ Mk v. 21, vi. 32, with διαπεράσαντος and ἀπῆλθον. Mt. xiv. 13 also has ἐν πλοίῳ (but without the article) with ἀνεχώρησεν.

² [2020 a] In Mk vi. 32 ἀπῆλθον ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ W.H. ins. ἐν without alternative: the text there varies greatly.

³ [2020 b] Ἄλλ' οὐδὲ οὕτως ἐκατέρησε τῷ πλοίῳ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἐλθεῖν ἀλλὰ νηχόμενος παρεγένετο.

completion, which is the natural construction here, "was built [and completed] in forty-six years¹."

[2022] Heracleon referred the words to Solomon's temple. Origen points out that Solomon's temple was built in seven years, and adds that there are no means of clearly connecting "forty-six years" with Ezra's temple². He takes it for granted that ῥκοδομήθη means "was built" in past times, but appears to give up the problem. The Herodian theory he does not so much as mention. The details given by Josephus (Ant. xv. 11. 1 foll. and elsewhere) make it clear that a Jew would say about Herod's temple, "This work took from eight to ten years to finish, and the completion was celebrated with great splendour in Herod's lifetime." It is true that, after the great fire in the reign of Archelaus and some sinking of the foundations, the Temple constantly needed repairs: but, even if we could suppose with probability that the Jews were referring to these repairs as "building," the number of years would not suit the supposition. For according to Lightfoot (B.E. p. 31) the Jews, at the time of the Passover, might have said forty-seven years, and, according to Westcott (ad loc.), forty-nine. It is against nature to suppose that they would have definitely understated this as "forty-six." Much more probably they would have said "some fifty years."

² [2022 a] Westcott does not mention Origen's and Heracleon's views, and the former is represented in Clark's transl. as saying "Someone else will say that the temple...was...the temple built at the time of Ezra, with regard to which the forty-six years can be shewn to be quite accurate." But Huet gives, for the words I have italicised (ii. 188 E) περὶ οὗ οὐκ ἔχομεν τρανῶς τὸν τῶν τεσσαράκοντα καὶ ἑξ ἐτῶν ἀποδείξαι ἀληθευόμενον λόγον, i.e. "with regard to which we are not able clearly to demonstrate that the statement of forty-six years is truly stated"—implying that Origen knew that there were arguments for it, but not such as were clearly demonstrative. Clark proceeds, "But in this Maccabean period things were very unsettled with regard to the people and the temple, and I do not know if the temple was really built in that number of years." But the words are, ἔοικε δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὰ μακκαβαϊκὰ πολλή τις ἀκαταστασία γεγονέναι περὶ τὸν λαὸν καὶ τὸν ναὸν καὶ οὐκ οἶδα εἴ ποτε ῥκοδομήθη τοσούτοις ἔτεσιν ὁ ναός. Steph. gives μακκαβαϊκὰ as meaning "the books of the Maccabees" and ποτε appears to mean "ever" or "at any rate"—"I do not know whether the temple was ever built in this number of years." The Latin has "tunc" (reading τότε). Origen introduces all this with the words (Huet ii. 187 E) "How the Jews [can] say they built the temple in forty-six years we are not able to say if we are to follow the history exactly," πῶς τ. κ. ἑξ ἔτεσιν ῥκοδομήσαι (sic) φασὶ τὸν ναὸν οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι λέγονται (marg. λέγειν) οὐκ ἔχομεν εἰ τῇ ἱστορίᾳ κατακολουθήσομεν.

[2023] But the definite “forty-six years” can be explained as follows in accordance with Jewish feeling, with the views of Heracleon, with the chronology of Eusebius, with the text of LXX, and with the language of Josephus. It was an error relating to the second temple, the temple of Ezra, which the Jews, among themselves, would regard as merely repaired by Herod, not as rebuilt. The edict for rebuilding was issued (Ezr. v. 13) “in the first year of Cyrus king of Babylon” i.e. 538 B.C. But LXX omits “of Babylon” having “Cyrus the king.” And the Hebrew itself has gone further in Ezra i. 1 “In the first year of Cyrus king of Persia.” But this is 559 B.C. Josephus (Ant. xi. 1. 1) says that the edict was issued “in the first year of the reign of Cyrus,” which is ambiguous: he also says that the temple was completed in the ninth year of Darius, i.e. B.C. 513. Now from 559 B.C. to 513 B.C. gives “forty-six years,” as is stated in the chronology of Eusebius extracted from Syncellius (vol. ii. p. 81) “Now from the second year of Darius until the sixth it [the temple] was fully completed... within forty-six entire years from the first year of Cyrus¹.”

[2024] When the Herodian temple was destroyed it was not unnatural that Talmudic traditions should dwell upon its splendour: but it is very unlikely that Jews born in the reign of Herod the Idumaeen would recognise him as a Builder like Solomon or Ezra. Possibly when it fell into disrepair they would console themselves—as with the proverb “Rome was not built in a day”—by reflecting that the building of the Temple in former times lingered through two reigns, and by repeating to one another that “In the days of Cyrus and Darius this temple took forty-six whole years to build.” Josephus, though his chronology may have led to this error, did not himself commit the error: and possibly our evangelist did not. He may have taken it as the mere chatter of the “Jews” whose ignorant talk he elsewhere holds up to ridicule. But, in any case, no reliance can be placed on “forty-six” as determining the date at which the Jews were speaking, or as evidence of the evangelist’s presence as an ear-witness. He may have obtained this detail from books.

(iii) Of point of time

[2025] iv. 53 “The father therefore recognised that [it was] at that same hour (ὅτι ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ) in the course of which (ἐν ᾗ)...”

The majority of mss. (Alford) insert ἐν before ἐκεῖνῃ. Its omission by the best mss. gives us "the dative of the point of time": and this exactness is more suitable to the contrast, indicated above (2013), with the accusative in iv. 52 "about the seventh hour," which the father interprets as "precisely at the seventh hour."

[2026] The phrase "in (ἐν) that same hour" occurs in Matthew's account of the healing of the centurion's son or servant, where the parallel Luke merely says that the messengers returned and found the servant healed. So where Matthew says that the Syrophenician's daughter "was healed from (ἀπό) that same hour," Mark merely says that she returned and found her healed. These are the only two instances of healing at a distance in the Synoptists. Evidential proof needed an instance that should combine (1) "returning and finding" with (2) "at that same hour." John's single tradition of healing at a distance—which has many points in common with Matthew's and Luke's narrative—contains this combination. It should be added that "at that same hour" is peculiar to this passage of John¹.

(iv) With παρά

[2027] The Synoptic παρά θεῷ—in the phrases "possible with God²," "favour with God³," "ye have no reward with your Father which is in heaven" (A.V. (txt) "of your Father⁴")—rather gives the impression of meaning "in the sight of God." But the exact meaning of the preposition is "by the side of"; and this may be interpreted (in accordance with a frequent use of παρά in Greek literature) as meaning "in the house of." John brings out this, which one may call "the domestic meaning," much more clearly, viii. 38 "That which I have seen in the house of the Father," xvii. 5 "And now glorify thou me, O Father, in thine own house (παρά σεαυτῷ) with the glory that I had in thy house [παρά σοί] before the world was." The latter may be compared with the saying of Wisdom about herself and the Creator, "Before his works of old...or ever the earth was...I was by him (ἦμην παρ' αὐτοῦ)⁵." Both here and in John, we might render παρά "by the side of" or "in the bosom of." On the distinction between παρά τῷ πατρί and παρά τοῦ πατρός in Jn viii. 38, see 2355—7.

III GENITIVE

(i) Absolute

[2028] Mark uses this construction somewhat monotonously for the most part to introduce the circumstances of a new narrative in such phrases as "when it was late," "when he was going forth," "while he was yet speaking" etc. In four of these instances the parallel Matthew and Luke employ the same construction¹. Mark never uses it in Christ's words, except once in the Parable of the Sower².

[2029] Matthew, in the Triple Tradition, uses it freely, like Mark, in the temporal clauses of narrative (often however with δέ where Mark has καί). He introduces it thrice in Christ's words, all in the Parable of the Sower and its explanation; and one of the three agrees with Mark³. As in Mark, the implied conjunction is "when" or "while," with perhaps one exception⁴.

[2030] In the Triple Tradition, Luke introduces it twice into Christ's Discourse on the Last Days in insertions peculiar to himself⁵, once in Christ's instructions for the preparation of the Passover⁶, and once in the words of our Lord at His arrest⁷. Luke appears to use it causally in xxiii. 44—5 "There came a darkness...the sun failing, or, being eclipsed," and quasi-causally in xxii. 55 "Now as they had lighted (περιαψάντων δέ) a fire...", xxiv. 5 "Now as they were terrified (ἐμφόβων δὲ γενομένων)." Except in these three passages, Luke appears, like Matthew and Mark, to imply "when" or "while."

² [2028 δ] Mk iv. 17 εἰτα γενομένης θλίψεως, Mt. xiii. 21 γενομένης δὲ θλίψεως, Lk. viii. 13 καὶ ἐν καιρῷ πειρασμοῦ.

[2031] In no case does John use the genitive absolute in recording Christ's words. Elsewhere he employs it with more elasticity of meaning than is found in the Triple Tradition. A causal meaning ("as" or "because") is implied, probably or certainly, in ii. 3, v. 13, vi. 17. "Though" is certainly implied in xii. 37, xxi. 11, and perhaps in xx. 19 "There cometh Jesus, the doors being shut, i.e. (?) though the doors were shut¹."

(ii) Objective or subjective

[2032] In Greek, as in English, such a phrase as "the love of God" may imply one of two propositions:—(1) "God (subject) loves man," (2) "Man loves God (object)."
"Of God," if it implies the former, is called a subjective genitive; if the latter, an objective genitive. "The love of God" occurs frequently in the Johannine Epistle but only once in the Gospel, v. 42 "But I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you," ἀλλὰ ἔγνωκα ὑμᾶς ὅτι τὴν ἀγάπην τοῦ θεοῦ οὐκ ἔχετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, where the question arises whether the genitive is subjective or objective. The following considerations make it probable that in the Gospel, as in the Epistle, it is subjective, "the love that God gives to man."

[2033] In the first place, ἀγάπη in N.T. is very rarely used with objective genitive, perhaps only once or twice². It is never thus

used by St Paul, who always regards "the love of God," and "the love of Christ," as, so to speak, divine inmates in man's heart, sent from God. As "the peace of God" constrains a man to be peaceful, and "the [social] fellowship of the Holy Spirit" constrains him to be social, so "the love of God" constrains him to be loving, both to God his Father and to men the children of the Father. Thus "the love of God" for man causes "the love of God" in man, i.e. causes man to love God. But this consequent love of man for God or for Christ is not what St Paul primarily means when he says, "the love of Christ constraineth us." He means Christ's love as a divine fire in the heart, driving out the fires of "this world." This is invariably the meaning of the phrase in the Pauline Epistles.

[2034] And this, almost (if not quite) always, holds good in the very numerous instances in which the Johannine Epistle mentions "the love of God." The writer thinks of it as a gift, spirit, or germ, that comes from God not from ourselves ("Not that we loved God but that He loved us"). It enables us to love, as the light of the sun enables us to see; but, as the latter remains "the light of the sun," so the former remains "the love of God." "The love of God" in our heart, like any other vital germ, needs to be (1 Jn ii. 5) "perfected" by responsive human action, and it cannot grow and expand without pushing out the love of the world¹.

[2035] Greek scholars, familiar with ἡ ἀγάπη meaning "the [feeling of] love," may sometimes think that John uses the article thus. But apparently he never does. The context always indicates that he uses "the love" (as Jews used "the Name" and "the Will") to mean "the love of God revealed to men in Christ," or "the real love as distinct from love so called by the world," or "the love wherewith the Son loved us and bade us love one another." This seems to be the meaning in 1 Jn iii. 16 "Herein know we the love by the use of κατευθύνω in Lk i. 79 "guide safely into the way of peace" and by general Greek usage (Steph.), especially by that of Clem. Alex. 654 (Steph., but ? ref.) "guide the ship safe," and by Ps. cxli. 2 (LXX) "Let my prayer go straight [to heaven] as incense before thee (κατευθυνθήτω)" quoted by Clem. Alex. 857. In the Pauline Epistles, both "the love of God" and "the love of Christ" always mean the love of God, or of Christ, for us.

[revealed by the Son of God] because he laid down his life for us," and in 1 Jn iii. 23—iv. 10 "Let us love one another as he gave commandment to us....Let us love one another, because the love [wherewith he commanded us to love one another] is from God..... Herein the love of God was manifested in us because he hath sent his only begotten Son.....herein is the love [of God], not because we have loved God, but because he loved us." Unloving conduct on the part of a Christian is a proof that this divine entity is not in his soul, 1 Jn iii. 17 "Whoso shutteth up his heart...how abideth the love of God in him?"

[2036] These statements about "the [real] love" or "the love [of God]" as an entity given to men and abiding in men, reach a climax in the doctrine that God Himself is "love," and that "the love of God" has the power of expelling fear if only it is allowed scope so as to be perfected. The writer begins by saying "And as for us, our whole knowledge, yea, our whole faith, consists in the love that God hath in us¹." That is to say, as we are in the sunlight even while the sunlight is in us, so it is with love. Then he proceeds, "God is love, and he that abideth in the love [of God] abideth in God, and God [abideth] in him. Herein hath the love [of God] been perfected [working in our souls] along with us...Fear hath no existence in the love [of God], but the perfected love [of God]¹ casteth out fear.....We (emph.) are loving [now, simply] because he first loved us²."

[2037] In the following passage, however, the objective genitive seems at first sight intended, 1 Jn v. 2—3 "Herein know we that we are loving the children of God when we are loving God and doing his commandments. For this is the love of God (lit.) in order that (ἵνα) we should be keeping his commandments...." Here some might suggest the following paraphrase: "Hereby we know that we are loving God's children, not selfishly as our playthings or amusements, but genuinely as our brethren, when we are loving God Himself and doing His will: for 'Our love of God can only be shewn in the effort to fulfil His will'³." But the "effort," or purpose, may, in this passage, be divine, not human. For (1) it will be shewn (2093 foll.) that, when our Lord says "This is my commandment in order that ye may love one another," an "effort," or "object," is implied on the part of the Son for the good of men, and (2) the Johannine phrase αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ regularly introduces the definition of something that comes not from man, but from God (2396—7). Hence we may with more probability paraphrase 1 Jn v. 2—3 as follows: "Hereby know we that we are loving the children of God [with the real love] when we are loving God in our hearts and doing His will with our hands:—for this is the meaning and purpose of the love of God [His gift in our hearts, namely] that we should be keeping His commandments...." This agrees with what is said elsewhere, "If a man does not do God's will, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" So here, "What is the object of the love of God in you except that you should do His will?"

¹ 1 Jn iv. 16—18 ἡ τελεία ἀγάπη, i.e. perfected, or fullgrown, in us, corresponding to (iv. 17) τετελειωμένη.

² [2036 c] 1 Jn iv. 19 ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν, ὅτι αὐτὸς πρῶτος ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς. I have quoted 1 Jn ii. 5—iv. 19 fully, because Lightfoot (2 Thess. iii. 5) refers to these passages as indicating that "it is very seldom possible...to separate" the meaning "love of God for us" from the meaning "our love for God"—a conclusion different from the one maintained above.

³ The words italicised are Westcott's paraphrase of αὕτη γὰρ ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ θεοῦ ἵνα τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ τηρῶμεν.

[2038] We return to the single mention of "the love of God" in the Gospel. It follows the Healing on the Sabbath. Jesus charges the Jews with rejecting Him on account of this act of kindness and with refusing the testimony of His works: v. 37—42 "The Father that sent me, he hath borne witness to me...ye have not his word (λόγον) abiding in you (ἐν ὑμῖν μένοντα), [I say this] because him whom he sent ye believe not.....ye desire not to come to me that ye may have life.....I know you that ye have not the love of God in yourselves (τὴν ἀγ. τ. θεοῦ οὐκ ἔχετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς)." Theoretically, and taken by themselves apart from N.T. and Johannine usage, these last italicised words might mean, "Ye have no love for God," but that this is not the case is probable for the two following reasons.

[2040] (2) The second reason is the parallelism between "Ye have not in yourselves the love of God" and the preceding "Ye have not abiding in you his Logos," i.e. "the Logos that proceeds from God." The writer assumes here (as in the Prologue) that even before the Logos came to "his own," bringing Light into the world, all men had some affinity to the Logos and some glimmerings of the Light, But some stifled the sound of the Logos and shut out the Light, so that when the crisis came—the moment for accepting or rejecting the incarnate Logos—they had not a trace of the Logos in them, nor a trace of the Love of God, that might have helped their hearts to go forth responsively to meet the Love incarnate. In accordance with this parallelism, "the love of God" would mean "the love that proceeds from God": and this rendering agrees with the Johannine usage elsewhere and also with the contextual phrase "have in yourselves."

(iii) Partitive

[2041] In partitive phrases with πολύς, John never uses Matthew's and Luke's expression πολλοὶ τῶν..., "many of the..."¹. But he sometimes uses a modified form of it, interposing a verb or participle, e.g. "Many therefore having heard it [many I mean] of his disciples, said...." In such cases, the genitive is sometimes preceded by the Hebraic *ἐκ*²: iv. 39 ἐκ δὲ τῆς πόλεως ἐκείνης πολλοὶ ἐπίστευσαν εἰς αὐτὸν τῶν Σ., vi. 60 πολλοὶ οὖν ἀκούσαντες ἐκ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ εἶπαν, xii. 11 πολλοὶ δι' αὐτὸν ὑπῆγον τῶν Ἰουδαίων, xix. 20 τοῦτον οὖν τὸν τίτλον πολλοὶ ἀνέγνωσαν τῶν Ἰουδαίων. Comp. vii. 44 τινὲς δὲ ἤθελον ἐξ αὐτῶν πιάσαι αὐτόν.

[2042] A construction almost if not quite peculiar to John is the partitive genitive, with or without ἐκ, (a) before the governing word, or (b) with no governing word. In (b), ἐκ τῶν Φαρισαίων means "from the Pharisees [some]." Obviously, with a verb of motion in the context this may create ambiguity, because the meaning may be (1) "Some of the Pharisees came, were sent etc.," (2) "They came, were sent etc. from the Pharisees." This ambiguity (on which see Ellipsis, 2213—5) occurs in the first of the instances quoted below:—

² [2041 b] The Hebraic "many from (ἐκ)," "some from (ἐκ)," which is also used by the Synoptists (though very rarely by Mark) is fairly frequent in Jn, especially in the Raising of Lazarus, e.g. xi. 19, 37, 45, 46. It is quite distinct from the selective ἐκ in classical Gk, e.g. ἄριστοι ἐκ.

i. 24 (?) καὶ ἀπεσταλμένοι ἦσαν ἐκ τῶν Φαρισαίων, i. 35 ἰσθῆκει Ἰ. καὶ ἐκ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ δύο, vi. 11 (?) ὁμοίως καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀψαρίων ὅσον ἤθελον, vi. 64 ἀλλὰ εἰσὶν ἐξ ὑμῶν τινὲς οἷ, vi. 70 καὶ ἐξ ὑμῶν εἰς διάβολός ἐστιν, vii. 31 ἐκ τοῦ ὄχλου δὲ πολλοὶ ἐπίστευσαν εἰς αὐτόν, vii. 40 ἐκ τοῦ ὄχλου οὖν ἀκούσαντες τῶν λόγων τούτων ἔλεγον, ix. 16 ἔλεγον οὖν ἐκ τῶν Φαρισαίων τινές, ix. 40 ἤκουσαν ἐκ τῶν Φαρισαίων ταῦτα οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὄντες, xii. 42 ὅμως μέντοι καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἀρχόντων πολλοὶ ἐπίστευσαν εἰς αὐτόν, xvi. 17 εἶπαν οὖν ἐκ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ πρὸς ἀλλήλους, xviii. 9 οὐκ ἀπώλεσα ἕξ αὐτῶν οὐδένα.

(iv) Before Nouns

[2043] The Synoptists place the possessive αὐτοῦ mostly after its noun, e.g. τὸν ἱμάντα αὐτοῦ. John frequently places it before the article and its noun, e.g. αὐτοῦ τὸν ἱμάντα¹—somewhat like the Latin dative “loose for him the shoe-latchet”: this throws the emphasis from the pronoun on the noun. See 2558 foll.

(β) Τιβεριάδος

[2045] In vi. 1 “Beyond the sea of Galilee [i.e. the sea] of Tiberias,” the apparently superfluous genitive (Τιβεριάδος) has been thought by some to be corrupt. But it is probably to be explained as one of the many instances of Johannine intervention coincident with, or consequent on, Luke’s deviation from the Synoptists. Mark and Matthew always have “the sea of Galilee,” Luke calls it “the lake [of] Gennesaret,” and afterwards “the Lake².” But Mark and Matthew speak of Gennesaret as a place at which the disciples disembark³. John mediates, as it were, between the two names, but inclines towards the ancient tradition “sea of Galilee,” only explaining it by a name more familiar to his readers. Perhaps variations in the application of the term Galilee induced Luke to substitute Gennesaret¹. But "Gennesaret" was supplanted by "Tiberias" in Talmudic Tradition and the latter (which was also used by Pliny) was preferred by John, who, later on, makes (xxi. 1) "the sea of Tiberias" the scene of Christ's last manifestation to His disciples. Τιβεραΐδος in vi. 1 is a genitive of possession ("belonging to")² governed by "sea" which must be understood as appositionally repeated.

(γ) Ἡ διασπορά τῶν Ἑλλήνων

[2046] This phrase occurs in vii. 35 "Will he go to the Dispersion of the Greeks (τὴν διασπορὰν τῶν Ἑλλήνων) and teach the Greeks?" In LXX, we find "the Dispersion of Israel," and "the Dispersions of Israel," as one might speak of "the church, or churches, of the Christians." But this phrase might be followed by another genitive describing the city or country to which the Dispersion belonged: "the Dispersion of Israel of, i.e. belonging to, Egypt, Pontus, Cappadocia etc." Then "of Israel" might be assumed, and dropped for brevity, and so we might get (1 Pet. i. 1) "to the elect sojourners of the Dispersion of Pontus, Galatia etc.," and here "the Dispersion of the Greeks," meaning, "the Dispersion belonging to the Greek-speaking countries." It may be asked why the sentence does not proceed thus, "and teach the Dispersion of the Greeks"? One answer may be, "For brevity." But another answer, and a more satisfactory one, is that the words are intended to represent the Jews as unconsciously predicting the manner in which the Spirit of the risen Saviour, travelling abroad in His disciples, would teach, first, the Dispersion among the Greeks, and then the Greeks themselves (2645)⁴.

¹ [2045 a] "Gennesar," or "Gennesaris," is used mostly by Josephus, and is also recognised as the popular name for the Lake by Pliny (v. 15) "Plures Gennesaram vocant."

² [2045 b] Wetstein (Jn vi. 1) quotes Erachin 32 a "Tiberiadi mare murus est." Hor. Heb. i. 142 says that the lake called in O.T. "the sea of Chinnereth" is called "in the Targumists 'the sea of Genesar, Genesor, Ginosar,' it is the same also in the Talmudists, but most frequently 'the sea of Tiberiah.'"

⁴ [2046 b] In xii. 20, "Greeks" means Greek proselytes to the Jewish faith. The congregations of the Dispersion would contain a large admixture of these: and so the name "Greeks" might be given contemptuously to congregations of Jews in Alexandria, Antioch etc.

(δ) Τὰ βαῖτα τῶν φοινίκων

[2047] The difficulty about this phrase xii. 13 τὰ βαῖτα τῶν φοινίκων is that both βαῖτα and φοίνικες, separately, may mean "palm-branches" (though the latter may also mean "palm-trees")¹, so that the phrase might mean "palm-branches of palm-branches." One word (it would seem) might have sufficed. The LXX, with various readings and accents, has βαιων, βαιν, βαεων etc., and sometimes φοῖνιξ, but never βαῖτα φοινίκων, except as an anonymous rendering in Lev. xxiii. 40 "branches of palm-trees." Possibly βαῖτα may have been loosely used for "bunches of twigs" of any sort used in festal processions. The parallel Synoptists mention no palm-branches taken in the hands, but Mark xi. 8 mentions στιβάδας "bed-litter." Matthew has the common word κλάδους for "branches," and these (like Mark's "bed-litter") are supposed to be strewn in the road. Luke omits all mention of "branches." In Mark, A, C, and Origen, have στωιβαδας, where SS omits the clause, D has εστωιβαδας², and some inferior authorities στειβαδας and στυβαδας. John's rare word βαῖτα has different forms, βαινας, βαιας, βαεις, and possibly one of these has been corrupted by Mark into στιβάδας. If so, it is a case where Mark errs, Luke omits, and John intervenes. This hypothesis would also explain why John took special pains to define the βαῖτα as belonging to φοίνικες.

(ε) Παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα

[2048] xix. 14 ἣν δὲ παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα does not present any grammatical difficulty. If the phrase were used consciously as meaning "preparing the Passover" it would be objective genitive. More probably it is possessive—the word "Preparation" having come to mean "the eve [of]," and being applied to any feast but most frequently to the sabbath, so that it is used in the second century absolutely to mean (Didach. viii. 1 and Mart. Polyc. vii. 1) "Friday." But what makes the phrase interesting is that John's insertion of τοῦ πάσχα differentiates his use of παρασκευή from that of the Synoptists, two of whom connect it with the sabbath, and none with (2087—8) the passover. Mark xv. 42 is most definite, ἣν παρασκευὴ ὅ ἐστιν προσάββατον. If that “sabbath” happened also to be the first day of Unleavened Bread, Mark’s statement, though true, might be misleading. Hence John might intervene in three ways, (a) by defining the Preparation here, (b) by stating (xviii. 28) that the paschal lamb had not yet been “eaten,” and also (c) by saying (xix. 31) that the approaching “sabbath” was “a great day.” Thus the genitive in xix. 14 may illustrate—not grammatically but as a specimen of Johannine methods of dealing with Synoptic tradition—the genitive just discussed (xii. 13 τὰ βαῖτα τῶν φοινίκων)¹.

IV NOMINATIVE

(i) Special passage

(a) Ὁ κύριός μου

[2049] On the Nominative used suspensively see 1920 foll. Only one passage needs separate discussion, xx. 27—8 “‘...and be not unbelieving but believing.’ Thomas answered and said to him, ‘My Lord and (?) my God’ (ὁ κύριός μου καὶ ὁ θεός μου).” Here the nominatives are said to be vocatives by Wetstein, who alleges (1) the LXX use of ὁ to represent the vocative, (2) classical Greek usage of nominative for vocative. But (1) Wetstein alleges no LXX instance (except one, explicable by special context) of ὁ κύριος thus used, although there are many LXX instances of ὁ θεός, and also of κύριε ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν (which is the regular rendering of “O Lord our God²”). (2) In classical Greek, the instances of quasi-vocative with ὁ are (a) accompanied by οὗτος, or σὺ, or they are like our “Mr” in vernacular speech (“you, Mr cricketer, Mr Yorkshireman etc.”); (3) or else, as in ὁ φίλος, they are found (Steph. “metri causa”) only in poetry. (4) The one instance of the combined quasi-vocatives quoted by Wetstein is Epict. ii. 16. 13 κύριε ὁ θεός which tells against him, shewing that, although Epictetus could use ὁ θεός vocatively, he could not use $\delta\ \kappa\acute{\upsilon}\rho\iota\omicron\varsigma$ thus. The Egyptian Papyri use $\kappa\acute{\upsilon}\rho\iota\epsilon$ freely, but never, so far as alleged, $\delta\ \kappa\acute{\upsilon}\rho\iota\omicron\varsigma$ vocatively. Thus, a great mass of evidence from all extant Greek shews that, had the vocative been intended, $\kappa\acute{\upsilon}\rho\iota\epsilon$ would have been employed. This is confirmed by the Latin versions, which have "dominus."

² [2049 a] 2 K. xix. 19, 1 Chr. xxix. 16, 2 Chr. xiv. 11, Ps. xcix. 8 etc. The exception is Ps. xxxv. 23 “My God and my Lord (Adonai),” LXX ὁ θεός μου καὶ ὁ κύριός μου. In the preceding verse, “my Lord (Adonai)” is rendered Κύριε as it is regularly in LXX when applied to God (see Gesen. 11 a ref. to Gen. xx. 4, Ex. xv. 17 etc.). But here, as it follows the nominative form of the vocative, ὁ θεός μου, it is rendered for conformity ὁ κύριός μου. In Jn, ὁ κύριος precedes ὁ θεός. Steph. 876 c gives many instances of voc. φίλος but all from poetry.

[2050] What then is the meaning? "Lord" certainly cannot mean "Jehovah." "My Jehovah" would be an unheard of monstrosity. But "my Lord" might mean "my dear Lord," or "my dear Master" as the term is used by Mary Magdalene¹. And it would be appropriate that this almost unique appellation should be used by Thomas, as by Mary, in connexion with a manifestation of the risen Saviour². If it is so used here, is "my Master" subject or predicate? If it were predicate we should have to supply "Thou art," or "It is," which is inserted in xxi. 7 "it is the Lord ($\delta\ \kappa\acute{\upsilon}\rho\iota\omicron\varsigma\ \epsilon\acute{\sigma}\tau\iota\nu$). But could $\epsilon\acute{\sigma}\tau\iota\nu$ have been omitted there? In any case it could hardly be omitted here, since the meaning required would be "it is indeed my Lord," so that it would be emphatic³. But if we take "My [dear] Lord" as subject, we may readily imagine a pause after it, while the speaker, overwhelmed with amazement and joy, is attempting to express his feeling about the Lord. He might have added "has indeed risen from the dead" or "has been indeed restored to me," but he means a great deal more than that. When he has uttered "my Lord," he feels that "there is none in heaven" whom he could "desire in comparison" with this "Lord"⁴. In effect, his Lord has become to him one with his God, so that he may say "My Lord is also my God."

inspired conviction¹? Thomas, logically speaking, had no more right to say to the risen Saviour that He was "his God" than a Jew would have to say the same thing to Enoch or Elijah, in the event of their being manifested to men on earth. But Thomas, spiritually speaking, might feel (justified is not the right word but) necessitated to say what he said. His Master—he suddenly found—was, at all events, "his God," the equal of whom did not exist for him in heaven or earth as claiming his worship. We are not, then, to suppose that Thomas argued, like St Paul, that Jesus was "defined to be Son of God by the resurrection from the dead²." There may have been no arguing in the matter. According to the view taken above, Thomas, regaining Jesus of Nazareth from the dead, was instantaneously possessed with the conviction that his Lord was also his God, and the conviction forced its way out in utterance³.

³ [2051 d] But this is not quite satisfactory. For xiii. 13 φωνεῖτέ με ὁ διδάσκαλος καὶ ὁ κύριος, and Rev. iv. 11 ἄξιός ἐστι, ὁ κύριος καὶ ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν, ought to have been mentioned above. For these, and for further remarks on the vocative use of ὁ, indicating that Jn may have used it here exceptionally, see 2679 foll.

V VOCATIVE¹

(i) Special passages

(a) ΠΑΤΗΡ

[2052] According to W.H.², the word πατήρ is used vocatively by our Lord (a) in the regular form πάτερ, in the Raising of Lazarus, xi. 41 "Father, I thank thee," (b) after the Voice from Heaven, and xii. 27—8 "What (2512 b—c) should I say? 'Father, save me from this hour'? ...Father, glorify thy name," and (c) thrice in the Last Prayer, xvii. 1—11 "Father, the hour hath come—glorify thou me, Father, ...holy Father (πάτερ ἅγιε), keep them in thy name." In all these cases πάτερ is used. But, towards the conclusion of the Last Prayer, when the Son prays for the unity of the Church that is to be, He thrice uses the form πατήρ: xvii. 21—5 "that all [of them] may be one even as thou, Father, in me...Father, that which thou hast given me I will that where I am they also may be...Righteous Father (πατήρ δίκαιε)...." The final instance is a remarkable contrast with πάτερ ἅγιε (if πάτερ is the correct reading), the form and place of the adjective being the same in both, but the form of the noun different.

² See 2053 c, where attention is called to the readings of B, which have, in one instance, been incorrectly given by Tischendorf.

[2053 b] In xvii. 21, καθὼς σύ, πατήρ, ἐν ἐμοί, might mean "even as thou [being] Father, art in me [as being Son]." And xvii. 24 πατήρ, ὃ δέδωκάς μοι may be compared with x. 29 ὁ πατήρ μου ὃ δέδωκέν μοι. If x. 29 is to be rendered "that which the Father hath given me," may not xvii. 24 mean "that which thou, being Father, hast given me"? Theoretically, it would be possible to take the last two instances as appositional, at the end of the sentence xvii. 23 καθὼς ἐμὲ ἡγάπησας—πατήρ, xvii. 24 ὅτι ἡγάπησάς με πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου—πατήρ. But though John is extremely fond both of apposition and of abruptness, these instances would perhaps go beyond his limits. All we can say is that he has some definite and distinctive

CONJUNCTIONS (1894*)

(i) Johannine use of

[2054] The most remarkable characteristic of John, in his use of certain conjunctions that take the subjunctive mood, is, that he makes very subtle distinctions between the tenses with which they are used. This is especially the case with ἐάν and ὅταν which will therefore be discussed under "Tense" and not under "Conjunction." For the Johannine omission of conjunctions see 1996—2008. For his use of the participle in their place, see 2271—3, and 2031.

(ii) ἄλλά

(a) Ἄλλὰ = contrariety, "not this but that, or, something more"

[2055] Ἄλλὰ is used by John more frequently than by Matthew and Luke taken together (1708). One reason for this, is that it is the appropriate conjunction for such phrases as "not this but that," or "this but not that," and John (2598) is fond of stating a truth in its negative and positive aspects. Theoretically, ἄλλά implies difference, or contrariety, not the mere negation of presence or absence. Nevertheless, in most instances, a negative is expressed or implied in the context of a Johannine ἄλλά.

[2056] In vi. 9, the negative ("this is true but not that") is implied by a question, "There is a lad here with five barley loaves... *but*¹ what are they...?" i.e. but they are not anything to the purpose. In vi. 34—6, the Jews say "give us this bread," and Jesus replies, "I am the bread...he that cometh to me shall not hunger...But I said unto you that ye have seen me, yet believe not." Here the meaning seems to be, "Ye have the bread visibly before you, but (as meaning in the threefold use of πατήρ, following the threefold use of πάτερ, in the Lord's last prayer.

[2053 c] The question is complicated by the readings of B in the Voice from Heaven as well as the Last Prayer. In xii. 27—28 (W.H.) τί εἶπω; πάτερ, σῶσον με...ταύτην. πάτερ, δόξασόν σου τὸ ὄνομα, the photograph of B has, most distinctly, first πάτερ in the rejected prayer, and then πατήρ in the accepted prayer. [Tisch.'s txt of B neither reproduces πατήρ (2653)—though it reproduces B's reading μον το ὄνομα for σου τ. ο.—nor comments on it as an error. Alford does not mention πατήρ. W.H. do not give it as an alternative.] This confirms the view that the scribe of B in both passages is recognising some distinction that goes beyond the province of grammar. Perhaps both he and the evangelist reserved the nominative form as best suited to the most exalted utterance (2679 foll.). Codex D, in xvii. 1—25, has πάτερ throughout, except where συ precedes the noun, xvii. 5, 21.

I said) ye do not accept it because ye do not believe." But, as the writer proceeds, the thought "as I said" becomes more and more prominent, and passes from an implied parenthesis into an expressed adversative statement¹.

[2057] In vii. 26 "Can it possibly be that (μή ποτε) it was recognised by (ἐγνώσαν) the rulers that this [man] is the Christ? Nay, but [as for] this man (Ἀλλὰ τοῦτον) we know his origin...": here ἀλλά implies something quite different from that which has been suggested by the preceding context, and might be rendered by our exclamatory "Why!" which often means "Why ask such a question?" In vii. 48 "Can it be said that a single one (μή τις) of the rulers has believed in him, or a single one of the Pharisees? But (ἀλλά) this rabble...are accursed," there is a reference to an implied negation: "Not a single Pharisee has believed in him: but the rabble are ready to believe anything." The next instance resembles the last two, though the question is not asked by μή, ("Could I possibly say (μή εἶπω)?") but by τί ("What should I say (τί εἶπω)?") (for the various renderings of this see 2512 b-c) xii. 27 "What should I say (τί εἶπω)? 'Father, save me from this hour'? Nay, but (ἀλλά) for this cause came I, to [meet] this hour." Ἀλλά implies the negation, or opposite, of a prayer that is merely put forward as an impossible one for the Saviour to utter.

[2059] It is sometimes difficult to decide whether ἀλλά means "nevertheless" or "on the contrary," e.g. xv. 20—1 "If they persecuted me, they will also persecute you. If they kept my word, they will keep yours also. But all these things will they do unto you because of my name because they know not him that sent me." Does this mean "If they kept my word they would keep yours: but on the contrary, instead of doing this, they will persecute you"? Or do the italicised words point back to the earlier part of the section (xv. 18 foll.) so that the ἀλλά does not refer to what immediately precedes, but to the tenor of the section, which is, to prepare the disciples for persecution? In that case, the meaning is "Nevertheless [take courage from the thought that] they will do all this to you for my sake and because they know not God." In view of the above quoted instances (xvi. 20, 33) where ἀλλά means "nevertheless" in Christ's utterances of consolation, this meaning becomes all the more probable here.

(γ) Special passages

[2060] Ἀλλά means, at first, "not this but more" in xvi. 1—7 "These [warnings about persecution] I have spoken unto you that ye may not be caused to stumble. Out of the synagogues will they cast you, nay, more (ἀλλά), there cometh a time when everyone that killeth you will think he is offering service [thereby] to God." But in the following verses, ἀλλά (1) first means "but, though it cannot be avoided," "but nevertheless," or "but at all events"; (2) then it means "but," as usual, after a negative; (3) then, again, it means "but nevertheless" (or "but still") :—xvi. 3—7 "And these things will they do because they have not known the Father nor me. But at all events [though actions arising from such ignorance cannot be hindered] I have spoken these things to you that when their time shall come ye may remember that I said [these things] to you... And (δέ) now I go to him that sent me: and none of you asketh me, Whither departest thou? but (ἀλλ'), because I have spoken these things to you, the grief thereof hath filled your heart. But still (ἀλλ') I tell you the truth, it is profitable for you that I should depart." In the last sentence, it is not clear whether the writer means "I cannot expect you to believe me, but still I tell you the truth," or whether the real contrast is between "grief" and "profitable," so that the meaning is, "Sorrow hath filled your heart, but still it is for your profit (as I have truly told you) that I should depart."

[2061] The use of ἀλλά in the following passage seems inexplicable as it stands, iv. 21—3, "Believe me, woman, that there is coming a time when neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem shall ye worship the Father. [Ye worship that which ye know not, we worship that which we know, because salvation is from the Jews.] But there cometh a time and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth¹."

It has been shewn elsewhere (1702, 1713 m) that "Jews" in the Fourth Gospel is almost always used in a bad sense, and that for this and other reasons (1649—51), the italicised and bracketed words should perhaps be transposed and assigned to the Samaritan woman as her account of what the Rabbis say. Then our Lord's words would be to this effect: "Not in Jerusalem or in Gerizim, but in spirit and truth shall the Father be worshipped."

[2062] It is hard to find a satisfactory explanation of viii. 26 "I have many things concerning you to say and to judge. But he that sent me is true, and [as for me] the things that I have heard from him these do I speak unto the world." Perhaps the meaning is, "But, though there is much to judge, the judgment must wait till the time appointed by the Father. He is the Truth. His word, which I utter (xii. 48), will be the judge²."

(δ) ἅλλ' ἵνα

[2063] Where ἅλλ' ἵνα is preceded by another parallel ἵνα (expressed or implied) the verb in the first ἵνα clause may sometimes be regarded as repeated in the second ἵνα clause, as in i. 7—8 "he came in order that (ἵνα) he might bear witness concerning the light... : he was not the light, but [? came] in order that (ἀλλ' ἵνα) he might bear witness concerning the light." This, then, is perhaps a case of ellipsis supplied from context, called below (2204—5) "contextual" ellipsis as distinct from "idiomatic" (2213). Even where there is no preceding parallel ἵνα, a preceding verb may sometimes perhaps be supplied as, possibly, in ix. 3 "Neither this man sinned nor his parents; but [he was born blind] in order that the works of God might be manifested in him"—where "he was born blind" is regarded by some as repeated from the question of the disciples "Who sinned, that he was born blind?" But there (ix. 3) it is perhaps better to take ἀλλ' ἵνα as meaning "but [it was ordained] in order that." And even in i. 7—8 ἀλλ' ἵνα might have that meaning.

[2062 b] Chrys. says "I have many things both to say and to judge, yea, and not only to convict but also to punish, but He that sent me, i.e. the Father, doth not desire this (ἅλλ' ὁ πέμψας με, τουτέστιν, ὁ Πατήρ, οὐ βούλεται τοῦτο)." Theod. of Heraclea (Cramer) says "Even if ye do not take into your minds at present the day of judgment, yet He that sent me is true, and He hath decreed the day of requital (κἂν εἰς νοῦν μὴ λαμβάνητε τὸν τῆς κρίσεως καιρὸν, ἅλλ' ὁ πέμψας με, φησὶν, ἀληθὴς ἐστίν, ὅς ὤρισε τὸν τῆς ἀποδόσεως καιρὸν)." This is the view taken above.

[2064] The ellipsis is certainly sometimes not contextual but idiomatic¹. Instances must be considered separately, but generally it may be said that ἀλλ' ἵνα, even where it is a contextual ellipsis, conveys a notion of divine ordinance. In i. 31, the best rendering is, "And I knew him not, but [all things concerning him—whether I knew them or not—were ordained] in order that he should be manifested to Israel. For this cause came I baptizing in water." This has the advantage of keeping "for this cause" at the beginning of the sentence, where in John, it is almost invariably placed (see 2006 and 2387).

(iii) Γάρ

(a) Synoptic and Johannine use

[2065] In Matthew and Luke (when both are independent of Mark) γάρ is hardly ever used in strict narrative², but almost always in the words of Christ and other speakers. Out of Matthew's twelve instances in strict narrative, nine ("for they were fishers," "for he was teaching them," "for she said...If I touch...", "for Herod having seized John," "for John repeatedly said to him," "for the wind was contrary," "for he was one that had great possessions," "for their eyes were weighed down," "for he knew that through envy they had delivered him up") agree verbatim, or nearly so, with

¹ E.g. xiii. 18 ἐγὼ οἶδα...ἀλλ' ἵνα ἡ γραφή πληρωθῇ, xv. 24—5 νῦν δὲ καὶ ἐωράκασιν καὶ μεμυσήκασιν...ἀλλ' ἵνα πληρωθῇ ὁ λόγος.... See 2105—12.

² [2065 a] "Strict narrative" excludes the words of the Baptist, the disciples, the Pharisees etc., which are included generally in the term "narr.," as distinct from "Chri." (1672*).

*Mark*¹. Γάρ is used by Luke altogether about a hundred times, and by Matthew still more frequently, but almost always in Christ's words (and in the words of other speakers). In strict narrative Luke uses it only eleven times; and *in three of the eleven he agrees substantially with Mark*². Mark uses γάρ altogether about seventy times, and, of these, as many as thirty or more are in strict narrative. The use of γάρ, therefore, in strict narrative, is characteristic of Mark (as distinct from Matthew and Luke), and the fact that Matthew and Luke agree with Mark in so large a proportion of the few instances in which they use "strict narrative" γάρ indicates that they have copied these clauses from Mark.

² [2065 c] Lk. viii. 29, xviii. 23, xx. 19. Lk. uses γάρ twice in the short account, peculiar to his Gospel, of the mocking of Christ by Herod Antipas (Lk. xxiii. 8, 12) and once in the Miraculous Draught (Lk. v. 9).

which are regarded by many modern commentators as a comment of the evangelist, if not an interpolation.

(β) Special passages

[2067] Different interpretations have been given to iv. 43—4 “But after the two days he went forth thence to Galilee: for (γάρ) Jesus himself testified that a prophet in his own country hath no honour.” Some have interpreted this (1), “He went to Galilee from His own country, Judæa, because He had not been honoured in the latter.” A second interpretation might be (2), “After having acquired honour in Judæa, which was not His own country, He went to Galilee His own country, because He did not desire to gain honour at the expense of the Baptist, and He had testified that a prophet in his own country does not gain honour.” The decision rests on several considerations that need separate discussion in a comparison of the Four Gospels: but the differences illustrate the vagueness of the inferences deducible from the mere statement of a motive with “for.”

[2068] In vii. 41—2 “Others said, ‘This is the Christ’; but others again said, ‘For can it be that (μὴ γάρ) the Christ is to come from Galilee?’” we must supply “No” before “for.” Or, more accurately, the rule in such cases is that the preceding words should be mentally repeated in some phrase (expressing astonishment) equivalent to a statement, after which “for” follows, introducing the reason for this implied statement. [“This the Christ! Impossible! for...”] The same explanation applies to ix. 29—30—after the Pharisees have said concerning Jesus “But as for this [man] we know not whence he is”—where the man cured of blindness by Jesus replies “For herein is the wonder of wonders (ἐν τούτῳ γὰρ τὸ θαυμαστόν) because ye (emph.) know not whence he is and [yet] he opened my eyes.” The man repeats the words of the Pharisees “[Ye ‘know not whence he is’! A wonderful confession!] for herein is the wonder...¹.” But the text is doubtful. See 2393, 2683.

¹ [2068 a] So in Mk xv. 14, Mt. xxvii. 23, Lk. xxiii. 21 Pilate’s reply “For what evil has he done?” coming as a reply to the demand “Crucify him!” may be explained “[An amazing request!] For what evil has he done?” Comp. Demosth. 43 λέγεται τι καινόν; [An amazing question!] γένοιτο γὰρ ἂν τι καινότερον; Soph. Ajax 1125—6 σὺν δίκῃ... [An amazing statement!] δίκαια γάρ...; where καινόν and δίκη are, practically, repeated. So πῶς γάρ (or, γὰρ οὐ); means “[A surprising question!] For how could it be so [or, otherwise]?”

(iv) Δέ

(a) Consecutive or adversative

[2069] In classical Greek, δέ, calling attention to the second of two things, may mean (1) "in the next place," (2) "on the other hand," somewhat as our English word "other" may mean "another [of the same kind]" or "other [in kind]," i.e. different, opposite. The former may be called "narrative δέ" because it is frequently used to describe the sequence of events in a story. But in this sense John, as compared with Matthew and Luke, very rarely uses it except in the phrase "so when (ὡς δέ)¹." He uses it much more frequently in the latter sense, though not nearly so often as Matthew and Luke.

[2070] But there is also another sense in which John uses δέ, to introduce that which comes second not in point of time but in point of thought, as being the next point to note, thus: "His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it. Now [the next point to note is that] there were (ἦσαν δέ) six waterpots...Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots²." Similarly in the Feeding of the Five Thousand, after recording the command, "Make the men lie down," John adds, "Now [the next point to note is that] there was much grass in the place³." And this quiet particle may occasionally introduce something of the nature of an epigram, e.g. "They cried out... 'Not this man, but Barabbas.' Now [the next point to note is that] this Barabbas was a robber⁴"—thus briefly implying the condemnation (amplified in the Acts⁵) of the preference of a "robber" to the Prince of Life. This parenthetic or supplementary use of δέ to introduce to the reader the "next point" for him to notice is hardly found in the Synoptists.

¹ [2069 a] ii. 9 "So when (ὡς δέ) he had tasted," ii. 23 "So when he was in Jerusalem." Comp. vi. 12, 16 etc. Bruder (1888) gives to the instances of δέ in Mt. and Lk. severally about 9 and 9½ columns, in Mk 3½ (less in W.H.), in Jn 4 (less in W.H. especially when the interpolation in viii. 1—11 is removed). The statistics, though rough, suffice to establish an enormous predominance of δέ in Mt. and Lk., as compared with Mk and Jn.

may be either "But the tunic on the other hand [as opposed to the cloak]," or "Now [the point to be here noted is that] the tunic was seamless." In any case it would be an error to suppose that the events introduced with this particle are of secondary importance. For ἦν δέ is used to introduce Nicodemus ("Now there was a man of the Pharisees"), the man cured at Bethesda (or Bethsaida), Lazarus, and perhaps the "nobleman" whose son is cured near Cana¹. On ο δέ in John, see 2684.

[2072] The uses of δέ, adversative and consecutive, may be illustrated by the only two instances in which it occurs in the body of Luke's Gospel after Ἰησοῦς without the article. The first introduces "Jesus" as representing a new character entering on the stage of public life²; the second represents contrast between Judas and Jesus³. The first of John's only two instances appears to be adversative, "They therefore took up stones to cast at him. But Jesus (ἰ. δέ) was hidden from them and went forth from the Temple⁴." The second introduces Christ's last public words, and follows an evangelistic comment on the national rejection of the Light. W.H. place a space between the two, "...for they loved the glory of men rather than the glory of God. || But Jesus (ἰ. δέ) cried and said...."⁵ It is not clear whether this merely introduces a new subject, and marks an interval (perhaps of time) or whether, as in the previous case, it implies a contrast between the rejection of the Light and Christ's protest against the rejection.

[2073] When δέ is used, without the article, after other proper names, there is a somewhat similar doubt. Probably however contrast is intended—Mary being distinguished from the two disciples, who had entered the tomb of the Saviour and had returned to their homes, one at least believing—in the words "But Mary (Μ. δέ) stood near the tomb outside weeping⁶." Similarly the words, "But Thomas (Θ. δέ)⁷," contrast Thomas, who had not seen the Lord, with the rest of the disciples, who had seen Him. In both cases, the particle introduces a new event and one of the deepest interest. And this, as a rule, is characteristic of John's use of δέ: it draws attention, sometimes to the beginning of a manifestly great event, sometimes to a detail, not manifestly, but really, important—either in itself or because of some latent symbolism.

² [2072 a] Lk. iv. 1 ἰ. δὲ πλήρης πνεύματος ἁγίου ἐπέστρεψεν.... This follows the genealogy (iii. 24—38) which is preceded by iii. 23 καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ἰ. ἀρχόμενος.... The nom. (as subject) has previously occurred without the article in Lk. ii. 43 ὑπέμεινεν ἰ. ὁ παῖς, ii. 52 καὶ ἰ. προέκοπτεν..., iii. 23 καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ἰ. ἀρχόμενος....

(β) Δέ, third word, or later, in its clause

[2075] (1) In vii. 31, ἐκ δὲ τοῦ ὄχλου was perhaps avoided as it would lay too much stress on the preposition, which here means (in effect) “some of” and is so closely connected with τοῦ ὄχλου that ἐκ τοῦ ὄχλου might be regarded as almost a compound noun. In xvi. 9—10, μὲν and δέ are placed third after preposition and noun as is frequently the case. In xvii. 20 οὐ δέ would have been against the rules of Greek. Compare 1 Jn ii. 2 περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, οὐ περὶ τῶν ἡμετέρων δὲ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καί... But, in both, the unusual position of δέ probably calls rather more attention to the context as worthy to be noted. In xxi. 23, A, D, and a, b, c, f etc. read καὶ οὐκ εἶπεν for οὐκ εἶπεν δέ. The weight of NBC 33 and Origen is so great that we must accept δέ, as representing the earliest Greek text. But, on the other hand, καί—where we should naturally expect ἀλλά or μέντοι—is so difficult that it can hardly be a mere correction for regularity's sake. So far as regards difficulty, it would be more likely that the difficult καί would be corrected by a marginal δέ. When scribes began to transfer this to the text as a substitute for καί they could not place δέ after οὐκ, so they would place it after οὐκ εἶπεν. Possibly this very ancient tradition about the oldest of the Apostles may have been current in the Galilaean Church in a form in which the Hebraic “and” was used for “and yet.” As it stands, οὐκ εἶπεν δέ is perhaps without parallel in Johannine Greek¹.

[2076] (2) In the combination of καί and δέ, since καί would have sufficed to express mere addition, δέ seems to be devoted to the expression of emphasis, so that καὶ...δέ probably means "and...what is more," in the sense "and...what is to be specially noted." Winer-Moulton (§ 53 p. 553) indicates two opinions as to καὶ δέ:—(1) that καί = "also," (2) that καί = "and." If καί meant "also," emphasizing the following word, Mt. xvi. 18 καὶ γὰρ δέ σοι λέγω would mean "I also," or "Even I"; and, in Jn vi. 51 καὶ ὁ ἄρτος would mean "even the bread" or "the bread also"—not likely interpretations. There are cases where initial καί is shewn by some special preceding context to be, not "and," but "also" or "even." But, as a rule, καί standing first in a sentence is to be assumed to mean "and." Καί in viii. 16, καὶ ἂν κρίνω δέ might possibly be emphatic (not connective) "Even if"; but, if so, the best course would be to treat both καί and δέ as contributing to emphasis, "Yea, even if I should judge."

(γ) Μέν...δέ

[2077] In Johannine Words of the Lord, μέν occurs only twice, and there δέ follows. Both instances occur in the chapter containing Christ's last words to the disciples: (1) xvi. 9—11 περὶ ἁμαρτίας μέν...περὶ δικαιοσύνης δέ...περὶ δὲ κρίσεως, (2) xvi. 22 καὶ ὑμεῖς οὖν νῦν μὲν λύπην ἔχετε· πάλιν δὲ ὀψομαι ὑμᾶς. In xvi. 11, περὶ κρίσεως δέ would have corresponded so exactly with the two previous περί clauses as to produce an artificial effect: and perhaps the writer wishes to call special attention to the clause "about judgment" and effects this by a slight variation of order. Μέν...δέ nowhere occurs in the Epistle.

(v) Εἰ

(a) Εἰ, corresponding to ἄν, in Words of the Lord

the position of μέν. Πάντα δέ would have corresponded to σημεῖον μέν. Or we might have expected ἀλλὰ or μέντοι following 'I. without μέν.

occur more often than in all the Synoptists together¹. The only passage that requires comment is one in which W.H. omit ἄν, viii. 39 "If ye are children of Abraham, then ye are doing (ποιεῖτε) the deeds of Abraham. But as it is (νῦν δέ) ye are seeking to kill me²."

of the house had known..." Lk. xvii. 6 has εἰ ἔχετε πίστιν...ἐλέγετε ἄν, where Mk xi. 23 (? parall.) has ἔχετε πίστιν, Mt. xxi. 21 εἰ ἔχητε πίστιν, followed by future. In Lk. xix. 42 "If thou hadst known," the apodosis is dropped.

³ [2079 a] ix. 41, xv. 22, 24, xviii. 36. In all these cases, the sense is, "If so-and-so had happened things would have been different.....but as it is (νῦν δέ)...." In xvi. 5, xvii. 13, the meaning is, "Things were different once.....but as it is (νῦν δέ)...."

⁵ [2079 c] Origen's present text, when he is not expressly commenting on the passage, uses (Huet i. 72, ii. 96) the reading of the inferior mss. But in his comment on the passage he agrees about six times (Huet ii. 286, 294—6) with W.H. txt, twice (ib. ii. 290, 293) with W.H. marg., comp. 2659 c.

(β) Εἰ δὲ μή

[2080] Εἰ δὲ μή, without a verb, in LXX, almost always follows an expressed or implied imperative¹. Apart from John, in N.T. (sometimes as εἰ δὲ μήγε) it follows (1) description of what ought to be done, (2) precept, (3) an if-clause². In John, where it occurs twice, it follows an imperative in xiv. 11 "Believe me (μοι) that I [am] in the Father and the Father in me. But if not (εἰ δὲ μή), because of the mere works believe," i.e. if ye cannot believe me on the ground of my personality and the words that I utter, then believe because of the signs that I perform." This is according to rule. But the other instance, which comes earlier in the same chapter, is not according to rule—not, at least, as translated in the text of R.V., thus xiv. 1—3 "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so (εἰ δὲ μή) I would have told you; for (ὅτι) I go (πορεύομαι) to prepare a place for you. And if I go (πορευθῶ) and prepare a place for you, I come again, and will receive you unto myself; that, where I am, [there] ye may be also. And whither I go (ὑπάγω) ye know the way."

[2081] (1) The first point to be noted about this difficult passage is that εἰ δὲ μή in this second instance—as in the first, though here at a somewhat longer interval—follows an imperative, and the imperative of the same verb as above ("believe"). According to the analogy of the first instance, and of all Biblical usage, endeavouring to connect εἰ δὲ μή with the imperative "believe," we must suppose the clause about "mansions" to be parenthetical; and the meaning will be, "Ye believe (or, Believe) in God. Believe [similarly] in me...but, if [you can] not [rise to this]—then,..."

[2082] (2) The next point to be noted is that R.V. has failed to represent a distinction drawn by our Lord here between "going on a journey" (πορεύομαι) and "going back, or home" (ὑπάγω) (1652—64). Earlier in the Gospel, the Jews themselves are dramatically described by John as failing in much the same way when Jesus says (vii. 33) "I go back (ὑπάγω) to him that sent me," and they say (vii. 35) "Where doth he purpose to go (πορεύεσθαι) i.e. journey?,"

¹ [2080 a] The exceptions are Gen. xviii. 21, Job xxiv. 25, xxxii. 22. In Sir. xxix. 6 εἰ δὲ μή follows ἐὰν λσχύσῃ. In 2 S. xvii. 6 ποιήσομεν...εἰ δὲ μή, the verb may be intended to imply an imperative, "let us do."

adding "Doth he purpose to go to the Dispersion of the Greeks?" It is also noteworthy that, up to this point (xiv. 1) in the Gospel, Jesus has repeatedly described Himself as "going home, or back (ὑπάγω)" to the Father, but never, spiritually, as "going [on a journey (πορεύομαι).]" In the preceding context He has just said to the disciples twice (xiii. 33, 36) "Where I go home (ὑπάγω) ye cannot come," and they have been perplexed and troubled, not being able to realise the Lord's "going home" and treating it simply as a separation. At this point Jesus Himself begins to speak of Himself as "going (πορεύομαι)," and the context suggests that He does this in order to adapt His language to the understanding of the disciples¹.

[2083] (3) A third point is, that εἶπον ἂν ὑμῖν ὅτι πορεύομαι, according to Greek usage in general as well as Johannine usage in particular, would naturally mean—unless some very clear prefixed context prevented the meaning—"I should have said to you that I am going." SS takes it thus. Chrysostom and many other authorities do the same, but omit ὅτι ("I should have said to you, 'I am going'"). On this point, see 2185—6.

[2084] (4) Another consideration is that "If it were not so [as I have said]" would imply a supposition that Christ had stated an error; and this—even in the form of a supposition at once dismissed as impossible—is hardly in accordance with Johannine thought. There results a considerable negative probability, that εἰ δὲ μὴ does not mean εἰ δὲ μὴ οὕτως ᾔην ("but if it were not so"). There is also a positive probability, if the text is not corrupt, that it relates to the imperative "believe" and means "otherwise," i.e. "if ye cannot do this."

[2085] According to this view, the disciples have been unable to realise all that was implied in the Son's "going home" to the Father. It meant that He could take His friends thither, and that the Father would find room for them all. It was not a strange place, or an inn, to which it was necessary that the Son should go first, to make preparations for the disciples. Nevertheless, if the disciples could not understand the unity of the Son with the Father and could not trust unreservedly in the Son's power without detailed assurances, He was willing to lower His language to their level and to ask them to trust in a special assurance. We may perhaps suppose Him to repeat, in thought, the precept "believe me" somewhat to this effect; "Ye believe (or Believe) in God? Believe also [similarly] in me—in my Father's house are many abiding places—: but if not [i.e. if ye cannot believe in me to this full extent, then believe me at least to this extent.]—I could have said to you [instead of speaking about 'going home'] that I was going on a journey to prepare a place for you."

[2086] This is not wholly satisfactory. For, strictly speaking, εἶπον ἄν means "I should have said," not "I could have said." But the whole passage is surcharged with emotion, and Christ may be represented as having two thoughts in His mind, (1), "If I had known your weakness I should have spoken differently," (2) "If you are so weak, believe me, I could have put things for you differently." From the objective point of view, the Son does not "go to prepare a place for the disciples" because the places are already (Mk x. 40) "prepared" (Mt. xx. 23) "by my Father." But, adapting His language to the weakness of their faith, Christ proceeds to say, "And if—to use the language suited to you—even if I should 'go and prepare a place for you,' yet I come again...." Literally, the Lord can hardly be said to "go to prepare a place," like a courier engaging rooms in an inn; and Jesus seems to have implied this by His previous mention of "many abiding-places," as if He had said, "We shall be in my home—your home, large enough to hold all."

(vi) Ἐπεὶ

(α) Ἐπεὶ παρασκευὴ ἦν

which is [the day] after the Preparation, there were gathered together the chief priests and the Pharisees to Pilate," to ask him to guard the tomb, (3) Lk. xxiii. 53—4 "he placed him in the tomb...where no man had yet lain: and it was the day of the Preparation and the sabbath was dawning."

[2088] Ἐπεὶ means "when," as well as "since," and is interchanged with ἐπειδὴ, "when," in Daniel, Luke, and Acts¹. Matthew and Luke, who omit ἐπεὶ above, may have supposed that here it meant simply "when," not perceiving that it stated the cause for the coming of Joseph. John intervenes, at great length. Whereas Mark and Luke, in different ways, connect the day with "the Sabbath," John, in the first mention of it, says (xix. 14) "it was the Preparation of the Passover." He adds that the Jews desired the bodies of the crucified to be taken away (xix. 31) "since it was the Preparation," and that Joseph of Arimathea came hereupon and took the body of Jesus, and also that the body was buried as it was (apparently meaning buried in haste) "because of the Preparation." Thus he repeatedly brings out the causal meaning of Mark's ἐπεὶ, which is not represented in Matthew and Luke.

(vii) Ἔως

(a) Not confused with ὥς

[2089] Ἔως, with the present indicative, occurs perhaps once in Mark², but nowhere else in N.T. except 1 Tim. iv. 13 ἕως ἔρχομαι "while I am [still] coming [and not yet present]," and thrice in John, ix. 4 "we must work...while (ἕως, marg. ὥς) (SS "while yet") it is day," and xxi. 22—3 (bis) "while I am [still] coming." The Thesaurus gives many such phrases as "While (ἕως) there is [still] opportunity," "While he [still] has breath and power³," and—with "still (ἔτι)" inserted and verb omitted—" While the sea [is] still navigable," "while [there is] still hope" etc.⁴ SS therefore expresses the sense in adding "yet." The importance of these facts consists in their indication that, when John uses ὥς later on in xii. 35 ὥς τὸ φῶς ἔχετε, he means something different from "while" (2201).

(viii) "H and ἢπερ

(a) "H

[2091] This is our Lord's answer to Pilate's words, "Thou art [it seems] the king of the Jews!" which are probably (2234, 2236 foll.) to be read as a contemptuous exclamation expressed in an interrogative tone. It is clear that, as Chrysostom says, our Lord's reply is not a request for information. Pilate obviously did not say this from himself. Others had said it to him. In Greek questions, an absurdity is often put before the reality, thus: "When horses are injured do they become better, or worse?" "In states, are rulers without error, or liable to error?" "Do you permit [a bad ruler] to rule, or do you appoint another³?" There is nothing in the literal English rendering of our Lord's reply to indicate the meaning conveyed by this Greek usage. But the meaning might be fairly paraphrased as "Will you venture to assert that you say this from yourself, or will you admit, as you must be conscious, that you were prompted by others?"

(β) "Hπερ

[2092] "Hπερ occurs only once in N.T., namely in Jn xii. 43 "They loved the glory of men rather than (ἢπερ) (marg. ὑπέρ) the glory of God." Chrysostom, in his comment, quotes (v. 44) "How can ye believe...since ye seek not the glory that is from the only God?" And perhaps this is almost the meaning here:—"the glory of men and not the glory of God." Compare 2 Macc. xiv. 42

¹ [2090 a] In the Sermon on the Mount alone, it occurs about ten times.

² [2090 b] Two of these contain indirect questions, vii. 17 "He shall know... whether it is from God or I speak from myself," viii. 14 "Ye know not whence I come or where I return."

"desiring [rather] to die nobly than [i.e. and not]...to be subjected (θέλων ἀποθανεῖν ἥπερ...ὑποχείριος γενέσθαι)," and the variously interpreted Iliad i. 117 βούλομ' ἐγὼ λαὸν σόον ἔμμεναι ἢ ἀπολέσθαι, where ἢ (Eustathius says) was explained as being "for ἥπερ," so as to mean emphatically "than," not "or." According to this distinction, whereas (1) μᾶλλον ἢ might have meant that they loved the glory of God somewhat but the glory of men more, (2) μᾶλλον ἥπερ suggests that they loved the glory of men, and the glory of God they loved not at all. Compare the only other passage where John uses μᾶλλον ἢ, iii. 19 "The light hath come into the world and men loved rather the darkness than the light (μᾶλλον τὸ σκότος ἢ τὸ φῶς)." The likeness, and the unlikeness, are remarkable. The evangelist appears to condemn both "the world" and "the rulers," but the latter more severely. The "world" had perhaps some love for the light: the "rulers" had no love at all for the glory of God¹. See 2685.

(a) "Ἰνα, in John, expresses, or implies, purpose

[2093] The frequency of ἵνα in John (2686) illustrates in part his preference for colloquial as distinct from literary Greek, but in part also the tendency of his Gospel to lay stress on purpose, e.g. on the purpose of the Baptist's birth and mission², on the purpose of the Son's mission³, on the purpose of His actions and words⁴, and on the Father's purpose in appointing for Him these actions⁵, which purpose may also be described as the Father's will⁶. John's view is that actions are appointed for men in order that, in doing them, they may do the will of their Father; and the essence of the action consists in the motive, namely, to do that will. In English, "to do" often means "doing," having quite lost its old notion of "to doing," i.e. "toward doing," i.e. purpose: but in John—whatever may be the case in other writers—ἵνα seems always to retain some notion, or suggestion, of purpose, or motive, as being the essence of action⁷.

⁷ [2093 a] Jn does not use the infinitive of purpose with τοῦ, or πρὸς τό, so that a priori we might expect him to use ἵνα as a substitute. Bruder gives the article

(β) ἵνα, in John, never merely appositional

[2094] If ἵνα were merely appositional like our English "to," N.T. writers would be able to employ ἵνα, like "to"—irrespective of good or evil, of positive or negative—in such sentences as "It is good, or evil, for thee to do this," "I command, or forbid, thee to do this." But ἵνα can only be used with "good" and "command," not with "evil" and "forbid." The reason is that "goodness" and "command" suggest a positive object to be attained or a positive object in commanding; and object suggests purpose¹. "Evil" and "forbid" do not—or at least not to the same extent. In xiii. 34, R.V. marg. has "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love (ἵνα ἀγαπᾶτε) one another; even as I loved you, that ye also may love (ἵνα καὶ ὑ. ἀγαπᾶτε) one another," apparently taking the first ἵνα as introducing the substance of the command ("that ye love"), and the second as introducing its purpose "that ye may love." It seems better to give the same rendering in both cases, the second being an emphatic and much more definite repetition of the first. The meaning is, in both cases, "My command is, and my purpose is, that ye love one another." But in the second clause the kind of love is defined ("Even as I loved you").

and the inf. as occurring Mk (15), Mt. (24), Lk. (c. 70), Jn (4) (thrice πρὸ τοῦ, once διὰ τοῦ). ἵνα occurs in Jn almost as often (1726) as in all the Synoptists together.

In v. 7, ἵνα depends on ἐτοιμον implied in ἔχω "I have no one [ready]."

apposition to ταύτης [τῆς α.], but ἵνα τις θῇ is not the same as τοῦ θεῖναι. For the love is, not "the laying down of life," but the spirit that prompts the laying down or stimulates one man that he may lay down his life for another. And this suggestion of motive or effort is latent in ἵνα. So, too, iv. 34 "My meat is in order that I may do (ἵνα ποιήσω) the will of him that sent me" implies that the "meat" consists in the will to do His will. Comp. xvii. 3 "This is eternal life, in order that they may know thee," which perhaps combines (1) "the effort to know thee," (2) "given to men that they may know thee."

[2096] In answer to the question of the Jews, "What are we to do in order that we may work the works of God?" Jesus replies (vi. 29) "This is the work of God [namely] in order that ye may believe," which appears to mean that the "works" are not of the nature assumed by the questioners (e.g. sabbath-keeping, alms-giving etc.) but of the nature of motive or purpose: and if they are to do the works it will be because they take into their hearts God's purpose and will, which is an effort to make them believe, literally, an effort "in order that ye may believe." Similarly vi. 40 "For this is the will of my Father [and His purpose and effort] in order that everyone that beholdeth the Son...may have life eternal," and xv. 12 (comp. xiii. 34) "This is my commandment [and purpose] in order that ye may love one another." The following passages shew that John, differing from Epictetus and others, never uses ἵνα exactly for ὅτι or ὥστε (2697).

(γ) Special passages

[2097] In viii. 56 "Abraham, your father, rejoiced that he might see my day," the meaning is that Abraham, receiving the promise of the son in whom all the nations of the world were to be blessed, (Gen. xvii. 17) "laughed for joy," being strengthened by God with hopeful faith, in order that, under God's providence, he might thus fulfil the overruling will of God working for the salvation of "the nations." Philo (i. 602—3) compares the "laughing" of Abraham to the "laughing" of the day in anticipation of the early dawn: and, playing on the meaning of the name of Isaac (i.e. "laughter") who was not yet born, he declares that "Abraham, so to speak, laughed before laughter existed, as the soul, through hope, rejoices before joy and delights before delight." The meaning is, that Abraham, being helped by God, performed a "work of God," namely, "believing" and "rejoicing," in order that he might fulfil a purpose of God, namely, might see the day of the Messiah¹. See also 2688—9.

[2098] ix. 2 "Rabbi, who sinned, this [man] or his parents, in order that he might be born blind?" is answered by Jesus in language that does not deny purpose but calls attention to an ulterior purpose: "Neither did this [man] sin, nor his parents, but [it came to pass] in order that the works of God might be manifested in him."

[2099] In xi. 14—15 "Lazarus is dead, and I am glad, on account of you, that ye may believe, because I was not there²," the first question is, What is the verb, expressed or implied, on which there depends the clause "that ye may believe"?

(1) The only verb expressed is χαίρω: and, taken by themselves, the words "Lazarus is dead and I rejoice in order that ye may believe" might mean "I force myself to rejoice over it and to express my joy in order that ye may believe"—as a general, after the death of a brother in battle, might say to his soldiers, "I rejoice over it in order that you may be encouraged to follow his example." According to this view, the Son "rejoices" over His friend's death—foreseeing the triumph over death—being filled by the Father with joy in order that He may accomplish a work for the strengthening of the faith of the disciples.

[2100] (2) But we have not here χαίρω and ἵνα consecutively, (as above (2097) ἡγαλλιάσατο ἵνα). "For your sakes" intervenes. Now "for your sakes" implies that the speaker desires something for the sake of those spoken to. And, in answer to the question, "desiring what?" τί θέλων; the reply would be θέλων ἵνα πιστεύσητε, "desiring that ye may believe." Hence ἵνα may depend upon θέλω implied in δι' ὑμᾶς: "I rejoice for your sakes desiring that ye may believe."

[2101] (3) The next clause to consider is "because (ὅτι) I was not there." (a) This may depend upon "believe." Then it would mean, "that ye may believe in me because your faith has not been shaken at the spectacle of Lazarus dying in my presence when I, you might think, could have healed him." In this spirit, Martha and Mary say to Jesus, "If thou hadst been here, my brother had not died," and Martha may be supposed to add, "Yet even now [though the faith of some might have been shaken] I believe that whatsoever thou shalt ask from God, God will give thee." But is it likely that Christ would rejoice in the prospect of a belief so negative and frail that it depends upon His absence? More probably, if this were the grammatical construction, there would be a latent positive meaning, "That ye may believe because I was not there to save him from death and because I shall consequently go thither to raise him from death," i.e. that ye may believe because I shall raise him from death as a consequence of my absence. (b) Again, the words "because I was not there" may depend upon "rejoice," the meaning being, "I rejoice—on your account, desiring that ye may believe—because I was not there," i.e. "I rejoice that I was not there, not for my own sake, not to avoid the spectacle of his death, but for your sakes desiring that ye may believe."

² Λάζαρος ἀπέθανεν, καὶ χαίρω, δι' ὑμᾶς, ἵνα πιστεύσητε, ὅτι οὐκ ἤμην ἐκεῖ. I have added a comma after χαίρω.

[2102] (4) On the whole—having regard to John's frequent use of iva to introduce divine preordination and to the stress laid on Christ's knowledge of all that was happening to Lazarus, combined with His determination to remain at a distance till His "friend" was dead—we shall probably come closest to the meaning, if we take the words as signifying that the Son rejoiced over all the circumstances of the death of Lazarus, as He was ready to rejoice over His own death, and for the same reason—namely that, in both cases, the death would tend to the glory of God by strengthening men's faith in God. We are intended to listen to Jesus as the words dropped slowly from His lips, clause by clause. The same shock that the disciples would have felt we also are intended to feel, when we hear Jesus say, "Lazarus is dead, and I rejoice." Then we are to be in part comforted by His affection and in part bewildered by "for your sakes." Then some reassurance follows when we hear "in order that ye may believe." Then we are plunged into bewilderment again by the words "because I was not there." This is what we are to realise as the confused feeling of the hearers at the time. But realising it as readers, in the light of subsequent events, we are to interpret the oracular words as meaning that the Son rejoiced in all that the Father revealed to Him, in the death, and in His absence from His friend's death-bed, for the sake of His disciples, and that the death, the absence, and the rejoicing, were all ordained for the fulfilment of the divine purpose¹.

[2103] In xii. 7 "Ἀφες αὐτὴν ἵνα εἰς τὴν ἡμέραν τοῦ ἐνταφιασμοῦ μου τηρήσῃ αὐτό, obscurity arises, not from the construction of ἵνα τηρήσῃ "in order that she may keep," but from the doubtful meaning of the context (which will, I hope, be discussed in a future treatise) and from the possibility of some corruption¹.

(δ) ἸΝΑ and Subjunctive, compared with Infinitive

[2104] In xi. 50 "It is profitable for you (lit.) in order that one man should die for the people," and in xvi. 7 "It is profitable for you (lit.) in order that I may depart," ἵνα follows a word that suggests a profitable object to be pursued (as explained above 2094). But owing to the context, in each case, there is probably a notion of preordinance. For this reason, perhaps, ἵνα and the subjunctive are put into the mouth of the High Priest when he utters the words under higher influence than his own ("not of himself") as being a divine decree: but afterwards the evangelist, when referring to these very words, uses the infinitive, xviii. 14 "Now Caiaphas was he that gave counsel to the Jews that it was expedient that one man should die (ὅτι συμφέρει ἕνα ἄνθρωπον ἀποθανεῖν) for the people²."

(ε) Omission of principal verb before ἸΝΑ

[2105] As the Iliad declares its subject to be the wrath of Achilles but adds that the "purpose that was being accomplished" was that of Zeus, so, though in reverse order, the Fourth Gospel begins with the Logos and God and Light; and then, coming to "a man," indicates that the purpose of the man's "coming" is to bear witness about the Light. To express this purpose the evangelist because, when I shall have raised [him] up [from the dead], there will be no suspicion (οὐδεμία ἔσται ὑποψία)." Theodorus (Cramer ad loc.) says "I rejoice, He says, for your sakes (ὑμῶν ἕνεκεν). For the fact that I was not there will contribute to your faith (τὸ γὰρ μὴ εἶναι με ἐκεῖ συντελέσει πρὸς τὴν πίστιν τὴν ὑμετέραν) since, if (εἰ μὲν) I had been present, I should have healed him while still ailing (ἀρρωστοῦντα ἐθεράπευον), but such a wonder as that would have been slight for the manifestation of power."

uses ἵνα for the first time¹. As the man is described as "sent from God," the purpose of the "coming" may be supposed to be that of God, not of the man except so far as the man makes it his own as well. The Gospel then proceeds to subordinate the "man" to the "light" by saying, i. 8 "He was not the light, but [] in order that (ἀλλ' ἵνα) he might bear witness concerning the light."

[2106] How are we to fill the bracketed gap? R.V. supplies "came," and perhaps correctly: but the passage should be considered with others like it, ix. 3 "Neither did this man sin nor his parents, but [] *in order that*² the works of God should be manifested in him," xiii. 18 "I speak not concerning you all: I know whom (τίνας) I chose, but [] in order that the Scripture might be fulfilled...," xiv. 30—1 "And he [i.e. the prince of the world] hath nothing in me; but [] in order that the world may know that I love the Father and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence," xv. 24—5 "If I had not done...they had not had sin; but now (νῦν δέ) have they both seen and hated me and my Father; but [] in order that the word that is written in their law might be fulfilled, They hated me without a cause." Similarly 1 Jn ii. 19 "They came forth [i.e. originated] from us, but (ἀλλ') they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us, but [] in order that they might be made manifest how that they all are not of us."

[2107] Attempting to supply these ellipses we may first take those passages in which ἀλλά is preceded by a negative. In these, where we can supply a verb by repeating it from the preceding context, it will be reasonable to do so: i. 8 "He was not the light but on the contrary [was, or was sent, or came] in order that he might bear witness concerning the light," repeating ἐγένετο, or ἀπεσταλμένος [ἦν], or ἦλθεν, from i. 6—7 (but see 2112)³: similarly ix. 3 "Neither did this man sin nor his parents but on the contrary [he was born blind] in order that the works of God should be manifested," referring to the question of the disciples "Who did sin...that he was born blind?" (but see 2112).

² "But [] in order that," in the whole of this paragraph = ἀλλ' ἵνα.

[2108] In xiv. 30—31 above quoted, the negative clause "hath nothing in me," means "he finds no sin in me." The opposite of this would be "he finds righteousness in me." But instead of supplying this or any clause, the best plan perhaps is to connect together "But on the contrary...even so I do (οὕτως ποιῶ)," so that the meaning is, "Satan does not find sin in me [and constrain me to die because of my sin], but on the contrary—[unconstrained by any law of sin or Satan] in order that the world may know..., and even as the Father gave me commandment—so I do," i.e. I act sinlessly and voluntarily for His glory. In that case, the principal verb is not omitted but is placed at the end of the sentence.

[2109] In the following instances, where there is no negative clause immediately preceding ἀλλά, the context suggests the ellipsis of some exclamation of sorrow for sin as being "[evil indeed], but yet [ordained] in order that" some divine purpose, or saying of Scripture, may be fulfilled: xiii. 18 "I know that you will not all be saved; I know whom I have chosen: [evil indeed] but yet [it has so come to pass] in order that the Scripture may be fulfilled." Similarly in xv. 24—5 ἀλλά means "but still," and the speaker falls back, in trust, upon the fulfilment of "the word that is written in their law" as being the only consolation: "They have both seen and hated me and my Father; but still [it has been so ordained] in order that...." The evil is regarded as evil, but as evil resulting in the fulfilment of the Law.

[2110 b] Origen, however (Huet ii. 410 D), commenting on the going out of Judas

[2111] There is but one instance of ellipsis with ἀλλ' ἵνα in the Synoptic Tradition. It occurs in Mark alone, and the parallel Matthew and Luke are of interest as shewing how such a missing clause might be variously supplied. The Three Synoptists, after substantially agreeing that Jesus said "I was with you '[day] by day' in the Temple and ye did not seize me," give His following words thus:

Mk xiv. 49
"but in order that (ἀλλ' ἵνα) the Scriptures might be fulfilled."

Mt. xxvi. 56
"but (δέ) all this is come to pass (γέγονεν) in order that the Scriptures of the Prophets might be fulfilled."

Lk. xxii. 53
"but (ἀλλ') this is your hour and the power of darkness."

Here it would be an extremely weak interpretation, in Mark, to repeat the preceding verb, "seize" (so as to make the sense "but [ye have seized me] in order that"). A better course is to explain it as above, as being an exclamation of mingled sorrow and self-consolation at the temporary triumph of evil: "[evil and strange] but yet, [ordained] in order that the Scriptures might be fulfilled." Matthew takes it so, and expressly asserts that "all this" (τοῦτο ὅλον) came to pass according to divine decree. Luke, on the other hand, seems to emphasize the fact that the arrest took place by night: "Ye did not seize me by day; but [now ye seize me by night], this is your [appointed] hour, fit for a deed of darkness."

[2112] In the light of this passage we must perhaps be prepared to say that in one at least of the Johannine instances (i. 8, ix. 3) explained above (2107) by a repetition of a preceding verb, John may have intended to supply, as Matthew does here, "now all this came to pass," so that the meaning of Christ's reply about the blind man (ix. 3) would be, "No particular sin of the parents or of the child in any pre-existing condition explains the facts: the whole was ordained for the glory of God." Possibly the same explanation applies also to the saying about the Baptist (i. 8). It is characteristic of John's style that he so often uses a phrase—

after receiving the sop from Jesus (xii. 30) says τέλεον ἐξῆλθεν ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἀνάλογον τῷ Ἐξῆλθον ἐξ ἡμῶν, apparently illustrating the "going out" in the Gospel by the "going out" in the Epistle, and taking the latter as revolt, or secession. According to that view, the rendering would be "They went out as rebels from us. [An evil, indeed,] but still they were never in heart belonging to us," i.e. but still the evil would have been greater if they had really belonged to us and had yet fallen away.

perhaps borrowed from the early Greek vernacular Gospel and retained in one instance by Mark alone of the Synoptists—that leaves the reader in some doubt as to what is alleged to have happened, but insists that it happened for a certain purpose.

(ζ) "I_{NA} dependent on verb implied in question

[2113] i. 22 "They said therefore to him, Who art thou (τίς εἶ;)? that we may give an answer to them that sent us."

ix. 36 "He answered [and said], And who is he, Lord, that I may believe on him?"

"Tell us," and (2157) "thou wilt surely tell me," may be severally supplied before "that."

(η) "I_{NA} with indicative (2690)

[2114] "I_{NA} with future indicative occurs in vii. 3 "in order that thy disciples also shall behold (θεωρήσουσι)," xvii. 2 "in order that all that thou hast given to him he shall give (δώσει) to them eternal life." This (comp. i Cor. ix. 18 ἵνα θήσω) is fairly frequent in N.T. But i Jn v. 20 "he hath given to us a mind that we may be recognising (ἵνα γινώσκουμεν)" stands on a different footing, being probably a mere misspelling arising from the confusion of ο and ω (966 a). Compare Gal. vi. 9—12 θερίσομεν (SCFG etc. -ωμεν)...ὥς καιρὸν ἔχωμεν (so W.H. with NB*, but Lightf. (2696) ἔχομεν)...ἐργαζώμεθα (AB* -όμεθα)...διώκωνται (ACFG etc. -ονται). In the context, the writer says "See with what large (πηλίκους, but B* ἡλίκους) letters I have written to you with my own hand." It is possible that the Apostle, like some writers in the Egyptian papyri, habitually interchanged ο and ω; and early reverence for the autograph may have preserved some traces of the interchange in the best Greek MSS. (2691). This however will not explain Jn xvii. 3 (ADL etc.) ἵνα γινώσκουσιν (d cognoscant) where possibly some scribes took the meaning to be "so that they know." In the difficult passage (1673 c) v. 20 ἵνα ὑμεῖς θαυμάζητε (SS "and do not wonder") NL have θαυμάζετε. In xii. 40 ἵνα μὴ ἴδωσιν...καὶ ἰάσονται αὐτούς, John follows Is. vi. 10 (LXX, but Sym. ἰαθῇ), and so does Mt. xiii. 15. Compare Eph. vi. 3 ἵνα εὖ σοι γένηται καὶ ἔσῃ (which deviates from LXX both of Ex. xx. 12 and of Deut. v. 16). This resembles W.H. marg. in Jn xv. 8 ἵνα καρπὸν...φέρητε καὶ γενήσεσθε ἐμοὶ μαθηταί—a natural transition, but BDL have γένησθε.

(θ) "I_{NA}, connexion of

Ἰουδαῖοι, ἐπεὶ π. ἦν, ἵνα μὴ μείνῃ... ἦν γάρ... ἠρώτησαν τὸν Π. ἵνα...¹. The connexion is doubtful in xix. 28 μετὰ τοῦτο εἰδὼς ὁ Ἰησοῦς ὅτι ἤδη πάντα τετέλεσται ἵνα τελειωθῇ ἡ γραφὴ λέγει, Διψῶ. Chrysostom paraphrases thus, εἰδὼς οὖν πάντα πεπληρωμένα, λέγει, Διψῶ, πάλιν ἐνταῦθα προφητεῖαν πληρῶν, apparently connecting the ἵνα clause with λέγει, and the rhythm of the sentence being like that of xix. 31 somewhat favours this view. If that were correct, the best interpretation would be that the Son felt the thirst and uttered the expression of it in order that the Scripture might receive its fulfilment (not that He deliberately uttered the word in order that a particular passage of Scripture might be fulfilled (1722)). But, on the other side, Johannine usage decidedly favours the rendering “knowing that all things were now accomplished in order that the Scripture might be perfectly fulfilled”—provided that we read what follows in the light of these words. Then “He saith, ‘I thirst’” will mean, “[Knowing, I say, that the time had come for the supreme perfection of the Father’s will as expressed in Scripture] he saith, ‘I thirst.’” The writer indicates (1) that all things were accomplished that the Scripture might be fulfilled, (2) that Jesus knew this when He uttered the words “I thirst.” He leads us to infer that Jesus uttered the words as the crown of that accomplishment and with a view to that fulfilment. Our conclusion is, then, that according to Johannine grammar the ἵνα clause depends on τετέλεσται; but, according to Johannine suggestion and intention, the ἵνα clause is to be repeated so as to depend on λέγει.

(ι) ἸΝΔ...ἸΝΔ

[2116] Such a sentence as “In order that x may come to pass in order that y may come to pass” would naturally mean that an immediate object x is to be attained with a view to the attainment of an ultimate object y—so that the second ἵνα clause would be grammatically (though not mentally) subordinate to the first. But the second clause may be reiterative—y being another form of expressing x—“in order that [I say] y may take place,” so that the second clause is coordinate with the first. In xiii. 34 "A new commandment give I unto you, that (ἵνα) ye love one another—even as (καθώς) I loved you, that (ἵνα) ye (ὑμεῖς) also love one another," the second clause is reiterative (though amplified by the definition, "even as").

[2117] This sequence of ἵνα...καθώς...ἵνα ("In order that ye should love—[How love?] Even as I loved, that ye should love") suggests that we should arrange in the same way (as being an answer to the question "How glorify the Father?") xvii. 2 "Glorify thy Son that the Son may glorify thee—even as thou gavest unto him authority over all flesh, that all that thou hast given to him, he may give unto them life eternal." According to this view, we may briefly paraphrase the latter part of the sentence thus, "[How say I 'that the Son may glorify thee'? I mean] that the Son may glorify thee by giving to others even as thou hast given to him." It is implied that the Father is the Supreme Giver and that the supreme authority consists in "giving." Moreover the highest glorifying of the Father consists in giving. Whosoever gives to others, as from the Father, gives what he has received from the Father, and glorifies the Father in the hearts of those who "see his good works and glorify his Father who is in heaven¹." Nearly the same sense might be obtained (but not in such accordance with Johannine style) by making the second ἵνα, not parallel with the first, but dependent on ἔδωκας, and by taking καθώς as, in effect, καὶ γάρ, "for indeed": "Glorify thy Son, that the Son may glorify thee: for indeed thou hast given all authority to him in order that he may give life to others [and that he may thus glorify thee]." A third arrangement, to take the second ἵνα clause as grammatically subordinate to the first ("that he may glorify thee... that he may give unto them eternal life") would be quite contrary to all Johannine thought as well as to the interpretation of the sequence in xiii. 34.

[2118] A similar sequence of ἵνα, καθώς, and ἵνα, but followed by a third ἵνα, is in xvii. 20—1 "But not about these alone do I pray but also about them that are to believe through their word in me, that all may be one—even as (καθώς) thou, Father, in me, and I in thee, that [I say] they also may be in us², that the world may believe that thou didst send me," where the second ἵνα clause appears to be reiterative, and coordinate with the first, while the third ἵνα clause is subordinate. The same sequence, but perhaps not the same connexion, occurs in xvii. 22—3, which, if arranged like xvii. 20—1, would run thus, "And I too have given to them the glory thou hast given to me that they may be one—even as (καθώς) we (ἡμεῖς) [are] one, I in them, and thou in me, that they may be perfected into one, that the world may recognise that thou didst send me and didst love them even as thou didst love me." The sense, however, demanded in the latter passage seems to require "I in thee" [not "them"] "and thou in me"—if the words are to be arranged thus. If the words are not corrupt, it seems necessary to punctuate xvii. 22—3 as W.H., with no pause before καθώς: "that they may be one even as we [are] one, I in them and thou in me, that [I say] they may be perfected into one." But, even taken thus, the words seem to shew a want of parallelism. We seem to need either (1) "that they may be one...[namely] I in them and they in me," or (2) "even as we are one, [namely] I in thee and thou in me." The present text seems to confuse (1) and (2)¹. If SS has a blank in the MS. "may be [] that the world may believe." Burk. suggests "a possible restoration" meaning "united." On καγὼ see 2127 b.

² [2118 a] xvii. 21 (R.V.) "That they also may be in us," A.V. has "That they also may be one in us," reading ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐν ἡμῖν ἐν ὧσιν, with Σ AC²L.

the text is correct, the best plan will be to take "I in them and thou in me" as an appositional clause explaining the meaning of "one" in "that they may be one."

[2119] The underlying thought is, perhaps, as Clement says, that "one" means "God," and that the indwelling of God is the sole cause of unity. But how can God the Father dwell "in" men? Only if the Son dwells "in" men. If the Son dwells "in" men, and the Father dwells "in" the Son, it follows (spiritually as well as logically) that God the Father dwells in men, which means also that unity dwells in them, so that they are one. Probably this is the meaning: but the precise text and the precise grammatical explanation of it, must, at present, be given up as unascertainable.

[2120] The following instance has been placed last, out of order, owing to its special character, xv. 16 "Ye chose not me, but I chose you, and set you [in the vineyard] that (ἵνα) ye might go [the] way [that I go] (1659—60) and [that ye] might bear fruit and [that] your fruit might abide—that (ἵνα) whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name he may give you." "Fruit," as always in John¹, means the vintage or harvest of souls, which elsewhere the Apostles are said to of his work. A long extract would naturally be conformed by scribes to the canonical text. They would take more pains about it than about a short quotation or allusion. Origen (De Princip. i. 6) quotes xvii. 22, 23 correctly, but, later on, he mixes up xvii. 24, 21, 22, giving, as part of the quotation (ib. ii. 3. 5) "and that, as I and thou are one, these also may be one in us (? one with us)," and, later still, (ib. iii. 6. 1) "and that as thou and I are one, they also may be one in (?) us," where Jerome confirms Rufinus in his translation of this quotation of Origen's (Clark transl. vol. ii. p. 264). Epiphanius, too, quotes as a saying of Jesus (Haer. 743 A) "and the saying, 'The two of us are one, that they also may be one' (καὶ ὅτι, Οἱ δύο ἐν ἑσμεν ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐν ὧσιν)" and (ib. 793 A) "Make them that they may be in me (? one with me) as I also and thou are one (πολῶσιν αὐτοὺς ἵνα ὧσιν ἐν ἐμοὶ ὡς ἐγὼ καὶ σὺ ἐν ἑσμεν)" and (ib. B) "the two of us are one (οἱ δύο ἐν ἑσμεν)."

[2118 d] xvii. 22—3 is thus given by W.H. ...ἵνα ὧσιν ἐν καθὼς ἡμεῖς ἐν, ἐγὼ ἐν αὐτοῖς καὶ σὺ ἐν ἐμοί, but by R.V. "that they may be one, even as we [are] one; I in them and thou in me," SS begins a new sentence at xvii. 23 thus: "...that they may be one even as we are one. I shall be with them and thou with me," introducing the new sentence with "I." Similarly Migne prints both a (which has "Et ego in illis") and b and f ("Ego in eis"). Many Gk and Lat. authorities ins. ἑσμεν before ἐγὼ. All these facts indicate early differences of connexion. It may be worth noting that a, b, and f, have (at the end of xvii. 22) "sicut et nos," e "quomodo et nos"—facts that suggest confusion between καθὼς, καὶ ὡς, and ὡς καί.

"reap," but here they are said to "bear" it as a vine-branch bears its clusters¹.

[2121] The question is, Why does not the sentence end with "that your fruit might abide," i.e. that the Church of Christ might be spread? Is not that worthy to be the ultimate object? Is it not bathos to say to Apostles "in order that (ἵνα) the Church of Christ may be spread—in order that (ἵνα) your prayers may be answered"? It certainly would be bathos if we did not assume the last words to mean "in order that your prayers for more fruit and for more gaining of souls may continually be answered." Thus taken, the clause is not bathos. It reminds the Apostles that the more they succeed, the more they must remember that their success depends on God's answer to their prayers, and—since divine answer to human prayer depends on human unity with divine will—on the oneness of their will with His. According to this view, the meaning is, "That ye may save souls—that [I say] your prayers for the souls of men may ever be heard²."

(x) Καθώς

(a) Suspensive

[2122] Καθώς, when suspensive, keeps the reader's attention in suspense till he reaches the principal verb later on, e.g. "even as I... so do ye"; when supplementary or explanatory, it follows the verb ("Do ye...even as I"). Καθώς is never used suspensively in Matthew. Luke uses it thus thrice in the Double Tradition, where the parallel Matthew has ὥσπερ etc.³ John has suspensive καθώς

about a dozen times, always in Christ's words, and mostly indicating a correspondence between the Father and the Son, or between the Son and those whom the Son sends¹.

(β) Followed by καί or καὶ γάρ in apodosis

[2123] "Even as" in protasis naturally prepares the way for "precisely so," "altogether so," "al(l)so" in apodosis ("even as you do, he also will do"). In the Johannine Gospel, exhibiting the correspondence between the Father and the Son, as proclaimed by the latter, and between the Son and the children of the Father, cases of this idiom are necessarily frequent, and, in particular, "Even as he [the Father] does...I also (καὶ γάρ) do." In English, there is no ambiguity except that we may not feel quite sure whether "also" is intended to suggest "besides" or "in precisely the same way." But in Greek, where "also" is represented by καί, which regularly means "and," the words will be manifestly liable to ambiguity, if the sense admits of the rendering "Even as he does...and [even as] I do." Καθώς followed by καὶ γάρ occurs in the following five instances:—

[2124] (1) vi. 57 "Even as the living Father sent me and I (καὶ γάρ) live on account of (διὰ) the Father, he also (R.V. so he) that eateth me (καὶ ὁ τρώγων με)—he also [I say] (καὶ κέῖνος) shall live on account of me." Here R.V. agrees with A.V. in rendering καὶ γάρ "and I," but Chrysostom and Severus of Antioch both render it "so I," and this makes good sense: "Even as the living Father sent me, so I live on account of the Father" [i.e. so I, corresponding to His will, live (2297 foll.) merely to do His will, or on His account*], "and he that eateth me shall [in the same way] live on account of me²."

The words might, in theory, be connected with what precedes: vi. 56—7 ὁ τρώγων μου τὴν σάρκα καὶ πίνων μου τὸ αἷμα ἐν ἐμοὶ μένει καὶ γάρ ἐν αὐτῷ, καθὼς ἀπέστειλέν με ὁ ζῶν πατήρ καὶ γάρ ζῶ διὰ τὸν πατέρα. But it would be against the suspensive usage of καθώς, and is in other respects improbable. In the next instance, however, R.V. treats καθώς as non-suspensive.

[2125] (2) Καθώς is taken as explanatory (not suspensive) by R.V. in x. 14—15 “I am the good shepherd; and I know mine own, and mine own know me, even as the Father knoweth me, and I know the Father; and I lay down my life for the sheep¹.” But the generally suspensive use of καθώς in Christ’s words, up to and beyond this point in the Gospel², would suggest that it is to be taken as in A.V., “As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father, and I lay down my life for the sheep.” It is true that there is an attractive symmetry and equality in a kind of double proportion between four terms in R.V. “I know mine own and mine own know me, even as the Father knoweth me and I know the Father.” Moreover A.V. may have been somewhat influenced by inferior mss., which alter “mine own know me” into “I am known by mine.” But still there is something to be said for the view of Chrysostom, who says that “the knowledge is not equal” between the shepherd and the sheep but that it is “equal” between the Father and the Son³.

[2126] According to this view, there would be (one might suppose) a distinct pause after the words “mine own know me,” while Jesus is preparing to teach His disciples for the first time what is implied by personal knowledge. This has not yet been mentioned by Him, though He has spoken of knowing “concerning the teaching whether it be of God,” of knowing “the truth,” and even of knowing “that I AM⁴.” According to the Greek doctrine, summarised in the epigram at Delphi “Know thyself,” the knowledge of one’s own nature was the highest knowledge. According to the Synoptic doctrine of Christ, some knowledge of one’s own defects (the beam in one’s own eye) was but a rudimentary preparation for “seeing clearly” to help one’s neighbour. According to the Johannine doctrine, the highest knowledge of all was that knowledge, or understanding, between the Father and the Son which, in some mysterious way, implied self-sacrifice: "I know mine own and mine own know me. [But what is this 'knowing'? It is a mystery to be perceived through experience, and to be felt and acted on, not to be expressed or comprehended in mere words]—Even as the Father knoweth me so I too know the Father and [this knowledge is the reason why] I lay down my life for the sheep."

[2127] (3) In xv. 9 (R.V.) "Even as the Father hath loved me, I also (καὶ γώ) have loved you: abide ye in my love¹," (A.V.) "As the Father hath loved me so have I loved you," W.H. txt places only a comma before "abide," so that the meaning would be "Even as the Father loved me and I loved you, abide in (μείνατε ἐν) my love." But, if that were the meaning, might not John have marked the apodosis by inserting "ye also" (μείνατε καὶ ὑμεῖς)²? And is not R.V. (and A.V.) more consonant with the general meaning of καὶ γώ in these sentences, and with the fact that John says "abide in my love" (not "in our love")? (4) In xvii. 18 "Even as thou didst send me into the world, I also (καὶ γώ) sent them into the world," R.V. and A.V. agree in "As thou...even so...I." In (5) xx. 21 "Even as the Father hath sent me, I also (καὶ γώ) send you," R.V. and A.V. have "As...even so send I you." A comparison of the five instances confirms the view that A.V. is right in (2) and that in each of the five καὶ γώ should be rendered "I also," or, more idiomatically, "*even so*³ I."

(γ) Supplementary⁴

[2128] Outside Christ's words, supplementary καθώς occurs early in the Gospel in the phrases "even as Isaiah said" and "even as it is written," and, later on, "even as it is written" and "even as is the custom⁵." But, in Christ's words, the earlier portion of the

³ [2127 b] In xvii. 21 "in order that all may be one—even as thou, Father, in me, (?) I also in thee—in order that they also may be.....," the connexion is doubtful (2132 a). It may be an exception. But it is quite consistent with John's style that the words "even as thou [art] in me, so [am] I in thee," may be a parenthetic explanation of the divine unity implied in "One."

Gospel affords hardly any instances. The first is v. 23 "that all may honour the Son even as they honour the Father." There are some indications (2066 b) that this may be evangelistic comment.

[2129] (?) vii. 37—8 "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink: he that believeth on me—even as the Scripture said—rivers from his belly shall flow, of living water¹." Here it is impossible to tell what passage or passages of Scripture the writer has in view (1722 k), and whether "even as" refers to what precedes or follows. Perhaps the most probable "Scripture" is Isaiah's invitation "Ho every one that thirsteth come ye to the waters," with the context describing the fertilising of the wilderness as the result of the Word of God². "He that believeth on me (i.e. in the Word)" appears to be parallel to "If any man thirst [i.e. for the Word]"; and "the Scripture" may refer to what precedes (i.e. the "thirsting" or "believing") as well as to what follows (i.e. the "flowing" or diffusion). We cannot confidently say that καθώς here is suspensive or supplementary.

[2130] In xiii. 34 "A new commandment give I unto you that (ἵνα) ye love one another—even as I have loved you, that (ἵνα) ye also love one another³," R.V. txt and A.V. agree in making καθώς suspensive. If the second "that" had been omitted, καθώς would be manifestly suspensive ("Even as I...so ye"). As it is, after giving the simple precept "that ye love," the writer seems to repeat it emphatically in order to define the nature of the love of the brethren for one another and to shew its correspondence to the love of the Son for them: "that ye love one another—[I mean] even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." It would be very weak to take καθώς supplementarily and the last clause as a mere repetition, "that ye love one another as I have loved you—that ye also [I say, likewise] love one another."

Him defining the future love that the brethren are to have for one another by reference to the past love that He has had for them: "love one another even as I have loved you." And, as a fact, in the Last Discourse, the hitherto almost invariably suspensive construction is occasionally exchanged for a supplementary one, e.g. xv. 10 "If ye keep my commandments ye will abide in my love even as I have kept the commandments of the Father and abide in his love," xv. 12 "This is my commandment that ye love one another even as I have loved you." Of the same character are the next four instances of καθώς in xvii. 2, 11, 14, 16.

[2132] This is not unnatural. As long as Christ is looking forward to His work on earth, He impresses on His disciples the truth that, "even as" this or that is in heaven, so He will do, or is doing, this or that on earth. But when His work on earth is on the verge of completion, He refers to it (after the manner of Jewish references to Scripture, "even as it is written") mentioning it as an accomplished fact, a new Law for His disciples, "obey even as I have obeyed," "love even as I have loved." And this view prevails in the Last Discourse except when He is looking forward to the future on earth, not now for Himself, but for His disciples (xvii. 18 and xx. 21), "Even as the Father hath sent me I also send you"—which is the last instance of all¹.

(xi) Καί

(a) Καί in narrative (Hebraic)

[2133] The opening words of the Bible exhibit a frequent Hebraic use of "and," e.g. "And the earth was...and darkness was...and the spirit of God moved...and God said...and there was light...and God saw the light...and God divided the light...and God called...and the darkness he called...and there was evening and there was morning." Bruder, referring to this use of καί as "in oratione historica ex simplici Hebraeorum narrandi modo¹," shews, by his tabulations, that John uses it very rarely as compared with any of the Synoptists. The short Gospel of Mark has it more than 400 times², John less than 100 times. It may be said that John does not deal much with narrative, but mainly with discourse. That holds good also of Matthew, and in some degree of Luke, so that it does not explain John's abstinence.

[2132 b] In the Epistle, καθὼς (total 9) is sometimes suspensive, e.g. ii. 27 "And even as he taught you, abide" (1915 iii b); sometimes supplementary, e.g. iii. 23 "That we may love one another even as he gave commandment." Its most noticeable use is in the phrase "even as he," where He means Christ, always expressed by ἐκεῖνος (2382), in passages bidding Christians do, and be, "even as" their Lord (ii. 6, iii. 3, 7, iv. 17).

[2134] Besides, if we take the first and the last chapters of John, both of which consist almost wholly of narrative, how are we to explain that in the last chapter, consisting of twenty-five verses, Bruder gives the Hebraic καί as occurring only once³, whereas in the first twenty-five verses of the first chapter we have about eighteen instances? For example, the Prologue begins "...and the Word was with God and the Word was God...and without him was not anything...and the life was the light...and the light shineth...and the darkness apprehended it not." The usage continues even when the writer brings us down from the Word to the testimony of John, "And this is the testimony... and he confessed and he denied not...and they asked him...and he saith...and he answered" etc. The explanation is probably this. In the opening of the Gospel John follows the style of the opening of Genesis, not in affectation, but with a symbolism natural to him, sympathetically describing what was "in the beginning" of spiritual Being, as Genesis describes what went on in the beginning of material creation. But after the Resurrection, when the Apostles are receiving their morning meal before going forth to convert the whole world, Greeks as well as Jews, "all things are become new," and the old-world Hebraic style is thrown aside. The Johannine use of καί in narrative, meaning "and" (as distinct from "also,"

² [2133 b] Of course, this is in part explained by the predominance of narrative in Mk. Mt. has it about 250, Lk. about 380 times.

"even" etc.) seldom if ever causes ambiguity and calls for no detailed comment. The following sections, which will deal with καί in speech as well as in narrative, will confine themselves almost entirely to cases where the meaning is ambiguous or obscure, or where the precise emphasis is doubtful.

(β) Καί connecting affirmation and negation

[2135] In Hebrew, "and" is frequently used where English would use "and yet" or "but." John adopts this usage in many cases, especially where one of the clauses connected by "and" has a negative, or a word implying a negative:—i. 10—11 "The world was made through him and [yet] the world knew him not. He came unto his own [house] and [yet] his own [household] received him not," iii. 11—12 "That which we have seen do we witness and [yet] our witness ye receive not....I told you and [yet] ye believe not," iii. 32 "What he hath seen and heard, this he witnesseth, and [yet] his witness no one receiveth," vii. 19 "Hath not Moses given you the law, and [yet] none of you doeth the law?" vii. 30 "They sought therefore to seize him, and [yet] no one laid his hand on him because his hour had not yet come," viii. 49 "I honour my Father and [yet] ye dishonour (ἀτιμάζετε) me" (where ἀ. has a negative force), viii. 54—5 "Of whom ye say that he is your God, and [yet] ye know him not," viii. 57 "Thou art not yet fifty years old and [yet] thou hast seen Abraham?" ix. 30 "Ye know not whence he is and [yet] he hath opened mine eyes," xiv. 9 "Have I been with you so long, and [yet] knowest thou me not, Philip?" xiv. 24 "He that loveth me not keepeth not my words and [yet] the word that ye hear is not mine but the Father's who sent me," xvi. 32 "There cometh a time....and ye shall leave me alone; and [yet] I am not alone, because the Father is with me," xx. 29 "Blessed are they that have not seen and [yet] have believed."

(γ) Καί = "and yet"

[2136] Καί is thus used in some cases where both the connected clauses are affirmative, or affirmatively interrogative ("is it not?"), but the sense implies contrariety: iii. 19 "The light hath come.... and [yet] men loved the darkness," iv. 20 "Our fathers worshipped in this mountain, and [yet] ye say that in Jerusalem is the place....," vi. 49 "Your fathers did eat the manna....and [yet] they died," i.e. and yet it did not save them from death, vi. 70 "Did not I choose you the twelve, and [yet] one of you is a devil?" ix. 34 "Thou wast altogether born in sins and [yet] thou teachest us!" x. 39 "They [therefore] sought again to seize him, and [yet] he came forth from their hand," xi. 8 "The Jews but now were seeking to stone thee and [yet] thou goest thither again!"

[2137] Contrast the Hebraic "and," used in the manifestation of the risen Saviour to Mary Magdalene, with the Hellenic "however" used in the manifestation to the Seven Disciples:—(1) xx. 14 "And she beholdeth Jesus standing and [yet] knew not that it was Jesus," (2) xxi. 4 "Jesus stood on the shore; the disciples did not however (οὐ μέντοι) know that it was Jesus."

[2138] Perhaps the construction with "and" is sometimes preferred by John because he wishes to emphasize the mystery of the ways of Providence. At all events, on two occasions, after saying that people wished to seize Jesus, or that He was teaching in the Temple, (vii. 30, viii. 20) "and no man" arrested Him, he adds "because his hour had not yet come." But elsewhere, when there is no such reference to the "hour," he does not use the Hebraic construction: vii. 44 "Now some wished to seize him, but [in spite of that] (ἀλλ') no man laid hands on him."

[2140] The same rule does not apply so frequently to the Johannine use of "and not," which is used in varied contexts, e.g. "A little while and ye behold me not," "They have taken the body of the Lord and we know not where they have laid him,"

"Thou knowest all things and hast not need," "Ye have neither seen him and ye have not his word abiding in you." Still, the instances in which "and not" is, or may be, adversative, slightly exceed the non-adversative¹. Nor is it fanciful to say that this curious Johannine characteristic reflects the writer's view of the world—its double nature of light and darkness, its disappointments, incongruities, and pathetic paradoxes, which he feels to be often expressible better by an "and" than by a coarse, commonplace, obtrusive "but": "He was in the world and—the world knew him not," "He came unto his own, and—his own received him not."

(δ) Special instances of καί = "and yet"

[2141] This general preponderance of adversative meaning must weigh in the interpretation of particular passages of which the meaning is disputed, e.g. i. 5 "The light shineth in the darkness and [yet]—the darkness apprehended it not" (1443, 1735 ε foll.) [instead of "and the darkness overcame it not"]. In iii. 13 "If I told you earthly things and ye believe not, how shall ye believe [i.e. ye will assuredly not believe] if I tell you heavenly things? And [yet] no man hath ascended into heaven except him that descended out of heaven...", the meaning appears to be, "Ye will not believe and yet the truth is told you by him who alone knows the truth." In v. 39—40 ("Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think to have in them eternal life, and they are they that bear witness concerning me, and [yet] ye have no desire (καὶ οὐ θέλετε) to come unto me that ye

[2140 b] In his first six chapters Luke freely uses the additive "and not," i. 7 "and they had no child," ii. 43 "and his parents knew not," ii. 50 "and they understood not," iv. 2 "and he ate nothing." Later on, in Luke's adversative instances, there is probably not one that presents any ambiguity.

may have life") "ye search...and" is more probably correct than "Search...and" (2439 (i)).

[2142] In vii. 27—8, the Jews first declare that they know the origin of Jesus, implying that consequently He cannot be the Messiah, "But [as for] this [man] we know whence he is, whereas (δέ) the Messiah—when he comes, no man is to know whence he is." Jesus replies, apparently repeating their assertion of knowledge as an exclamation of His own, and shewing its falsity: "(lit.) Both me ye 'know' and ye 'know' whence I am! And [yet] I have not come from myself, but he that sent me is true, whom ye know not," i.e. "Ye say ye know my origin, and yet I come from Him who is Truth whom ye know not¹."

[2143] In x. 35 "If he [David] called them gods...and [if] the Scripture cannot be broken," the meaning might be "and [if nevertheless, in spite of so difficult a meaning] the Scripture² cannot be annulled." But οὐ, before δύναται, may be regarded as ἀ in ἀδύνατος, and καὶ οὐ δύναται may be regarded as differing little from a parenthetic ἀδύνατον δέ. And this perhaps is the best view: "If the Psalmist called them gods—and [all know that] the Scripture cannot be annulled—how can ye accuse me?"

Mt. vi. 26 (A.V.)

"...they sow not neither do they reap...yet (καί) [R.V. and] your heavenly Father feedeth them."

Lk. xii. 24 (A.V.)

"...they neither sow nor reap... and (καί) [R.V. and] God feedeth them."

Isaiah vi. 9

R.V.

"Hear ye indeed but (Heb. vanw, "and") understand not."

LXX and Mt. xiii. 14 (R.V.)

"By hearing ye shall hear and (comp. Acts xxviii. 26 "and") shall in no wise understand."

[2145] Apart from all questions of taste it is certain that our Lord, speaking in Aramaic, used the ambiguous vav, capable of meaning "and" or "and yet," and certain also that any Greek translators of Aramaic Christian traditions or of Hebrew Gospels would have the alternative of rendering vav, when used in the latter sense, either literally by καί or freely by words meaning "but," "however" etc. There results a reasonable probability that John, writing many years after the circulation of the Synoptic Tradition, which seldom uses the Hebraic καί in the sense "and yet," deliberately resorted to it as one of many means of forcing his readers to reflect on the many-sidedness of the Lord's doctrine and on the occasional inadequacy of the letter of the earliest Gospels to reproduce the living word. Whatever may have been his motive, or motives, the fact remains that he uses—with a frequency and boldness unparalleled in the Synoptists—the Greek additive conjunction in a non-Greek adversative fashion to introduce adversative clauses with a suddenness that heightens the sense of paradox, thus: v. 43 "I have come in the name of my Father and—ye do not receive me," v. 44 "How can ye believe, receiving glory from one another and—the glory that comes from the only God ye do not seek?" vi. 36 "Ye have both (καί) seen me and—ye do not believe," vii. 36 "Ye shall seek me and—ye shall not find."

(ε) Καί introducing an exclamation

[2146] Καί occasionally introduces an exclamation that may be treated as a question, implying incongruity with a previous statement: ii. 20 "This temple was built in forty-six years: and [yet] thou (emph.) (καὶ σὺ) in three days wilt raise it up!" viii. 57 "Thou art not yet fifty years old, and [yet] thou (unemph.) hast seen Abraham (emph.) (καὶ Ἀ. ἑώρακας; marg. καὶ Ἀ. ἑώρακέν σε)!" xi. 8 "The Jews but now were seeking to stone thee, and [yet] again thou (unemph.) goest thither¹!"

¹ [2146 a] In i. 16 "From his fulness did we all receive, and grace for (ἀντὶ) grace," the καί does not mean "namely," or "that is to say," but "and, what is more," "and indeed," or "yea" (see ἀντὶ, 2284—7). There is probably no instance in Jn where καί means "namely." "Receive" is used absolutely (comp. 1315 and Aboth i. 3, 4, 7 etc.), and καί introduces a new statement about the nature of the reception.

(ζ) Καί meaning "also"

[2147] Καί before a noun or pronoun, corresponding to our "also" after a noun or pronoun, is sometimes used by John to predicate again, what has been predicated before, about a different person or thing¹. Where "not only" precedes², attention is called to "also," and there is no ambiguity or obscurity. But the meaning is liable to be missed in passages where the previous predication is implied (not expressed) or expressed at a considerable interval, e.g. vii. 3 "Depart to Judaea that thy disciples also (ἵνα καὶ οἱ μ. σου) may behold thy works," i.e. "Here in Galilee, among thy countrymen, and kinsfolk, thou hast no disciples worth mentioning: go to Judaea, where thou hast disciples, that they also may behold thy works³." In xii. 10 "But the chief priests took counsel that they might kill Lazarus also," the reference is to xi. 53, the meaning being, in effect, "I have said above (xi. 53) 'From that day forth therefore they took counsel that they might kill him [Jesus]': now I say that they included Lazarus also in their plans⁴."

(η) Καί in Apodosis after ὃς, εἰ, καθὼς etc. in Protasis.

[2148] This construction is frequent in John because he dwells on the principle of correspondence between the visible and the invisible, between the incarnate Son below and the Father above: v. 19—26 "For what things soever he [i.e. the Father] doeth, these the Son also (καὶ ὁ υἱός) likewise (ὁμοίως) doeth....For as the Father... raiseth up, so (οὕτως) the Son also (καὶ ὁ υἱός) quickeneth....For as the Father hath life in himself so (οὕτως) to the Son also (καὶ τῷ υἱῷ) gave he to have life in himself," viii. 19 (comp. xiv. 7) "If ye knew

¹ [2147 a] This construction is most freq. in Lk. In Jn it is about as freq. as in Mt.

² [2147 b] "Not only," οὐ, or μή, μόνον (adv.), Jn v. 18 before verb, οὐ μόνον ἔλκε, elsewhere before noun, xi. 52 οὐχ ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἔθνους μόνον, comp. xii. 9, xiii. 9, xvii. 20. This precise constr. (Bruder) does not occur in the Synoptists exc. Mt. xxi. 21. When Mt. iv. 4, Lk. iv. 4 quote Deut. viii. 3 "Not by bread alone," they have οὐκ ἐπ' ἄρτι μόνον (adj.) (as LXX). In Jn xi. 52—xvii. 20, οὐ and μόνον (adv.) are always separated, "not for the nation alone," "not because of Jesus alone" etc.

me, ye would know my Father also (κ. τὸν π. μου),” xii. 26 “Where I am there shall be my servant also (κ. ὁ διάκονος ὁ ἐμός)¹.”

(θ) Καὶ ἡμεῖς

[2149] Καὶ ἡμεῖς, ὑμᾶς etc., meaning “ye also,” “you also” etc., is so frequent in John², that the frequency almost suffices of itself to determine the sense in xiv. 19 “...but ye behold me : because (ὅτι) I (emph.) (ἐγώ) live, ye also (καὶ ὑμεῖς) shall live.” Here R.V. marg. gives “and ye shall live.” But this,—whether rendered “ye behold me...and ye shall live,” or “because I live and [because] ye shall live”—makes very weak sense. R.V. txt makes perfect sense and accords with Johannine usage. In xvi. 21—22 “the woman hath sorrow...and ye (R.V.) therefore (οὖν) have sorrow,” might, and probably should, be rendered “ye also therefore have sorrow,” since καί implies correspondence, and not mere addition.

(ι) Καί in Crasis

[2150] Καί is always combined by crasis with ἐγώ (freq.), with ἐμοί (once, xvii. 6), and with ἐμέ (twice, vii. 28, xvi. 32) except in antithesis xv. 24 καὶ ἐμὲ καὶ τὸν πατέρα μου. It is combined with ἐκεῖ in xi. 54, but not in ii. 12, iii. 22, vi. 3. With the masculine ἐκεῖνος it is always combined, except in xix. 35 on which see 2383. For καὶν, see 2160.

(κ) Κἀκεῖνος³

[2151] After a subject expressed by a participle, ἐκεῖνος is sometimes used appositionally for emphasis, “he and no other,” and where καί is prefixed to it, the meaning is “he also,” or “he in the same way,” or “he on his side” etc.:—vi. 57 “He that eateth me, he also (κἀκεῖνος) shall live on account of me,” i.e. just as I live on account of the Father (see context); xiv. 12 “He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he also (κἀκεῖνος) do,” i.e. as well as I myself. In vii. 29 “I am from him (παρ’ αὐτοῦ) and he (emph.) sent me (κἀκεῖνός με ἀπέστειλεν)” the καί is probably additive, and the meaning is that Jesus comes not only from the presence of the Father but also by His express sending, "and he, and no other, sent me¹." In x. 16 "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also (καὶ αὐτὰς) must I bring..." the meaning might be (theoretically) "and them must I bring," but John's predilection for asyndeton, and the appropriateness of the meaning "also" here, indicate that καί is emphatic, not additive. The only other instance is xvii. 24 "that where I (emph.) am they also (καὶ αὐτοὶ) may be together with me (μετ' ἐμοῦ)," i.e. "that they, as well as I, may be there"; the phrase μετ' ἐμοῦ suggests that they are to be not only in the same place but "together" in mind and spirit.

² vii. 47, ix. 27, xiii. 14, 15, 33, 34, xiv. 3, xv. 20. On viii. 38 καὶ ὑμεῖς οὖν... ποιεῖτε, see 2193—4 and 2359.

(λ) Καί, "also," connexion of

[2153] This distinction is ignored by A.V. in xii. 18 διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὑπήντησεν αὐτῷ ὁ ὄχλος, where A.V. has "for this cause the people also." R.V. has "for this cause also the multitude," which would naturally mean "for this cause as well as for other causes." But the words ought to mean that the multitude, besides doing other things (e.g. noising abroad the raising of Lazarus) also, or actually, took the extreme course of organizing a procession in Christ's honour, i.e. "went also to meet him," or "actually went to meet him²."

(μ) Καί "also" in viii. 25

[2154] There is great difficulty in viii. 25 "They therefore said unto him, Who art thou? Jesus said unto them, [In] the beginning whatever I also speak unto you (τὴν ἀρχὴν ὅτι καὶ λαλῶ ὑμῖν, punctuated by W.H. txt interrog., marg. affirm.).” Chrysostom’s explanation is as follows, “Now what he means is to this effect, Even at all to hear the words that fall from me ye are unworthy, much more are ye unworthy to understand also who I am¹.” Cramer quotes Cyril thus, “I am justly punished, says [He], because I made a beginning even of [receiving] word[s] from you, because I have addressed to [you] aught of the things that know [? εἰδοῦσιν ? εἰκοῦσιν “that seem likely”] to profit [you] and took counsel [how] to deliver [you], I have been counted thus cheap in your estimation².” It will be observed that the two do not agree. Chrysostom apparently takes τὴν ἀρχὴν as ὅλως, “at all,” but Cyril takes it as “beginning.” Chrysostom’s interpretation would require οὐ, or τί καί, or some negative context, which is found with τὴν ἀρχὴν when it means “at all” (“never at all,” “not at all” etc.)³.

[2156] If ὅτι is a relative pronoun the meaning would seem to be that Jesus identifies Himself with that which He speaks, i.e. with the words which, as He says (xii. 48), "shall judge" those who reject Him. Then, perhaps, the καί may be explained with reference to what precedes—where He has said to the Jews, "If ye believe not that I am"—so that the meaning is, "[I am] that which I also speak." From an ordinary person, this would mean "I am as good as my word." From a prophet, it might mean "I am the messenger of God, nay, the message of God." But coming from the Logos—who is both the Word and the Act of God, the Messenger of righteousness and justice and also the Righteous Judge Himself—it implies a unique and mysterious identity between the Personality and the Word. As John the Baptist says (i. 23) "I [am not to be accepted as the son of Zachariah the priest, or on any other personal grounds, but as being] a voice (ἐγὼ φωνή)," so Jesus says "I am [not to be accepted as the Son of David, born at Nazareth, or Bethlehem, but as being] that which also I speak from the first," i.e. the Logos, as He had spoken it from the first, consistently¹.

(ν) Καί meaning "[indeed], and...?"

cast it out. [How was that?]." In both cases, the question is implied in the tone, and in the verb "questioned," which makes all the difference. In Mk ii. 7 διαλογιζόμενοι ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν, τί οὗτος οὕτως λαλεῖ; W.H. print ὅτι only in marg., and Swete gives, as the authority for it, only B (whose authority is weak on insertion and omission (2650) of O) and one cursive. See 2231 d—e.

The adv. ἀρχήν (and τὴν ἀρχήν) when meaning "at all" appears always (Steph.) to have a negative context expressed or implied. It is implied in Clem. Hom. vi. 11 τί καὶ τὴν ἀρχήν διαλέγομαι; i.e. οὐ δεῖ διαλέγεσθαι. Comp. ib. xix. 6. Without a negative, it means "at the first," as in Gen. xli. 21, xliii. 18, 20, and Just. Mart. Apol. § 10 (bis).

phrase ("believe in the Son of man"), and he craves additional explanation "[Thou sayest this] and [thou wilt surely tell me] who is he?" Somewhat similarly in answer to Christ's startling statement about the spiritual disability attendant on riches, the disciples reply, "[Thou sayest this] and—who [then] can be saved?" Probably, later on, John finds a parallel and a contrast between this question asked by a believer and the question asked by the unbelieving Jews, (xii. 34) "Who is this Son of man?" and the surprise of the former, together with his readiness to believe in what surprises him, brings out clearly the nature of the man's faith. He is ready to believe in anyone that Jesus bids him believe in. In effect—before Jesus had spoken—he already believed, heart and soul, in Jesus as a divine incarnation of kindness and power.

(ξ) Καὶ ἐάν (See also 2513—5 (i))

[2158] In Isaiah x. 22 "For though thy people Israel be as the sand...only a remnant shall return," LXX has καὶ ἐὰν γένηται. St Paul, for κ. ἐ. γένηται, has (Rom. ix. 27) ἐὰν ᾗ (A.V. "though," R.V. "if"). Probably St Paul used ἐάν with the consciousness that the apodosis gave it the meaning "even if," and LXX intended καὶ to mean "even." In an author like John, much given to asyndeton, there is an antecedent probability (in doubtful cases) that καὶ ἐάν would mean, not "and if," but "even if."

[2159] Καὶ ἐάν occurs as follows: viii. 16 "I judge no man, (R.V.) yea, and if I judge (καὶ ἐὰν κρίνω δὲ ἐγώ), my judgment is true" (A.V. "and yet if I judge"). Perhaps, "yea, even if I judge"; xii. 46—7 (R.V.) "I am come...that whosoever believeth on me may not abide in the darkness. And if (καὶ ἐάν) any man hear my sayings and keep them not, I judge him not," better, perhaps, "Even if any man hear and disobey, I judge him not"; xiv. 3 (R.V.) "And if (καὶ ἐάν) I go and prepare a place for you, I come again, and will receive you..." better, perhaps, "Even if (or, And even if) I go...[yet] again do I come." There is great difficulty about the whole of this passage, but it seems to mean "I should not myself call it going on a journey (πορεύομαι) but going back to the Father (ὑπάγω): however, to use your word, even if I do 'go,' yet I will return" (2080—6). In the Epistle, καὶ ἐάν occurs twice. It is used with indic. in 1 Jn v. 15 καὶ ἐὰν οἴδαμεν "and if we know" (see 2515 (i)). R.V. "and if" does not seem adequate to the meaning in 1 Jn ii. 1—2, "I write...that ye sin not. Grant however that one sin (καὶ ἐὰν τις ἁμάρτη) we have a Paraclete." It is not meant that we have no Paraclete if we do not sin. The meaning is, "Even if we do sin [let us remember that] we have a Paraclete."

(ο) Κἄν

[2160] Κἄν occurs four times in John and means "even if" certainly in viii. 14, x. 38, xi. 25, and possibly in viii. 55, (R.V.) "But I know him [i.e. the Father]; and if I should say (κἄν εἶπω) I know him not, I shall be like unto you, a liar." It is true that κἄν means "and if" in Luke, and in the Mark-Appendix¹; and three Johannine instances are hardly enough to establish the necessity of a similar meaning in the fourth. Yet, having regard to the instances, so far as they go, and to the frequency of asyndeton in John, and to the extraordinary force and abruptness of the thought, the balance of probability inclines slightly toward the latter rendering: "I know him. Even if I say I know him not—[what then?] I shall be a liar."

(π) Καί...καί, "both...and"

[2161] In vi. 36 "But I said unto you that ye (unemph.) have both seen [me] and [yet] do not believe," ἀλλ' εἶπον ὑμῖν ὅτι καὶ ἐώρακάτε [με] καὶ οὐ πιστεύετε, A.V. has "ye also," which would require καὶ ὑμεῖς. R.V. omits "both." The word "both" increases the abruptness of the paradox, as in xv. 24 (where R.V. inserts it) "they have both seen and hated both me and my Father²." Possibly

² [2161 a] In vi. 36, με is om. by almost all authorities exc. BD, prob. because the scribes did not understand that the reference was to vi. 26 "not because ye saw signs" combined with vi. 29 "this is the work of God that ye believe."

R.V. omits it here because it is contrary to English idiom, and because the paradox is expressed by rendering the second καί "and [yet]." This however does not give the suspensive force of the first καί, which might be freely rendered "though" ("though ye have seen me yet ye do not believe").

[2162] This usage is almost peculiar to John in N.T. Other books use καί...καί to represent (1) the same verb applied to two nouns, e.g. "healing both the blind and the lame¹," or (2) the same noun or pronoun applied to two verbs, e.g. "he began both to do and to teach." But these and other instances ("both hungering and thirsting," and even "both to be filled and to be hungry²") are unlike the Johannine coupling (with "and [yet]"). Sometimes also John couples, not opposites, but correlatives, or correspondent statements like that of St Paul, "God both raised up the Lord and will raise up us³," where the text suggests that Redemption is one great fore-ordained plan including past and present. Thus the Voice from Heaven says xii. 28 "I have both glorified and will again glorify," i.e. as it was, so it shall be.

[2163] ix. 37 "Thou hast both seen him and he that is speaking with thee is he⁴," is the reply of our Lord to the man born blind, asking who "the Son of man" is, in whom he is to believe. Jesus does not at once say, as to the Samaritan woman, "I that speak unto thee am he." The words "Thou hast seen him" coming to the blind man from Jesus, who had just made him "see," and whose voice he would recognise, could hardly fail to be clear. The blind man could hardly think of asking, "But of all those whom I have seen since I received sight a few hours ago, which is he?" Perhaps,

The former implies that the Jews had "seen" the Messiah manifested by "signs"; the latter, that, in spite of this "seeing," they still did not "believe" and needed to be commanded to "believe."

² [2162 b] Phil. iv. 12 οἶδα καὶ ταπεινοῦσθαι, οἶδα καὶ περισσεύειν is interesting as shewing the Apostle in the act of writing καὶ ταπ. καὶ περισσ. and then changing his mind, inserting οἶδα: as Lightf. says, καὶ ταπεινοῦσθαι was "shaped in anticipation of the καὶ περισσεύειν which follows."

³ [2162 c] 1 Cor. vi. 14 ὁ δὲ θεὸς καὶ τὸν κύριον ἤγειρεν καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐξεγερῇ (B ἐξήγειρεν). B's reading would mean that "God both raised up the Lord and (ipso facto) raised up us," as part of one plan.

therefore, Chrysostom has not chosen the right epithet in calling the clause "obscure¹." But it is purposely preparatory and incomplete—as though beginning from the physical and passing to the spiritual. As, after the feeding of the Five Thousand, the Saviour says (vi. 63), "The flesh profiteth nothing, the words that I have spoken to you are spirit and are life," so, after the healing of the blind man, Jesus does not say, "I that healed thee am he," but describes the Son of man as "He that is speaking with thee." He thereby suggests another aspect of the Messiah. He is not only the Healer, but also the Speaker of the words of God².

[2165] These words (xvii. 25) resemble—spiritually, though not verbally—the saying in the Double Tradition, "I confess unto thee, O Father...because thou hast hidden these things from the wise...and revealed them unto babes. Yea, Father, for so it hath seemed

² Comp. vi. 68 "Thou hast the words of eternal life," which implies "Thou art the Saviour."

good in thy sight¹." There, too, the context says that no man knoweth the Father save the Son and he to whom the Son reveals Him. So, we might paraphrase the Johannine "righteous Father" as meaning substantially "I confess the righteousness of that which hath seemed good in thy sight." The Johannine antithesis between "the world" and "these" corresponds to the antithesis between "the wise" and "babes." Also the parenthesis "But I knew thee" followed by "and these knew that thou didst send me," suggests—what Matthew and Luke express—that the knowledge of the Father is peculiar to the Son and to those who receive the gift from the Son. The καί in the Fourth Gospel supplies the connexion between "hiding" from the "wise" (i.e. "the world" meaning "the worldly") and the revealing unto "babes" (i.e. the little ones of Christ, whom the Fourth Gospel calls "these"). The two are parts of one plan. In John, "hiding" and "revealing" are expressed by "not knowing" and "knowing." The thought is the same as in Matthew and Luke.

[2166] In xxi. 24, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ μαθητὴς ὁ καὶ μαρτυρῶν περὶ τούτων καὶ ὁ γράψας ταῦτα is the reading of B. On the context, see 2169 and 2429—35. It would be against Greek usage to suppose that this means, "he that both testifieth and wrote," ὁ καὶ μαρτυρῶν καὶ γράψας. In B, therefore, we must take the first καί as "also": "This [i.e. the beloved disciple above described] is the disciple that also [besides seeing the Saviour in the way described above] testifieth concerning these things," i.e. he not only saw the Saviour but testifies to what he saw². After these words the evangelist continues, "and the one that wrote these things," making a pause after τούτων and deliberately separating the two statements. As a rule, an apostle would "testify" and his amanuensis or interpreter would write (as in the case of St Paul's Epistles): but in this case the "beloved disciple" did both³.

[2166 c] If we adopt the two marginal readings of W.H. and assume [ὁ], in the [2167] Καὶ γάρ occurs in John twice. Once αὐτοί intervenes (iv. 45 καὶ αὐτοὶ γὰρ ἦλθον, "for they also went") perhaps receiving special emphasis from its intervention (2692). The other instance is iv. 23, "For the Father also (καὶ γὰρ ὁ πατήρ) seeketh such for his worshippers (τοιούτους ζητεῖ τοὺς προσκυνούντας αὐτόν)," R.V. txt "for such doth the Father seek to be h. w.," marg. "for such the Father also seeketh." This rendering ("for...also") is more probable, here, than "for indeed." Καὶ γάρ may mean "for indeed"—emphasizing the cogency and truth of a causal proposition—when there is no noun or pronoun that comes close afterwards. But where there is such a noun or pronoun the force of καί is to emphasize it, as in "For I also am under authority¹." Taken thus, the words are appropriate as a reply to the Samaritan woman, whose tone suggests that she may have thought it a mark of weakness in man, much more in God, to "seek," since "seeking" implied want and need². Mark records a saying of the Son about Himself, "For the Son of man also (καὶ γὰρ ὁ υἱ. τ. ἀ.) came to be a minister³." John here records a similar saying of the Son about the Father, and with the same conjunction, "For the Father also (καὶ γὰρ ὁ π.) seeketh⁴."

(ρ) Καὶ γάρ

(σ) Καί omitted between two adjectives

second, to be part of the text, the translation will then be "This is the disciple that also testifieth concerning these things, the [disciple] that also wrote...." But the possibilities of combining various readings are so numerous that it is not worth while to enter into further detail.

² [2167 b] Christ had said to her "Give me to drink" and had then perplexed her by saying that He could give her to drink. The evangelist here represents the Son as saying "Give," just as a father might say to his children "Give me your hearts," and just as God is represented in O.T. as saying to Israel "Seek ye my face"—thus "seeking" them—in the hope that they may reply "Thy face, O Lord, will I seek."

adjectives may always be explained by special circumstances. In xii. 3, νάρδον πιστικῆς (1736 d) (perhaps intended to suggest an inward symbolical meaning) may be taken as a compound noun followed by πολυτίμου. In xvii. 3, σὲ τὸν μόνον ἀληθινὸν θεόν may be illustrated by Rom. xvi. 27 μόνῳ σοφῷ θεῷ, where μόνος perhaps implies (1895, 2664 a) an adjective ("One") and an adverb ("uniquely"). It is characteristic of John that, instead of saying "the last and greatest day of the feast," he should say (vii. 37) "Now on the last day—the great one [too]—of the feast (ἐν δὲ τῇ ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ—τῇ μεγάλῃ—τῆς ἑορτῆς)," adding "the great one" as a parenthetical remark¹.

(xii) Μέν, μέντοι

[2169] The Johannine use of μέν is interesting mainly in its bearing on the question whether οἶδαμεν in xxi. 24 may have been taken by Chrysostom as οἶδα μέν, on which point see 2429—35. Apart from vii. 12 οἱ μὲν ἔλεγον...ἄλλοι [δέ], and xi. 6 τότε μὲν ἔμεινεν...ἔπειτα μετὰ τοῦτο, it is generally followed by δέ, as in xix. 24 οἱ μὲν οὖν στρατιῶται...ἰστήκεισαν δέ, xix. 32 τοῦ μὲν πρώτου...ἐπὶ δὲ τὸν Ἰ., xx. 30 πολλὰ μὲν οὖν κ. ἄλλα...ταῦτα δέ. In x. 41 Ἰωάννης μὲν σημείον ἐποίησεν οὐδέν, πάντα δὲ ὅσα εἶπεν Ἰωάννης περὶ τούτου ἀληθῆ ἦν, the antithesis suggested by the beginning of the sentence is "John on the one hand did no sign, but this man, who was predicted by John, has fulfilled all John's predictions"—but the subject is changed in order to emphasize πάντα. The two remaining instances of μέν are in words of the Lord, xvi. 9 περὶ ἁμαρτίας μὲν...περὶ δικαιοσύνης δέ...περὶ (2077) δὲ κρίσεως, and xvi. 22 κ. ὑμεῖς οὖν νῦν μὲν λύπην ἔχετε· πάλιν δὲ ὀψομαι ὑμᾶς, where, in strict regularity, the second verb should have continued in the second person ("but hereafter ye shall rejoice"), but the writer passes off to the cause of the future joy.

[2170] Μέντοι occurs nowhere in the Synoptists, but five times in John. In iv. 27 "No one, however, said, What seekest thou?" and in xx. 5 "He did not, however, enter in," a feeling of reverence is suggested: in vii. 13 "No one, however, spake freely about him," the reason is added—"owing to the fear of the Jews." In xii. 42—after having said "they did not believe"—the evangelist says "yet however (ὅμως μέντοι) even of the rulers many believed in him, but owing to [fear of] the Pharisees they did not confess him." In xxi. 4 "Jesus stood on the beach. The disciples, however, did not know that it was Jesus" is the only remaining instance¹. Reviewing the whole, we may say that μέντοι is never used except where the context indicates prevention of some action by fear, or reverence or some mysterious restraint. As bearing on the last instance comp. Lk. xxiv. 16 "But their eyes were holden that they should not know him."

(xiii) "Οπου

[2171] In classical Greek, ὅπου is not used after a definite mention of place, as it is in John, e.g. i. 28, "Bethany, beyond Jordan, where (ὅπου) John was...", xii. 1 "Bethany, where Lazarus was" etc. Compare especially xix. 17—18 "...to the place of a skull called in Hebrew Golgotha, where (ὅπου) they crucified him," i.e. almost equivalent to, "and there they crucified him." This Johannine use is not borrowed from the LXX, where ὅπου is so rare that it is non-occurrent in the Pentateuch, Joshua and Kings. Nor does the Thesaurus give instances of it. But Mark uses it thus four or five times, and Matthew—probably sometimes borrowing from Mark—uses it about thrice². In connexion with the Resurrection, it

In Mt. xxvi. 57, ὅπου follows Καϊάφας which implies "the palace of Caiaphas." Mt. xxviii. 6, see below (2171 e).

[2171 c] "Οπου occurs, in the Acts, only in xvii. 1 Θεσσαλονικὴν, ὅπου..., xx. 6 (v. r.) τὴν Τρωάδα... ὅπου (W.H. οὔ). Lk. uses ὅπου five times, but never as above, unless an exception is to be recognised in Lk. xii. 33 (where Lk. follows Mt. vi. 20) ὅπου κλέπτῃς οὐκ ἐγγίγεις.

occurs in Mark and Matthew in an angelic utterance ("see the place"), but in John in a description of two angels in the tomb¹. Here Matthew approaches a dependent interrogative, but Mark and John do not.

[2172] John frequently uses ὅπου, with or without a preceding τόπος, to denote that the place now mentioned had already been the scene of some notable action: iv. 46 "Cana...where (ὅπου) he had made the water wine," vi. 23 "near the place where (ὅπου) they ate the bread," vii. 42 "Bethlehem the village where David [once] was," x. 40 "the place where John [once] was, at the first, baptizing," xii. 1 "He came to Bethany where was Lazarus," i.e. "where (as I said above, xi. 1), Lazarus lived, whom Jesus raised from the dead." Had it not been for the other passages quoted above, this last might have been supposed to mean "where Lazarus was" at the time when Jesus "came." In i. 28, a comma should perhaps (2277 a) be inserted after ἦν, thus: "These things came to pass in Bethany beyond Jordan—(lit.) where John was (ἦν), baptizing (βαπτίζων)," and ἦν may mean "was and had been for some time" (2648). Under ordinary circumstances we should translate ὅπου ἔκειτο in xx. 12, "where lay the body of Jesus," but it is shewn by the context to mean "where it had lain"².

(xiv) Ὅπως

[2173] This (1695) occurs frequently in Matthew and Luke, but only once in Mark (iii. 6 "that they might destroy (ἀπολέσωσιν) him") and once in John (xi. 57 "that they might take (πιάσωσιν) him"). Matthew's parallel to Mark iii. 6 agrees with Mark verbatim, but Luke's differs³. Elsewhere, Matthew uses ὅπως (but Luke never) in similar contexts¹. These facts suggest that ὅπως was current in Mark-Matthew traditions about the plots of the Jews "in order to destroy, or ensnare, Jesus," and that Luke avoided, while John adopted, this method of expression. See 2693.

(xv) Ὅτι²

(a) Ὅτι (1) suspensive, (2) explanatory

[2175] A more serious cause of ambiguity is that ὅτι—like καὶ ὅς (2122—32)—may be used (1) suspensively ("because I live ye shall live") as well as (2) explanatorily ("ye shall live" [why?] "because I live"). The former construction is comparatively rare. Where it occurs, "because" ought to be, so to speak, protected from the preceding sentence by a δέ or other conjunction as in Gal. iv. 6 "But because (ὅτι δέ) ye are sons, God hath sent forth his Spirit." Else, "because ye are sons" might be connected with the last words of the preceding sentence. In the following passage the first ὅτι is certainly suspensive after οὕτως: the second ὅτι is probably suspensive—but not certainly (owing to the absence of a conjunction) Rev. iii. 16—17 "Thus (οὕτως), because (ὅτι) thou art lukewarm...I am about to spew thee out of my mouth. Because (ὅτι) thou sayest 'I am rich...' and knowest not..., I counsel thee to buy...." Here the construction might be "Because thou art lukewarm I purpose to spew thee out, because [I say] thou sayest..., and "I counsel" might begin a new sentence; and the English Hexapla prints the words thus in all versions after that of 1380 A.D.¹

[2176] The suspensive use of ὅτι in the Greek Testament is first found in Genesis iii. 14 "And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because (ὅτι) thou hast done this, cursed art thou," and iii. 17 "Unto Adam he said, Because (ὅτι) thou hast hearkened...cursed is the ground." In the second case, it would be quite possible to take ὅτι as introducing the words of the speaker, "Unto Adam he said [that] 'Thou hast hearkened...Cursed is the ground.'" It is perhaps for this reason that in Deuteronomy (i. 27 "and said, 'Because the Lord hated'") where the Hebrew is the same, the LXX has διὰ τό which Luke also has (xviii. 5 "Yet because this widow troubleth me"). In N. T., suspensive ὅτι is almost confined to the Johannine writings and the Apocalypse, and it is one of a few very interesting similarities of style suggesting that the author of the Gospel may have been a disciple, or younger coadjutor, of the author of the Apocalypse².

² [2176 a] Besides Gal. iv. 6 (above quoted) ὅτι suspensive occurs in 1 Cor. xii. 15—16 (bis) "If the foot shall say, 'Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body' it is not therefore not of the body," and Rom. ix. 7 "Neither, because they are Abraham's seed, are they all children."

where¹, and to his habitual use of (2149) καὶ ὑμεῖς to mean "Ye also," the rendering given above, which is in the main that of R.V. text, may be pronounced the only possible interpretation.

(β) Ὅτι introducing (1) cause of action, (2) ground of statement

[2178] A doubt may sometimes exist whether ὅτι, "because," introduces (1) the ground or motive of an action ("he does this because he likes it") or the proof of the truth of an assertion ("You did this, [I know] because you were caught in the act"), where (in English) we should mostly use "for." Such a sentence as x. 5 "They will flee...because they know not," introducing a cause inherent in the persons spoken of, presents no difficulty. And in this way "because" would generally be used where it connects two verbs in the same person ("you (or, they) do this because you (or, they) do that"). But the meaning is not so clear in v. 38 "Ye have not his word abiding in you because (ὅτι) whom he sent him ye believe not." Does this mean (1) that, because they rejected Christ and refused to believe in Him, the Jews darkened their minds and made it impossible for the word of God to "abide" in them? In that case, ὅτι introduces the reason why the "word" did not "abide." Or does it mean (2) "Ye have not his word abiding in you: [I know this] because whom he sent him ye believe not"? In that case ὅτι introduces the cause of the speaker's knowledge, the proof of his assertion. The use of ὅτι to mean "[I say this] because," "[And this is true] because," is so frequent in John that the latter (2) is the more probable explanation. If John had meant the former (1) he would have probably written "For this cause (διὰ τοῦτο) ye have not his word abiding in you because"—a very common formula with him².

² [2178 a] R.V. and A.V. "for." Westcott says (ad loc.) "For (because)....] This is not alleged as the ground but as the sign of what has been said. Comp. Luke vii. 47; i John iii. 14." The former passage ("her sins...are forgiven because she loved much") states the cause of being forgiven, in accordance with the Law of Forgiveness: the latter ("we know that we have passed from death... because we love the brethren") states the ground of "knowing," which may be [2179] In ii. 18 "What sign shewest thou because thou doest these things?" the meaning of ὅτι seems to be "[We ask thee this question] because¹," and similarly in vii. 35 "Where doth this man purpose to go, [we ask this] because [according to what he says] we shall not find him?" In xii. 48—9, "The word that I spake, the same shall judge him in the last day, because I spake not from myself; but the Father..." the meaning may be explained by turning "because I spake" into "because it is spoken." "The word" will have the right to judge you, and will judge you, because it comes ultimately, not "from myself," but from the Father, the righteous Judge. In x. 12—13 "But the hireling...fleeth, and the wolf snatcheth and scattereth them because he is a hireling," some authorities insert "the hireling fleeth" before "because," and R.V. supplies these words in italics; but the sense may very well be that "the wolf scatters the flock—[Why?] because the shepherd is a hireling." Similarly the laziness of a sentinel is a contributory cause to disaster, and an enemy may be said to surprise a camp "because the sentinel was asleep." The passage illustrates John's varied use of ὅτι.

[2180] In i. 14—18, a complicated passage in which connexions of thought are broken by interventions of parentheses, ὅτι occurs thrice, and in each case seems to base a new statement on some preceding similar one, with a curious mannerism frequent in the Fourth Gospel but particularly noticeable here. ὅτι seems to mean in each case "[I say this] because of that," where "this" and "that" are similar or identical words (like "full" and "fulness," "first" and "before," "grace" and "grace") thus: (a) "He is become before me, [I say 'before'] because he was first in regard to me"; (b) "the Logos tabernacled among us...full of..." [I say 'full'] because from his fulness did we all receive"; (c) "...and grace for grace, [I say 'grace'] because, whereas the Law [of God] was given [as a preparatory grace also called the cause of knowledge. The analogy of both of these would seem to point to (1) rather than (2): but Westcott seems to favour (2), if "the sign of" means "the sign of the truth of."

² [2180 a] The intervening verse (i. 15 "John beareth witness.....before me") is probably to be regarded as a parenthesis. It is so printed by W.H., but not by R.V.

or preparation for grace] through Moses, the [real] grace [of God] and the truth [of God] came into being through Jesus Christ."

(γ) "ΟΤΙ (ρ) "that" or "because"

[2182] "ΟΤΙ probably means "I say this because" in xvi. 8—11 "He will convict the world about sin and about righteousness and about judgment; in the first place (μὲν) about sin, [I say this] because they believe not on me; in the next place (δέ) about righteousness, [I say this] because I go unto the Father and ye no longer behold me; in the next place (δέ) about judgment, [I say this] because the prince of this world hath been judged." The absence of the defining clause αὕτη δέ ἐστιν differentiates this passage from iii. 19, and the statement "I will judge the world about these three things" suggests to the reader "Why about these three in particular?" so as to prepare the way for a threefold "because."—"I say about sin, because it will be shewn that they are unbelieving and unbelief is at the bottom of sin; I say about righteousness, because it will be shewn that they drive me out of the world, and to be driven out of the unjust or unrighteous world"—as Aristides the just was driven out of unjust Athens—"is a proof of justice or righteousness²; I say about judgment, because the prince of this world, who—by means of his agents, Pilate and the priests—will have judged and sentenced me to the death of a criminal, will himself have been judged and cast into hell, so that the judgment of this world will have been judged and condemned¹.”

[2183] R.V. and A.V. differ in ix. 17 “What dost thou (σύ) say about him, (R.V.) in that he opened thine eyes?” (A.V. “that he hath opened thine eyes?”). The object of “sayest” has preceded (“What sayest thou?”) and the blind man has already said (ix. 15) in effect, “he hath opened mine eyes.” Consequently, we may naturally expect ὅτι to introduce, not the object of “sayest,” but a reason for the saying: “In consequence of this cure—what do you say about him?” At all events the blind man takes it in this way, for he replies “[I say] he is a prophet,”—and not, as the A.V. rendering would require, “Yes, I say that he did open my eyes.” But, if R.V. is right, it would be better not to insert a comma (as R.V. does) before “in that” but to run the words on thus, in effect, “What sayest thou (emph.) about him for having [as thou sayest] opened thine eyes?” The comma of R.V. before ὅτι might lead the reader to give ὅτι the force of “we ask this because” or “for indeed”—as though the questioners acknowledged the miracle: but the next verse shews that they did not acknowledge it².

Him : xi. 56 "What think ye? That he will assuredly not come to the feast?" Τί δοκεῖ ὑμῖν; ὅτι οὐ μὴ ἔλθῃ εἰς τὴν ἑορτήν; The intention certainly is to give prominence to Christ's courage in the face of dangers recognised by everybody, and the meaning of the text appears to be: "What do you (emph.) think? [Do you think, as we do,] that he will never dream of venturing to come to the feast?" But the text is not quite certain¹. The passage, however, comes usefully here as shewing how complex may be the considerations on which the meaning of ὅτι may depend, and how even the Greek commentators may be puzzled by John's use of it.

² [2185 a] In iii. 21 (A.V.) "that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God," R.V. has txt "that," marg. "because." In vii. 52 (A.V.) "Search and see, for," R.V. has txt "that," marg. "for." In viii. 22 (A.V.) "Will he kill himself? because he saith..." i.e. "[We ask this] because," R.V. has "that" he saith (presumably attempting to correct not the sense but the English). On xiv. 2 see 2186 foll. Cases of "not that" meaning "not because" are not included in this list.

[2185 b] In xviii. 37 (R.V. txt) "Thou sayest that I am a king," R.V. marg. has, "Thou sayest [it] because I am a king," on which Westcott justly says, "The translation 'Thou sayest (i.e. rightly), because I am' seems to be both unnatural as a rendering of the original phrase, and alien from the context." In xxi. 23 οὐκ ἔλεπεν δὲ αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ὅτι οὐκ ἀποθνήσκει, SS has "for that" i.e. because, "But Jesus, not for that he was not to die said he [it]." In such cases, the Latin quod, or quia, would often reproduce the ambiguity of the Greek.

But perhaps R.V. is right in judging that John (even when an accusative intervened) would not use ὅτι (2174) after any verb of perception in any sense but "that," because to use it in any other sense would, as a rule, involve obvious and immediate misunderstanding¹.

[2186] In all the passages bearing on ὅτι, up to this point, no instance has been found of λέγω closely followed by ὅτι meaning "I say ...because." This makes it all the more remarkable that in one passage, according to R.V., John has used εἰπεῖν ὅτι to mean, "say [it] because," on which is based the following rendering (xiv. 1—2), "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe (or, believe) in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go (εἰ δὲ μὴ, εἶπον ἂν ὑμῖν ὅτι πορεύομαι) to prepare a place for you." It has been shewn, under the head of εἰ δὲ μὴ (2080—6), that there is no authority for the rendering "if it were not so." Even if it were allowable to supply the sense in that way (εἰ δὲ μὴ [οὕτως ἦν]), it is doubtful whether such an ellipsis could be repeated as a second ellipsis, so as to make the sense "I should have said to you [that it was not so]" εἶπον ἂν ὑμῖν [ὅτι οὐχ οὕτως ἐστίν]. No authority has been alleged for this². But, apart from all these facts, the regular Greek and Johannine use of λέγειν or εἰπεῖν ὅτι, "say that," should oblige translators to assume, in the first instance, that, if the text is not corrupt, the meaning here is, "I should have said to you that I am going"³.

For ὅτι equivalent to ὥστε, in xiv. 22, see 2694.

² [2186 a] The instances, Mt. xxviii. 7 "Behold I have said [it] to you," Mt. xxiv. 25 "I have said [it] to you before," Jn x. 25 "I said [it] to you and ye believe not" all refer to something preceding, and more or less definitely expressed. For example, Jn x. 25 "I said [it] (εἶπον) to you" refers to the preceding words "If thou art the Christ say [so] (εἰπὼν) to us." In xiv. 29 "I have said [it] (εἶρηκα) to you" (better than "I have told you") probably refers to xiv. 28 "I said (εἶπον) to you, I depart."

³ [2186 b] For the new meaning that would be given to the whole passage by this interpretation the reader is referred to εἰ δὲ μὴ (2080—6). Here it may be added that several authorities (including a and e) omit ὅτι, and that the Syriac (including SS) has "I should have said that I go." In LXX, ὅτι "recitativum" is omitted after "I said" in Ps. xxx. 6 "I said I shall never be removed," xxxi.

(δ) Ὅτι μὴ

[2187] In one instance, ὅτι μὴ in the Gospel curiously contrasts with ὅτι οὐ in the Epistle: Jn iii. 18 "He that believeth not (ὁ μὴ πιστεύων) hath been judged already because he hath not believed (ὅτι μὴ πεπίστευκεν) in the name of the only begotten Son of God," 1 Jn v. 10 "He that believeth not God (ὁ μὴ πιστεύων τῷ θεῷ) hath made him a liar; [I say this] because he hath not believed in the testimony that God testified (ὅτι οὐ πεπίστευκεν εἰς τὴν μαρτυρίαν)...." In the latter, ὅτι οὐ states the fact objectively; in the former, ὅτι μὴ states it subjectively, as the judgment pronounced by the Judge, "This man is guilty in that he hath not believed," so that the meaning is almost "hath been pronounced guilty of not believing." See 2695.

(ε) Οὐχ ὅτι

[2188] In classical Greek, οὐχ ὅτι often means "not only" and may be explained as "not [only do I say] that," so as to prepare the way for ἀλλὰ καί "but [I] also [say this]." But in N.T. it never has that meaning. When it comes immediately after a statement that is in danger of being misunderstood, οὐχ ὅτι might be explained as (1) "[I say this], not because...," (2) "[I do] not [mean to say] that..." The latter is generally the more probable. See Ellipsis, 2218—9.

(ζ) Ὅτι "recitativum"

[2189] Ὅτι "recitativum" is a Greek way of expressing our inverted commas, or the Hebrew "saying," as in i. 20 "he confessed that (ὅτι) I am not the Christ," i.e. "saying 'I am not the Christ.'" This is very frequent in Mark, frequent in John, somewhat less so in Luke, and comparatively rare in Matthew¹. The use of ὅτι Ἐγὼ in the case of the Baptist above and of the blind man in ix. 9 ἔλεγεν ὅτι Ἐγὼ εἰμι, may be contrasted with the omission of ὅτι when "I am" is uttered by Jesus in xviii. 5 λέγει αὐτοῖς Ἐγὼ εἰμι...ὥς οὖν εἶπεν αὐτοῖς Ἐγὼ εἰμι. Neither here nor elsewhere—except in two or three instances where sayings of Christ are repeated for the second time (2190)—does John use ὅτι before direct speech of the Lord after “he said”: consequently when we find “I said” a little later on, xviii. 8 εἶπον ὑμῖν ὅτι ἐγὼ εἰμι, there is some reason for thinking that this is reported speech, “I said to you that I am”¹. There are many instances of this phrase (“I said that”) because John (differing from the Synoptists) frequently represents Christ as referring to what He Himself has previously said, e.g. i. 50 “Because I said unto thee that (ὅτι) I saw thee under the fig-tree,” vi. 36 “But I said to you that ye have seen me,” viii. 24 “I said...to you that ye shall die in your sins,” xi. 40 “Did I not say to thee that, if thou wilt believe, thou shalt see the glory of God?” xvi. 15 “For this cause I said to you that he taketh from that which is mine and [that he] will declare it unto you.” In all these passages there is nothing to shew whether ὅτι introduces (1) direct or (2) reported speech; but W.H. print the text as the latter, and their view agrees with the general absence of ὅτι recitativum elsewhere after “he said” introducing words of Christ.

22 "I said...I am cut off," xxxii. 5 "I said I will confess" etc. This may have influenced the scribes that omitted it here. If it did, the fact would indicate that the scribes regarded ὅτι as meaning "that," not "because."

[2190] The text varies somewhat in xiii. 33 “Even as I said to the Jews that ‘Where I go, ye are not able to come,’ [so] to you also I say—for the moment”; but if the text is correct² and if the reference is to viii. 21, then ὅτι recitativum is here used in exact quotation of a saying of the Lord. The quotation is not exact in xviii. 9 ἵνα πληρωθῇ ὁ λόγος ὃν εἶπεν ὅτι Οὗς δέδωκάς μοι οὐκ ἀπόλεσα

[2189 c] In the Baptist’s words, W.H. print iii. 28 εἶπον [ἐγὼ] Οὐκ εἰμι ἐγὼ ὁ χριστός, ἀλλ’ ὅτι Ἀπεσταλμένος εἰμι ἔμπροσθεν ἐκείνου. However printed, the text seems to blend (1) “I said ‘I am not the Christ but am one sent,’” (2) “I did not say ‘I am the Christ,’ but I said, ‘I am one sent.’”

² [2190 a] “Ὅτι is om. by ND b, e. SS has “that, where I go they cannot come.” Christ had said in vii. 34 “Where I am, ye are not able to come,” and (perhaps for this reason) a and e read “sum” in xiii. 33; b reads “eo” which may be intended for εἰμι accented εἶμι “I go” (in vii. 34, a renders εἰμί “I am” by “vado” and sim. SS “go”). Another instance where ὅτι is omitted by Bruder (following NA) but ins. by W.H. is xiii. 11 διὰ τοῦτο εἶπεν ὅτι Οὐχὶ πάντες καθαροὶ ἐστε. What Jesus had actually said, was Ὑμεῖς καθαροὶ ἐστε ἀλλ’ οὐχὶ πάντες, so that this quotation is not exact. In view of a future consideration of Johannine quotations it is worth while noting that (a) vii. 34 ὅπου εἰμι ἐγὼ ὑμεῖς οὐ δύνασθε ἐλθεῖν is exactly repeated by the Jews in vii. 36, that (b) viii. 21 ὅπου ἐγὼ ὑπάγω ὑμεῖς οὐ δύνασθε ἐλθεῖν is exactly repeated by the Jews in viii. 22, and that (c) the second of these sayings is exactly repeated by Christ, with ὅτι in xiii. 33 ὅτι Ὅπου ἐγὼ...ἐλθεῖν.

ἐξ αὐτῶν οὐδένα, which is a certain instance of ὅτι recitativum before words of the Lord. It is assumed by Westcott and Alford that the reference is to xvii. 12 ἐτήρουν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου ᾧ δέδωκάς μοι ...καὶ οὐδεὶς ἐξ αὐτῶν ἀπώλετο. But there is a great difference between "Those whom thou hast given me I lost not one of them" and "I kept them in thy name which thou hast given me...and not one of them was lost." Why does not the evangelist give the words exactly? This question must be considered under "Variation" (2544 foll.). It does not come under the present heading except so far as it suggests a possibility that the writer may sometimes use ὅτι to mean "[to this effect] that"—when he does not propose to give the exact words in a quotation¹.

(xvi) Οὖν

(a) In Christ's words

[2191] Οὖν, in Matthew and Luke, when used by our Lord, introduces a precept, or inference, as being based on something that precedes (often a parable or statement of considerable length) of a very cogent nature: "Be not ye therefore anxious," "Look to it therefore whether the light within thee be darkness," "If therefore ye,

¹ [2190 b] Thus our Lord says to the Jews ix. 41 λέγετε ὅτι βλέπομεν, and x. 36 λέγετε ὅτι βλασφημεῖς, meaning "Ye say in effect." In reality (1) they had not said, "We see," but "Are we blind also?" and (2) they had not said "Thou blasphemest," but "We stone thee for blasphemy and because thou, being a man, makest thyself God."

being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more...?" "If therefore in the unrighteous mammon ye were not faithful, who shall entrust to you...¹?" John (1883) uses οὖν very frequently in his Gospel, about 195 times in all, but in Christ's words very rarely, only 8 times. It occurs most frequently when He is arguing with unbelievers or doubters; but He uses it twice in the Discourse with the disciples before the Passion, and, for the last time, to the soldiers arresting Him. He has twice asked them "Whom seek ye?" And they have twice replied, "Jesus of Nazareth." Now He replies (xviii. 8) "I told you that I am he. Therefore, if it is I that ye seek, let these depart." "Therefore," in R.V., has the advantage of uniformity, but "then" would sometimes be preferable.

was before—". Here there is an ellipsis of the apodosis—"What will ye do?" or "What is to happen?" The passage is extremely obscure (2210—12): but the meaning appears to be that, if they stumble already at the truth, they will, as an inevitable consequence, stumble again when a higher truth is set before them. In viii. 24 "I said therefore to you 'Ye shall die in your sins,'" after "Ye are of this world," Jesus assumes that "this world" (1 Jn v. 19) "lieth wholly in the evil [one]," i.e. in the hands of sin and death, so that those who "are of this world" will "therefore die" in their sins; in viii. 36 "The Son abideth [in the house] for ever. If therefore the Son shall free you, ye shall be free indeed," it is assumed that what the Son of the house does will be ratified by the Father, and "therefore" will be permanent and "real."

[2193] In the following difficult passage, οὖν may help to decide between the alternative renderings given by R.V., (viii. 37—8) (lit.) "Ye seek to kill me... The things that I (emph.) have seen in the house of the (παρὰ τῷ) Father I speak: ye also therefore (καὶ ὑμεῖς οὖν)—the things that ye heard from the (παρὰ τοῦ) father, ye do (ἃ ἠκούσατε παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς ποιεῖτε)." Here R.V. txt has "and ye also do" (apparently rendering καί by "and," οὖν by "also"), but R.V. marg. "do ye also therefore the things which ye heard from the Father." In R.V. txt, it is affirmed that the Jews do the works suggested from the devil, who is to them "the father"; in R.V. margin, the Jews are exhorted to do the works suggested by the Father, God.

[2194 b] For "the father" used to mean "Satan," comp. viii. 44 "Ye are of [2195] In xii. 49—50 “The Father that sent me—he hath given me commandment what I should say and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is eternal life. The things therefore that I (emph.) speak—even as the father hath said [them] to me, so speak I,” Chrysostom has excellently expressed the force of οὖν by the paraphrase “It is not natural (οὐκ ἔχει φύσιν τὸ πρᾶγμα) that the Father should say one thing and I utter another.” The meaning is, “I not only know what I am commanded to say, but also know that it is my Life, Life Eternal, to fulfil the commandment, it follows therefore that I must speak the Father’s words.” There is an argument a fortiori in xiii. 13—14 “Ye address me [with the titles] ‘the Teacher’ and ‘the Master (κύριος),’ and ye say well, for such I am. If therefore I washed your feet—‘the Teacher’ and ‘the Master’—ye also are bound to wash each other’s feet.” In Matthew and Luke this cogent “therefore” would perhaps have been accompanied by “How much more!” and SS has something like it here “And if I, your Rabbi...how much doth it behove you...!”

the father the devil.” As in French “the head” means “my, your, his head” according to the context, so may “the father” in Greek; and the writer deliberately uses the ambiguous expression “the father” in order to prepare for the defining climax in viii. 44, (1) “the father,” (2) “the devil,” (3) “your father.”

birth as a type of a fundamental law in human nature that all deep and lasting joy must be reached through pain and sorrow. But probably there is a more definite reference in the evangelist's mind. For Micah combines the prophecy about the Messiah from Bethlehem with a mention of affliction and temporary abandonment of Israel. "He will give them up *until the time that she which travaileth hath brought forth*¹," and the phrase "birth-pangs of the Messiah" is associated with this prophecy in the Talmud, where it occurs several times².

[2197] Mark and Matthew represent our Lord as saying, just before His prediction of persecution for the disciples, "These things are the beginning of travail-pangs (ᾠδίνων)³." Besides the "travail-pangs" of the Church collectively, it was necessary that there should be "travail-pangs" in the soul of each believer before it could give birth to the idea of the spiritual Christ⁴: and both these doctrines may have been in the mind of this evangelist, who is the only one that records, in exact words, the doctrine that a man cannot enter into the kingdom of Heaven unless he is "born from above." Thus a number of considerations, not present to modern readers, may have suggested the thought of inevitable consequence in the words "Ye also, therefore, now indeed have sorrow."

(β) ΟΥΝ applied to Christ's acts

² [2196 b] Sanhedr. 98 b. Levy ii. 5 a refers also to Schabb. 118 a, Pes. 118 a.

troversialists, some of whom, like Celsus, might regard Jesus as a vagrant exorcist, or as a fugitive escaping from arrest. The first instance of all (iv. 1 "when therefore the Lord knew") represents Him as departing not from pursuit but from too much popularity. The next two (iv. 5, 6) represent His coming to Sychar and sitting at the well—actions providentially arranged with a view to the conversion of Samaria. The words (iv. 46) "He came therefore to Cana," introduce the healing of the nobleman's son. In vi. 11 occurs the first instance that does not apply to journeying, "Jesus therefore took the loaves," of which the symbolical importance needs no comment. In vi. 15, the multitude sought to make Jesus a king by force; "therefore" He retired. In the Raising of Lazarus, οὖν is four times used, first, paradoxically, "When therefore Jesus knew" of the sickness of Lazarus, "he abode" at a distance three days; "therefore," when He arrived, He "found that Lazarus had been four days in the tomb"; seeing Mary weeping Jesus "therefore...troubled himself"; some of the Jews ask, in effect, why Jesus did not save Lazarus, "Jesus therefore...cometh to the tomb¹." The fourfold conjunction sounds strange in English. But the intention of the narrative as a whole is to represent the Raising of Lazarus as foreordained; and this repetition of "therefore" may be intended, in particular, to shew how the Son, step by step, moved forward in a regular and predetermined sequence to do the Father's will in performing the last and greatest of His "signs."

[2199] The next two instances refer to Christ, as first avoiding peril, and then confronting it, when the Jews took counsel to kill Him: xi. 54 "Jesus therefore no longer walked openly among the Jews," xii. 1 "Jesus therefore came to Bethany"—following immediately on the statement that the chief priests had taken steps to seize him! It is not surprising that Chrysostom alters this second οὖν to δέ. But the meaning, perhaps, is, that both in avoiding peril and in meeting it Jesus followed the Father's will, not the ways of ordinary men.

[2200] After the instance in the sacramental Washing of Feet (xiii. 6 "He cometh therefore to Simon Peter"), the next is in the narrative of Gethsemane, where, upon the arrival of Judas and the soldiers (xviii. 4) "Jesus, therefore, knowing all that was coming upon him, went forth and said to them, Whom seek ye?" There remain but two more instances. One ("Jesus therefore went out") introduces the exclamation of Pilate "Behold the man¹!" The other introduces the first manifestation of the risen Saviour, "When therefore it was evening...came Jesus and stood in the midst²." The facts as a whole indicate that, although "therefore" is an exaggerated rendering of οὖν, yet the particle, when used in connexion with the acts of Christ, is often intended to suggest a sequence of cause and effect³.

(xvii) 'Ως⁴

(a) 'Ωc (?) for εἰς

[2201] 'Ως is translated "while" by R.V. in xii. 35—6 "Walk while ye have the light...while ye have the light, believe in the light." Several mss. and authorities read εἰς for ὥς, but the difficulty of the latter, and its double occurrence, demonstrate it to be the true reading. But that ὥς does not mean "while" is made highly probable by ix. 4 "I must work the works of my Father while (εἰς) (marg. ὥς) it is day." It is scarcely credible that a writer like John should use ὥς twice in precisely the same sense in which he has used εἰς. 'Ως in Gal. vi. 10 ὥς καιρὸν ἔχουμεν is doubtful. Lk. xii. 58 ὥς γὰρ ὑπάγεις is not quite parallel⁵. Taking the text as it stands,

³ [2200 a] These instances are taken from Bruder (1888) with whom, in each case quoted above, W.H. agrees. There may be other instances in W.H. not included in Bruder. The list given above does not include vi. 5 ἐπάρας οὖν, xiii. 12 "Ὅτε οὖν ἐνίψεν τοὺς πόδας αὐτῶν, xix. 26 'Ι. οὖν ἰδὼν τὴν μητέρα, xix. 30 ὅτε οὖν ἔλαβε τὸ ὄξος, xxi. 15 ὅτε οὖν ἠρίστησαν, because the principal verb that follows is, in each case, "said" (not a verb of action). Perhaps, however, there might have been included (on the ground that "cry aloud" is a kind of action distinct from mere saying) vii. 28 ἔκραξεν οὖν ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ. This occurs as follows vii. 25—8 "Is not this he whom they seek to kill? And, lo, he speaketh openly...no man knoweth whence he is. He cried aloud therefore in the temple...." See the context. It is uncertain whether the "therefore" means "in consequence of the words 'no man knoweth,'" or "Accordingly, 'speaking openly' in spite of the attempts to kill him." On οὖν used after parentheses, or resumptively, see 2631—5. Of course it must be remembered that οὖν, being used by Jn freely (1) to introduce action of any kind, would naturally be used by him (2) to introduce actions of Christ without any intention to express providential sequence. Still, if the actions of Christ introduced by οὖν are compared with the actions of Christ introduced by δέ or by asyndeton, I think it will be found that the first class are specially important.

we may make fair sense of xii. 35—6 by rendering ὥς “as.” Compare 1 Jn ii. 27 “As (ὥς) his anointing teacheth you [in the present]...and even as (καθώς) it taught you [in the past], abide¹ in it.” This harmonizes with St Paul’s precepts, “Walk by the Spirit,” and “Live up to the standard you have reached [hoping for a higher one]².” So here the meaning—or, at all events, the meaning of the best text—is “Walk according to your light as far as it goes.” This rendering of ὥς enables us to take περιπατεῖν with an implied οὕτως, “Walk [thus, namely] as ye have light [to walk],” and delivers us from the necessity of taking it absolutely, “Walk [in the paths of righteousness].”

(β) Ωc “as it were”

[2202] In vii. 10 “He went up [to the feast] not openly but as it were in secret (ὥς ἐν κρυπτῷ),” the meaning is “like one going up in secret,” i.e. not actually in secret but in a manner resembling secrecy. Compare St Paul’s words to Philemon (14) “in order that thy good deed may not be as it were compulsory (ὥς κατὰ³ ἀνάγκην).” The particle may be a short way of saying “people might call it so,” and it is perhaps inserted with a view to the vindication of the Johannine view of the publicity of Christ’s life, as in xviii. 20, “In secret spake I nothing”; and in this very feast Christ is described as (vii. 26) “speaking openly (παρρησίᾳ),” and (vii. 28) “he cried aloud in the temple teaching.” According to this view, “as it were in secret” means that Christ refused to take the advice of His brethren and to go up with them to the feast accompanied by such a multitude as attended Him when He “went up” finally. This going up was “comparatively in secret.” But, in case any opponent of the Christians might refer to the saying of Christ’s brethren (vii. 4) “No man doeth aught in secret and himself seeketh to be in publicity,” the evangelist wishes to shew that there was nothing “in secret” in the exact sense of the term. For this purpose he inserts ὥς here and παρρησίᾳ later on.

¹ [2201 a] “Abide,” imperative. The writer has admitted that it does (ib. 27) “abide” in them, and that they “have no need that anyone should teach” them. But still he does teach them as St Paul does after similar admissions (1 Thess. iv. 10 and elsewhere). See 2437—9.

³ [2202 a] Comp. 2 Cor. xi. 17 ὥς ἐν ἀφροσύνῃ, xiii. 7 ὥς ἀδόκιμοι. In Rom. ix. 32 οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως ἀλλ’ ὥς ἐξ ἔργων, the meaning is “on a false basis of works,” or “as though it could be attained from works.”

(xviii) ὥστε

[2203] This conjunction, which is found frequently in Mark and Matthew, and four times in Luke, occurs in John only once, and then with a unique construction, thus, iii. 16 οὕτως γὰρ ἠγάπησεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν κόσμον ὥστε τὸν υἱὸν τὸν μονογενῆ ἔδωκεν. In the rest of N.T., ὥστε occurs either (1) at the beginning of a clause ("so that" meaning "and so") with an emphatic indicative or imperative (Mk ii. 28 "And so the Son of man is lord of the sabbath," 1 Thess. iv. 18 "And so (or, Therefore) comfort one another") or else (2) post-initially with an infinitive (Mk i. 27 "so that they questioned together")¹. Both these constructions are frequent. But ὥστε never occurs post-initially with an indicative except in John iii. 16². This unique use of οὕτως and ὥστε with indicative is common in the best classical authors³, but it is unlike the style of any evangelistic tradition in N.T. It is one of many proofs that the passage under consideration was not regarded by the writer as a saying of the Lord, but as an evangelistic explanation (see 2066 and 2697).

ELLIPSIS⁴

(i) Of two kinds

[2204] (1) Ellipsis, "leaving out," or "deficiency," may exist when something is left out that can be supplied from the preceding context, e.g. "I said, Go. But he would not [go]," "You have taken my book and left your own [book]." This ellipsis may be called "contextual." (2) Ellipsis may consist in the customary omission of words (apart from contextual influence) in certain condensed phrases, e.g. "Away!" for "[Go] away!" or "the first of the month" for "the first [day] of the month." This¹ may be called "idiomatic."

² [2203 b] Acts xiv. 1 ἐγένετο...λαλῆσαι οὕτως ὥστε πιστεῦσαι..., is the only other passage in N.T. where ὥστε is preceded by οὕτως. Heb. xiii. 6 ὥστε θαρρούντας ἡμᾶς λέγειν rather suggests what we may say than states what we do say.

(ii) Contextual

[2205] iv. 25—6 "Messiah cometh... 'I am [Messiah].'" This must be distinguished from (a) vi. 20 "I am," rendered by R.V. "It is I"—like our idiom in English, "It [that you see, or, hear] is I"—and also from (b) any special use of I AM with Hebraic associations. The present instance may be illustrated by xviii. 5, 6, 8 "I am [Jesus of Nazareth]"—which refers to the preceding mention of the name in xviii. 5 "'Whom seek ye?' 'Jesus of Nazareth'"—and also by ix. 9 "I am [(ix. 8) 'the man that used to sit and beg']". Here the Samaritan woman—who is described as saying aloud "Messiah cometh"—is to be regarded (comp. Lk. iii. 15 "reasoning in their hearts...whether he might be the Christ") as saying in her heart "Can it be that this is Messiah?" and Jesus answers her silent question, "I am [Messiah]."

[2207] 'viii. 16 "Yea, and even if I should judge, my judgment is true, because I am not alone but [am to be regarded as] I and the

Father that sent me," ὅτι μόνος οὐκ εἰμί, ἀλλ' ἐγὼ καὶ ὁ πέμψας με [πατήρ]. Chrysostom says, "Hereby he hinted (ἡνίξατο) that it was not He Himself alone that was to condemn them (ὅτι οὐκ αὐτὸς μόνος αὐτοὺς καταδικάζει) but also the Father": and Cramer quotes Ammonius to the same effect. In that case we should have to supply the sense as follows: "I and the Father that sent me [are together as Judges]." But the simple repetition of εἰμί, so as to mean "But [I am] *I and the Father*¹," seems more in accordance with Johannine ellipsis and with Johannine theology. This latter view, taking the words to declare the eternal unity of the Father and the Son, would also include their unity in the act of judging.

[2208] xiii. 8—9 "'Thou shalt assuredly not wash my feet.'... 'Except I wash thee, thou hast no part with me'... 'Lord, do not (μὴ) [wash] my feet (πόδας) alone but also my hands and my head!'" Verb repeated. Here, μὴ implies an imperative, and the accusative shews that the construction cannot be "let not my feet (nom.) be washed alone," so that the grammar combines with the context to make the elliptic construction clearer than even in English. In xv. 4 "Abide in me, and I (or, I also) [abide] in you²," the verb is to be repeated, and the meaning may be paraphrased "Your abiding in me shall be mine in you," or "Cause yourselves to abide in me and [thereby] me also to abide in you." The two "abidings" are regarded as inseparable³.

[2209] In xviii. 39—40 "'Desire ye therefore that I release unto you the king of the Jews?'....Do not (μὴ) [release] this man (τοῦτον)..." as in xiii. 8—9, the μὴ implies that the verb is to be repeated imperatively, but instead of repeating the object (μὴ τὸν βασιλέα τ. Ἰ.) a pronoun (τοῦτον) is substituted so that the Jews

² [2208 a] There follows an ellipsis of δύνασθε καρπὸν φέρειν ἅφ' ἑαυτῶν, which has to be mentally supplied after οὐδὲ ὑμεῖς from the preceding δύναται κ. φ. ἅφ' ἑαυτοῦ.

³ [2208 b] In xvii. 21 "that they may be all one: even as (καθὼς) thou, Father [art] in me and I [am] in thee, that they also may be in us," if the punctuation were "that they may be all one even as thou, Father, [art] in me," it might be contended that "art" is supplied from what precedes. But, if a fresh sentence begins at "even as," "art" is omitted in accordance with Greek idiom and must be supplied in accordance with it—without any reference to what precedes. So it would not fall under this group of ellipses. See 2127 b, 2132 a.

avoid calling Jesus "king." In xxi. 19—21 "'Follow me'..... [My] Lord, but this man, what?" the δέ denotes antithesis and implies a preceding μέν-clause, "My Lord, [I on the one hand am to do this that thou sayest] but this man on the other hand—what [is he to do?]" The preceding context describes Peter as first receiving the command, "Follow," and then (while apparently in the act of following) as "turning" and seeing the unnamed disciple also "following." Hence the meaning might possibly be "I am following thee as thou commandest, but this man, what [is he doing, following without command?]" But the subsequent context ("If I will that he tarry till I come...") points to the future as the object of Peter's question: and both Origen and Chrysostom take it thus¹.

(a) Ἐάν οὖν θεωρᾶτε (vi. 62)

[2211] (1) "Therefore," following an implied statement "ye stumble at this," would naturally introduce an argument a fortiori, "Much more, therefore, will ye stumble" (see οὖν, 2192) or something equivalent to it. (2) "Behold" θεωρᾶτε (for which Chrysostom reads ἰδῆτε) has been shewn (1598) to include vacant, unintelligent, and unspiritual "beholding." (3) "Ascending to heaven," when previously predicated concerning the Son of Man in this Gospel (iii. 13 "No man hath ascended into heaven but only he that descended from heaven, the Son of man") is connected with the "lifting up of the serpent" in the wilderness, and apparently with sacrifice for sin. If that is the meaning here, "ascending where he was before" means "offering up in the flesh that supreme sacrifice which raises the incarnate Son to the place that He had in the bosom of the Father as the pre-incarnate Word." But the offering up of this sacrifice in the flesh is described by Jesus, in the passage under consideration, as giving His "flesh and blood" to be the food of men; and it is the announcement of this that has caused them to "stumble¹."

[2211 b] The whole of Christ's life might be accurately described as a sacrifice, or a "glorifying" of God, or as a process of "ascending" to the Father: but the term "glorifying" is more particularly used for the Crucifixion and the Resurrection as summing up the essence of the life. The punishment of Crucifixion (as we know from Artemidorus' Manual of Dreams and from Jewish sources) was frequently referred to as a "lifting up"; and similar allusions are found in the Fourth Gospel, never in the Synoptists. Hence, when the Jews stood round the Cross of Christ "staring and gaping" upon Him, as the Psalmist says, they were really "beholding Him going up to the place where He was before." And some thought of this kind—some notion of unintelligent "staring and gaping"—may have been in John's mind when he described the soldier piercing Christ's side, as fulfilling the prophecy "they shall look on him whom they pierced."

[2211 c] On the late Jewish use of "lifted up" for "crucified," or "hanged," see Levy i. 549 b (quoted in 1003 c). Artemidorus, too, writing in the second century, connects dreams about "lifting up" and "stretching out of hands" with crucifixion, thus, i. 76 εἰ δὲ τις ὑψηλὸς ἐπὶ τινος ὀρχοῖτο, εἰς φόβον καὶ δέος πεσεῖται· κακοῦργος δὲ ὧν σταυρωθήσεται διὰ τὸ ὑψος καὶ τὴν τῶν χειρῶν ἔκτασιν, and again in his special section on dreams "about the Cross" (ii. 53) ἀγαθὸν δὲ καὶ πένητι· καὶ γὰρ ὑψηλὸς ὁ σταυρωθεὶς καὶ πολλοὺς τρέφει, i.e. "Such a dream betokens good for a poor man also; for the crucified is 'lifted up' and he 'feeds many.'" "To feed many" means to be a rich man with plenty of slaves. But it also contains a grim allusion to the fact that the crucified "fed the crows" ("non pascas in cruce corvos"), which he refers to in the context, τὰς σάρκας ἀπολλύουσιν οἱ σταυρωθέντες, "the crucified lose their flesh." For a bachelor, he adds, the cross betokens a marriage, "but not at all a profitable one," by reason of the "binding." The cross also prevents a man from going forward (ἐπιβαλναι) on the land and from staying where he would like to stay. To be crucified in a city (ib.) "signifies some office corresponding to the place wherein the cross is erected (ἀρχὴν τοιαύτην σημαίνει οὗτος ἂν ᾗ ὁ τόπος ἐν ᾧ ὁ σταυρὸς ἐστήκεν)." In a later section about "carrying (βαστάζειν) and being carried (βαστάζεσθαι)" (ii. 56) he again refers to the cross. Some of these details are curiously similar to xxi. 18 "thou shalt (1) stretch out thy hands, and another shall (2) gird (i.e. bind) thee, and shall (3) bear thee where thou dost not desire," to which is added, "this he said signifying by what death he [i.e. Peter] should glorify God." See 2642 b.

[2212] According to this view, θεωρέω is used here, as in some other passages of the Fourth Gospel (1598) for unintelligent "beholding," seeing with the eyes of the flesh: and the meaning of the passage is, "Doth this cause you to stumble, [the mere setting forth, in word, of the doctrine of a self-sacrificing Messiah]? [What?] therefore [will ye do, and how much more grievously will ye stumble] if ye behold¹ [the fulfilment, in act, of my doctrine, not your doctrine, of the Messianic glory; if, instead of gazing at the King of glory going up in visible splendour on the clouds of heaven, ye 'stand staring and gaping' at] the [crucified] Son of man, [going down as ye suppose to Sheol, but in fact] going up where He was before²?"

² [2212 b] Chrysostom, reading ἂν οὖν ἰδῇτε, likens this mention of "ascending" to Christ's promise to Nathanael ("thou shalt see greater things than these... [angels of God ascending]") and to Christ's argument with Nicodemus ("No man hath ascended to heaven except the Son of man..."). He seems to reject the interpretation given above, saying "Doth He knit perplexities with perplexities? No. God forbid! But by the grandeur of His doctrines, and by their abundance, He desires to attract them (τῷ μεγέθει τῶν δογμάτων καὶ τῷ πλήθει αὐτοὺς ἐπαγαγέσθαι βούλεται)."

[2212 c] This feeling (namely, that Christ is looking forward to a time when the disciples will not "stumble") has probably caused the alterations in the text mentioned above (2210 a). For, if δέ be read for οὖν, then contrast replaces inference, and the whole meaning is changed to something of this kind: "This (emph.) causeth you to stumble: but [wait a little, what will ye say] if ye should be [soon] beholding the Son of man visibly ascending [in triumph] where He was before? [Then ye will cease to stumble]." There is much against this. It involves an alteration of a difficult text to a less difficult one. Moreover, though all Christians (like the martyr Stephen) might be represented as seeing Christ at the right hand of God, only an exceptional few (Acts i. 2—13) could be represented as seeing Him in the act of ascending to God. It seems to take θεωρῆτε as being a fleshly "beholding" and yet as one that will remove a stumbling-block. It does not tell us who will thus "behold"—or when, and how, they will be delivered from "stumbling" by the "beholding." The Acts, which relates the Ascension, implies that a small number witnessed it. But those whom Christ was now addressing were apparently a large number, for He says to them (vi. 64) "There are some of you that believe not," and then it is added "Many of his disciples went back."

(iii) Idiomatic

(α) Ellipsis of "some"

[2213] The most important elliptical expression in John is the Graeco-Hebraic use of "I am" (without any predicate expressed or implied in the context) for which see 2220 foll. There are two or three omissions of ἄν with the indicative, which need little comment¹. But the omission of "some" in the phrase "some of" requires notice. For the most part it is free from ambiguity, as in vi. 39 "that...I may not lose [any] of it (ἵνα...μὴ ἀπολέσω ἐξ αὐτοῦ)," where, strictly speaking, μηδέν would be supplied, not τι, vii. 40 "[Some] of the crowd, therefore (ἐκ τοῦ ὄχλου οὖν), having heard these words, said...," xvi. 17 "There said therefore [some] of (εἶπαν οὖν ἐκ) the disciples...," xxi. 10 "Bring [some] of (ἀπό) the fish."

[2214] The following is ambiguous, i. 24 Καὶ ἀπεσταλμένοι ἦσαν ἐκ τῶν Φαρισαίων, R.V. txt "And they had been sent from the Pharisees," R.V. marg. "and [certain] had been sent from among the Pharisees." In favour of R.V. marg. are the following facts. (1) The partitive use of ἐκ is very frequent in John². (2) John has already told us who sent the deputation (i. 19 "The Jews sent to him"). (3) "Some of the Pharisees" makes excellent sense. "Priests and Levites" alone have been as yet mentioned: and they (we may suppose) have asked their questions, and have been silenced. They are on the point of going back to those who sent them, carrying a merely negative answer ("I am not the Christ" etc.). But now it is added that there were "Pharisees" on the deputation, men learned in the Law and the Traditions, given to ask "By what authority?" and not so easily silenced: these therefore intervene with the question, "Why baptizest thou then?" These arguments are not conclusive, but they make it probable that there is an ellipsis of "some"³.

[2215] ix. 40 "[Some] of the Pharisees heard these things (ἤκουσαν ἐκ τῶν Φ. ταῦτα)—those that were with him (οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὄντες)—and said, Are we also blind?" A.V. "And [some] of the P. which were with him," R.V. "Those of the Pharisees which were with him." John's frequent use of apposition (1928—47) combines here with his frequent use of partitive ἐκ, to make an ellipsis of τινες almost certain. Chrysostom in his comment ("There say unto Him [some] of those that were following Him¹") apparently takes it thus, and he suggests that the evangelist added the clause οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ to shew that they were the same that had previously revolted and afterwards tried to stone Him². This construction ("[some] from," i.e. "[some] of") is frequent in Hebrew and fairly frequent in LXX. In both, it gives rise to ambiguities, e.g. Lev. xxv. 33 (R.V.) "If one of the Levites redeem," marg. "redeem from the Levites," where LXX (παρά) takes the latter view, but Aquila and Symmachus (ἐκ) the former³.

¹ [2213 α] xv. 22, 24 ἀμαρτίαν οὐκ εἶχσαν, xix. 11 οὐκ εἶχες ἐξουσίαν. In viii. 39, we ought probably to read, with W.H. txt, ποιεῖτε (not, with W.H. marg. ἐποιεῖτε), see 2078—9. Ἄν is said to be (Winer p. 382) regularly omitted in modern Greek in such instances, and the omission is freq. in later classical Greek. It might also be a Latinism. Perhaps in N.T. it adds force, "they would assuredly have had no sin." See also 2698.

² It is about as freq. in Jn as in Mk, Mt. Lk. together.

(β) Ellipsis (?) of "gate" (v. 2)

[2216] v. 2 (R.V.) "Now there is in Jerusalem by the sheep [gate] (ἐπὶ τῇ προβατικῇ) a pool..." A.V. "by the sheep [market] (marg. gate)." The text is probably corrupt. But in any case no solid grounds have been alleged for the hypothesis of an ellipsis of "gate."
 (1) Eusebius, Jerome, Chrysostom, and the ancient Latin and Syriac versions make no mention of "gate" in connexion with this passage.
 (2) Nehemiah mentions all the gates of Jerusalem, the "sheep-gate" among them, where the context would make his meaning quite clear without "gate"; yet the noun "gate" is never omitted by his narrative in Hebrew or Greek⁴.
 (3) No instance of such an ellipsis has ever been quoted from Greek literature (although it would probably have been frequently used if it existed in that language, as in German).
 (4) Wetstein has shewn that a Jewish word similar to προβατική (and perhaps transliterated from it) was in use to mean "bathing place." (5) This might be interpreted in Greek as "pool (κολυμβήθρα)," besides being transliterated in the text as προβατική, "bathing place." (6) On the three occasions where προβατική occurs in LXX it happens to be joined to πύλη (Neh. iii. 1, 32, xii. 39) so that the adjective might naturally suggest the interpolation of "gate" to any persons perplexed by the apparent use of προβατική as a noun. (7) Thus the two words might be combined so as to give the sense of a "pool" near a "sheep-gate."

There may not be quite enough evidence to support this explanation; but, in any case, so far as we are acquainted at present with the Greek language, there is no evidence at all for the ellipsis of "gate."

(γ) Ellipsis of "daughter" (or "wife"?)

[2217] xix. 25 (R.V.) "Mary the [wife] (ἡ) of Clopas." The almost universal practice in Greek writers is to use ἡ τοῦ 'A. to mean "the [daughter] of A." In a few special cases, where the relationship was historically known, ἡ τοῦ 'A. might mean "the mother, or sister, or wife, of A.," but these are not to the point here. In Latin, "Verania Pisonis" is used for "Piso's [wife] Verania," and such a use of the genitive is current in some parts of England: but obviously it would lead to confusion if "Clopas's Mary" could mean indiscriminately either "mother, daughter, or wife, of Clopas." The reasons for believing that ἡ τοῦ must here have been intended to mean "daughter" must be deferred to another work.

(ε) Οὐχ ὅτι

[2218] Some verb or phrase is omitted in connexion with οὐχ ὅτι as follows: (1) vi. 45—6 (R.V.) "Every one that hath heard from the Father, and hath learned, cometh unto me. Not that (οὐχ ὅτι) any man hath seen the Father, save he which is from God, he

For the ellipsis of ματρίος in xx. 12 ἐν λευκοῖς, comp. Rev. iii. 4 περιπατήσουσιν... ἐν λευκοῖς, and Artemid. ii. 3 ἐν λευκοῖς ἐκφέρεσθαι, also Mt. xi. 8, Lk. vii. 25 ἐν μαλακοῖς. hath seen the Father¹," (2) vii. 22 (R.V.) "For this cause hath Moses given you circumcision (not that it is of Moses but of the fathers); and on the sabbath ye circumcise a man" (A.V. "not because it is of Moses")². Compare 1 Jn iv. 9—10 (R.V.) "Herein was the love of God manifested in us, that (ὅτι) (A.V. because that) God hath sent his only begotten son...Herein is love, not that (οὐχ ὅτι) we loved God but that (ἀλλ' ὅτι) he loved us and sent...³." In the Epistle ἐν τούτῳ...ὅτι appears to mean "Herein...[I mean in the fact] that," and ἐν τούτῳ...οὐχ ὅτι "Herein...[I do] not [mean in the fact] that."

[2219] As regards the two passages in the Gospel, it is not possible to demonstrate that ὅτι means "that" (and not "because")—just as, in English, it is not possible sometimes to decide whether the expression "not that I wish" means "[I say this] not because I wish" or "[I do] not [mean to say] that I wish." But, having regard to the classical⁴ and the Pauline⁵ uses of οὐχ ὅτι, and to the contexts of the two Johannine passages, we may conclude that "I say" (whether in the sense of "I mean" or otherwise) is to be supplied in both of them. That being the case, it will be more in accordance with

But Jn ix. 30 ἐν τούτῳ γὰρ τὸ θαυμαστὸν ἐστὶν ὅτι is to be explained differently, since "in this" means "in your not knowing" (comp. "we know not") and ὅτι means "because." See 2393.

⁵ [2219 b] In 2 Cor. vii. 9 "Now I rejoice, not because," the meaning is clear, and there is no ellipsis, and prob. in 2 Cor. iii. 4—5 "This great confidence we have...not because...," and 2 Thess. iii. 7—9: but in 2 Cor. i. 23—4 "I gave up my plan...from a desire to spare you," the best meaning of the following οὐχ ὅτι is attained by some insertion of "say" as "[I say this] not because," or "[I do] not [mean to say] that," and so in Phil. iii. 10—12, iv. 10—11, 17.

general Greek usage if we supply λέγω not before οὐχ ὅτι, but before ὅτι, giving λέγω the sense "I mean to say," which it repeatedly has in N.T., and in Greek generally, so that οὐχ ὅτι is equivalent to "[I do] not [mean to say] that." Then, in both passages, it will correct a possible misapprehension. In the former, vi. 45—6, the words "from the Father"—naturally meaning "from the home of" (2356) or "from the side of," the Father—might suggest a person seeing the Father face to face. This is disclaimed by the words "[I do] not [mean] that any one hath seen the Father." In vii. 22, there is a similar disclaimer, "Moses hath given you circumcision—[I do] not [mean to say] that he originated it, but it was from the fathers."

(ζ) Ellipsis after "I am"

[2220] In the Walking on the Waters it is usual to assume that vi. 20 ἐγώ εἰμι means "I am [indeed that which I appear to be]," "I am [my very self]," or, according to our English idiom, "It is I." This would accord with what is stated in the parallel Mark-Matthew, namely, that the disciples "thought they saw a phantasm²." In opposition to this, Christ might naturally be supposed to say "I am [not a phantasm but] I [myself]." But there is no proof that the Greek words can mean this. And there is proof that, in the Discourse on the Last Days, Mark uses ἐγώ εἰμι to mean "I am [the Saviour, Deliverer, or Christ]." Moreover in that Discourse Luke (who omits the Walking on the Waters) agrees with Mark in the use of ἐγώ εἰμι, and Matthew shews that he understood the phrase thus by supplying the ellipsis, "*I am the Christ*³." Lastly, Luke indicates that he would not have agreed in rendering ἐγώ εἰμι "I am my very self" by the fact that elsewhere, when he actually attributes a meaning of this kind to our Lord, he adds αὐτός⁴.

[2221] The N.T. use of "I am" to mean "I am the Saviour" is in accordance with passages in Deuteronomy and Isaiah, where

² Mk vi. 49 ἔδοξαν ὅτι φάντασμα ἐστίν, Mt. xiv. 26 ἐταράχθησαν λέγοντες ὅτι Φάντασμα ἐστίν.

ἐγὼ εἰμι corresponds to the Hebrew "I [am] he [to whom all must look]," and is applied to God. The LXX uses the same phrase to render the boast of Nineveh in Zephaniah, "I [am], and there is none else beside me¹." Nor is there (as at present alleged) any solid evidence to shew that ἐγὼ εἰμι could bear, at least in the first century, anything else but this meaning—derived through LXX from Hebraic sources—"I am the Saviour, or Deliverer." The Thesaurus gives no instance of the meaning "I am my very self." Wetstein (on Mt. xiv. 27) quotes authority for phrases in the context, but none for "I am" in this sense. Westcott and Swete quote none to the point².

[2222] If therefore we are to be guided by evidence, we must suppose the meaning to be, not "I am myself, Jesus of Nazareth," but "I am your Saviour³." It is to be interpreted as a vestige of the poetic and Hebrew element underlying the story of the Stilling of the Storm, in which the disciples saw the form of Jesus, and heard Him saying, "I AM [HE]," meaning "I am He that helpeth." It is, then, a genuine case of ellipsis, for the meaning is not "I am" in the sense of "I live" or "I exist-eternally"⁴. There is an ellipsis of HE meaning, in Jewish tradition, "Deliverer," but also implying more than this, as will appear in the next Johannine instance of "I am."

² [2221 a] Swete (on Mk vi. 50) says "ἐγὼ εἰμι = 'It is I,' cf. Lc. xxiv. 39, ἐγὼ εἰμι αὐτός, and the use of ἸΝ, LXX ἐγὼ in the O.T. (B.D.B., p. 59)." But Lk.'s insertion of αὐτός separates his usage from that of Mk, and Gesen. p. 59 merely says that Heb. ἸΝ (LXX ἐγὼ) is used "alone in response to a question," e.g. Gen. xxvii. 24 "Art thou my son Esau? And he said I [am]" ὁ δὲ εἶπεν, Ἐγὼ. None of these instances are to the point.

[2221 b] Westcott (on Jn vi. 20) says, "It is I. Comp. iv. 26, viii. 24, 28, 58, (ix. 9), xliii. 19, xviii. 5, 6, 8; Mark xiii. 6, Luke xxi. 8." But (2205) these are either cases of contextual ellipsis or else of special and technical meaning, I AM: and indeed Westcott himself (on viii. 24) distinguishes the technical usage from "cases where the predicate is directly suggested by the context."

⁴ [2222 b] The Syr. of ἐγὼ εἰμι is a reduplication of "I," which pronoun (Thes. Syr.) also represents the copula, so that "I I" may mean "I am."

[2223] viii. 24—5 “For except ye believe that I AM, ye shall die in your sins.’ They therefore said to him, ‘Who art thou?’ Jesus said to them, ‘[From] the beginning that which I also speak to you¹.’” The words “believe me and understand that I AM HE” occur in Isaiah, as follows, “Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant whom I have chosen, that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I [AM] HE...Yea, since the day was, I [AM] HE².” In the Psalms, this use of HE occurs with an ellipsis of “art” in addressing Jehovah, “Thou [art] HE and thy years shall not fail³.” The Song in Deuteronomy says “See now that I, I, [AM] HE,” where LXX has “See, see that I AM⁴.” Here Philo paraphrases I AM as “that there is from the beginning a Cause of the Universe⁵.” Ibn Ezra (on Isaiah xliii. 10—13) says, “This is the sublimest expression of the unity of God; for every other being is different from its real form”—apparently meaning that, whereas all other things deviate from their ideal, God alone is true to the Ideal. Hence God is Truth and also Perfection. Apparently he takes I [AM] HE to mean “I am he that is,” i.e. is really, eternally, and unchangeably.

[2224] In LXX, the Hebrew I HE is regularly rendered ἐγώ εἰμι. Aquila certainly rendered it so once and presumably always⁶. In Hebrew, the personal pronoun “he” is so frequently used as a substitute for the verb “to be” that Greeks might well translate “he” by εἰμί in this phrase. In Aramaic also (Levy) “he” is “used for the copula” as well as for the personal pronoun⁷. Hence any Semitic Logia of Jesus using this idiom would probably be rendered in Greek for the most part by ἐγώ εἰμι. In the Psalms, HE in “Thou [art] HE” is once rendered ὁ αὐτός, “the same⁸.” The Semitic I HE is perhaps latent under ἐγώ εἰμι αὐτός, assigned to Christ by Luke alone⁹. But the text is doubtful (2699 foll.).

[2225] That John, when writing "believe that I AM," did not mean exactly "believe that I am the eternal God," may be inferred from several facts. (1) Christ's hearers (until they heard the words "before Abraham¹") did not take I AM in that sense. Else they would have stoned Jesus at once. (2) The words are put by the Synoptists into the mouth of any false Messiah that might say, in effect, "I am the Deliverer." (3) John always represents the Son as claiming to reveal the Father and to be one with the Father, but never as claiming to be the One God. It is not so easy—probably it is impossible—to define exactly John's positive meaning: but some light may be thrown on it by the first of the passages in which Isaiah uses the phrase. It runs thus in Hebrew "Ye are my witnesses, saith Jehovah, and my servant whom I have chosen, in order that ye may know and believe in (lit. to) me, and may understand that I [AM] HE²." The Targum has (after "Jehovah") "my servant Christ whom I have chosen that ye may know and believe before me and may understand that I [AM] HE that is from the beginning." Thus, if we, as it were, interrogate the speaker in Isaiah as to the meaning of I HE and ask "What art thou?" the Targum answers "HE that is from the beginning." But this is curiously like the question and answer in John after Jesus had insisted on the necessity of believing "that I AM." The Jews had asked "Who art thou?" and the first word of Christ's reply is "[In] the beginning (τὴν ἀρχήν)³."

[2226] There are several interesting resemblances between the Hebrew doctrine of the I HE (or the Greek doctrine of the I AM) in Isaiah and the Johannine doctrine about the unity of the Father and the Son. For example, "My Father worketh from the beginning

³ [2225 a] The Targ. paraphrases I HE elsewhere as follows, Deut. xxxii. 39 (Heb. "I, I, HE") (Jer. 1) "I [am] He who Am and Was, and Will be," (Jer. 11) "I in my word [am] He"; Ps. cii. 27 "Thou [art] He that created us"; in Is. xliii. 13 Heb. "From the day I HE" is (Targ.) "From eternity I HE"; in Is. xli. 4 "Even to old age I HE" = Targ. "Even to eternity I HE." Perh. the Targumist regarded "from eternity" and "to eternity" as attributes, and therefore did not in these last two passages insert such predicates as "that created us" or "that is from the beginning" etc. Comp. Is. lii. 6 "Therefore my people shall know my name, therefore [I say, they shall know] in that day that I [AM] HE that speaketh, behold me" (Ibn Ezra "when I shall proclaim, Behold it is I"). Swete punctuates the LXX ὅτι ἐγὼ εἰμι αὐτὸς ὁ λαλῶν· πάρεμι, but there are many ways of combining the words. The Targ. is (Walton) "scietis, quoniam ego sum qui loquebar et Verbum meum permanet."

and I work," "I—and yet not I, but I and the Father that sent me," combined with the present passage ("I AM...From the beginning that which I speak unto you") appear to represent the Son as "from the beginning" at one with the Father in "working" the work of supporting and redeeming man. So in Isaiah, we find, in one and the same context, "I AM," together with "from the beginning" (in Hebrew, Aramaic and Greek¹), and "I will *work*², who shall hinder it?" Another passage introduces "speaking," "I [AM] HE that speaketh³."

[2227] One of the most spiritually minded of the early Rabbis, Abba Saul, who flourished about 130 A.D., extracting the words I AND HE out of a passage of Scripture where they have no existence, paraphrases them thus, "I will be like Him [i.e. God]: as He is merciful and kind, so will I too be merciful and kind⁴." Commenting on the Isaiah passage (Is. xlii. 3) that describes Jehovah as carrying His people, Ibn Ezra says "The idols of Babylon are carried by their worshippers but I, the God of Israel, carry the Israelites." This conception of man as being in "the arms" of God, his Father—and not as crouching under "the arm" of God, his Chastiser, pervades the whole of the Fourth Gospel. It may be taken as certain that the evangelist attaches some meaning of this kind to the Greek words I AM in virtue of their association with the thought of God carrying man in His bosom. It would be bathos to suppose that Jesus, after saying "I am the bread of life" and "I am the light of the world," now comes down to the bare "I am" implying nothing more than mere existence, conceivably bad as well as good.

² [2226 b] The Heb. of Is. xliii. 13 "work" is regularly rendered ἐργάζομαι (though LXX renders it "make (ποιῶ)" here) which is the word in Jn v. 17 "My Father worketh and I work."

[2226 c] The curious juxtaposition of "know" and "believe" in connexion with I AM in Is. xliii. 10, and the phrase (Is. lii. 6) "[they shall know] in that day that I [am] he that speaketh," may be compared with the Johannine form of Peter's confession (Jn vi. 68—9) "Thou hast words of eternal life, and we know and believe that thou art the holy one of God."

⁴ See 1022. Bacher (Die Agada, ii. 367) shews that some versions have "Be thou like," but prefers the above.

[2228] Much more probably we may suppose I AM to come here, absolutely,—as a climax after the previous declarations about the “bread” and the “light”—conveying a great mass of meaning that would not be fully intelligible to any readers that had not pondered on the meaning of the divine I AM, and perhaps on the meaning of “I¹.” On the one hand I AM means more than “I am the Deliverer”; on the other, it means less than “I am the eternal God.” Taken by itself, “Believe that I AM” might mean, as it means in Deuteronomy, “Believe in the unity of the Supreme God, the Deliverer of Israel”: but, taken here, along with other declarations about what Jesus IS, it seems to call upon the Pharisees to believe that the Son of man is not only the Deliverer but also one with the Father in the unity of the Godhead. Many may be unable to believe that our Lord actually uttered these precise words in this sense and may yet find it quite possible to believe that they represent the essence of His doctrine, namely, that the Father is revealed to men in the ideal of humanity (with which He is at one) and not in a written law. Others may go further, and may believe that Jesus felt Himself to be thus absolutely at one with the Father.

¹ [2228 a] The doctrine of Epictetus (ii. 22. 15—20) concerning the “I” is worth noting in this connexion. Wherever the “I” and the “Mine” are, there, he says, will be every creature’s inclination (compare “Where your treasure is there will be your heart also”): Every creature loves its own “profit (συμφέρον)” above all things, “This, i.e. profit, is father and brother and kindred and country and God.” If therefore a man “identifies ‘profit’ with piety and honour and country and parents and friends, these are saved, all of them”; if not, they are outweighed by “profit.” This identification of the “profit” of the “I” with Goodness, is what a Jew might express mystically by saying “I am He.” Epictetus adds (ib.) that we must needs desire to destroy anyone—brother, father, child—that comes between us and “profit” (“Unless a man hate his own father...he cannot be my disciple”) but that if the “I” is identified with virtuous purpose, he will become a perfect friend, son, and father (Mk x. 30 “he shall receive a hundredfold...mothers...”).

[2228 b] The Synoptic form of these doctrines may have influenced Epictetus and may have led him to think that virtuous philosophers might find their Son of man in themselves, each man in his own heart: “I will not ‘lose my soul that I may find it.’ I will worship my own soul, my own higher purpose, my spirit contending against the flesh.” John may have written with some regard to such conclusions, putting the Synoptic doctrine in a new aspect, or developing it in an old aspect neglected by the Synoptists, in order to shew that the regeneration of man, if it was to be based on “I,” must be based on a different one from the philosophic “Ego.”

[2230] Τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί might, theoretically, be rendered "What does this concern me and thee?" for τί μοι, by itself, might mean "what does it concern me?" as in Epictet. iii. 22. 66 (foll. by infin.). But, as a fact, both in Hebrew and Greek (Wetst. on Mt. viii. 29) "What [is there] to me and thee?" always implies "to me and thee in common," so that the meaning is, "What have we to do with one another?" [Wetst. compares Josh. xxii. 24, 2 S. xvi. 10, 1 K. xvii. 18, 2 K. xvi. 10, 2 Chr. xxxv. 21, Joel iii. 4. But in Josh. xxii. 24, LXX omits καί, 2 K. xvi. 10 is a repetition (by error) of 2 S. xvi. 10, and in Joel iii. 4 LXX has (as Heb.) τί ὑμεῖς ἐμοί;] It occurs in Aristoph., Demosth., Epictet., Achill. Tat., Anacreon etc., and none of Wetstein's numerous quotations adds an explanatory phrase except Synesius, δῆμω γὰρ δὴ καὶ φιλοσοφία τί πρὸς ἀλλήλους; The phrase was so common that no contemporary (2642 a) Greeks could doubt that πρὸς ἀλλήλους had to be supplied¹.

[2230 (i)] The ellipsis of ἐστί in the phrase ἔτι μικρόν is found in no Gospel but the Fourth, xiv. 19 "Yet a little (ἔτι μικρόν) and the world no longer beholdeth me: ye (emph.) behold me." The Epistle to the Hebrews, quoting from prophecy, says, "Ye have need of patience, that having done the will of God ye may gather in (κομίσησθε)¹ the promise, For yet a little, just a little, [and] he that cometh will come². This illustrates the regular use of the phrase in O.T. in predictions announcing the approaching doom of the enemies of Jehovah and the deliverance of His people, who are exhorted to wait "yet a little³." The ellipsis of ἐστὶ after ἔτι is not mentioned in the Thesaurus and appears to spring from Hebrew sources.

[2230 (ii)] Similar ellipses of "are," with mention of time, occur in O.T. in connexion with the judgment of Jehovah that will surely come to pass in "yet seven days," "yet forty days," "yet a year" etc.⁴ Compare the thought in iv. 35 "Say ye not, 'Yet are four months and the harvest cometh?' Behold, I say unto you, lift up your eyes and contemplate the lands how that they are white for reaping. Already doth the reaper receive hire and gather fruit for life eternal." As the Gospel connects this numbering of "months" with a subsequent mention of "hire," so does Isaiah, "Within yet a year as the year of a hireling," and elsewhere he says, "Within three years, as the years of a hireling, and the glory of Moab shall be brought into contempt⁵," meaning apparently that Israel counted the days "like the days of an hireling, as a servant that earnestly desireth the shadow, and as an hireling that looketh for his wages⁶."

[2230 (iii)] As regards the period of "four months," it appears⁷ that the Jews divided the agricultural year into six periods of two months, the first four being "seed-time," "winter," "winter-solstice," "harvest." It might therefore be common for farmers and labourers at the conclusion of "seed-time," to say "Yet four months [i.e. winter and winter-solstice] and the harvest cometh," and from agriculturists the saying might pass into a proverb inculcating patient expectation. It is to be noted that Jn iv. 35 foll. is the only place in this Gospel where "hire" is mentioned. The meaning may be paraphrased thus: "Do not the farmers say, Four months precisely, as the days of a hireling—and then cometh the harvest? But I say to you, Lift up your eyes, and see the harvest already white, and the hire of the reapers already present¹."

INTERROGATIVE SENTENCES

(i) Interrogative particles

[2231] John's use of the interrogative οὐ², οὐχί, πῶς, πόθεν, and τί³ seldom causes ambiguity and requires little comment. But his uses of οὐ μή and οὐκοῦν are unique in N.T. as follows:

¹ [2230 (iii) a] Comp. Jas v. 7 "Be therefore long-suffering...the husbandman waiteth...." In Jn iv. 35 τετράμηνός ἐστι, there is no ellipsis; but the thought is similar to that of the above quoted passages from O.T.

² [2231 a] In xix. 10 ἐμοὶ οὐ λαλεῖς; "To me thou speakest not!" οὐ has the force of alpha privative, "Thou refusest to speak to me!" As regards οὐχί—which (1861) is never used by Mk and is more freq. in Lk. than in Mt. and Jn taken together—there are abundant instances in N.T. of its use interrogatively as in Jn xi. 9. In vi. 42, W.H. has 'οὐχί' (marg. οὐχ) οὗτός ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς ὁ υἱὸς Ἰωσήφ...; Comp. Mk vi. 3 οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τέκτων...; καὶ οὐκ...; Mt. xiii. 55 οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν...; καὶ...οὐχί...; Lk. iv. 22 οὐχὶ υἱὸς ἐστιν Ἰωσήφ οὗτος; In Mt. v. 46, 47, vi. 25, xii. 11, the parall. Lk. rejects οὐχί. But Lk. freq. has οὐχί interrog. elsewhere, in traditions peculiar to himself, and also in the parall. to Mt. x. 29. On οὐχί negative, see 2265 (i).

[2231 c] As to the interrogative use of τί generally, it has been noted (939 b) that Jn never uses ἵνα τί. Διὰ τί he never uses without a negative. Τί, "why?" he uses frequently. "Οτι, interrogatively used sometimes in LXX, Jn never uses thus.

(a) ΟΥ ΜΗ

[2232] xviii. 11 "The cup that my Father hath given me shall I not assuredly drink it (οὐ μὴ πῖω αὐτό)!" See 933—6, 1007, where it is maintained that this rare interrogative is rather an exclamation than an interrogation, and that it means literally "I am of course not to drink it [according to your desire]!" This view is confirmed by many details in this section shewing John's proneness to the exclamatory interrogative; and it also helps to explain (1508) one aspect of the meaning of iv. 48 "Except ye see signs and wonders ye will assuredly not believe (οὐ μὴ πιστεύσητε)!" addressed to the nobleman from Capernaum. Chrysostom suggests that "ye" may mean "ye citizens of Capernaum," and that our Lord is chiding and stimulating his faith as being weak like that of his fellow-citizens. But the words

[2231 d] As regards ἔτι, the LXX uses it to express a great number of Hebrew particles, and it often represents Heb. "Why?" "For what?" "Is not?" etc. But there is often v.r. τί ἔτι; and, where ἔτι introduces a speech, confusion may arise from the use of ἔτι recitativum, e.g. Gen. xviii. 13 εἶπεν Κ. πρὸς Ἀ. "Οτι ἐγέλασεν Σ. (D τί ἔτι) "Wherefore did S. laugh?" Comp. Judg. ii. 2 v.r. ὅτε, Judg. iv. 14 v.r. οὐχ ἰδοῦ (where Swete marks no interrog. and ἔτι may mean "for indeed"), 2 S. vii. 7 v.r. τί and τί ἔτι, xii. 9 v.r. τί, 2 K. viii. 14 (Swete ὅ τι, called by Blass "v.l. (in AB) for τί," but Swete gives no v.l.), Job xxvii. 12 v.r. διὰ τί δέ etc. The instances are extremely numerous.

[2231 e] These special circumstances differentiate LXX Greek (and Greek influenced by LXX) from all other Greek, as to the use of ἔτι in particular and interrogative and relative particles in general. Blass says (p. 176) "the employment of ὅστις or even of ὅς in a direct question is quite incredible, except that ὅς, τι appears to be used as an abbreviation for τί ὅς, τι 'why.'" Blass (p. 331) mentions, as quoted against him, (1) Plut. De Sera Vind. 14 p. 558 E: but this is best punctuated τό γε σαφές...οὐδ'...ἀσφαλῶς εἰπεῖν ἔχομεν, οἶον, διὰ τί..., ἢ πάλιν δι' ἣν αἰτίαν... (2) 2 K. viii. 14 (see 2231 d) which should not be mixed with non-LXX Gk, (3) [Justin] Cohort. ad Graec. 5 ad fin., where the txt is doubtful, but there is high authority for paraphrasing thus, "For the same reason for which (δι' ἣν αἰτίαν) you say Homer speaks the truth when he is on your side don't you think he speaks the truth when we prove (ἀποφηνάμενων for ἀποφηνάμενος) from Homer a view opposite to yours?" (4) Euseb. P.E. vi. 7. 12 (Giff. p. 257 d) Ὡν δὲ ἕνεκα ταῦτα προσηύηνε γὰρ τῷ λόγῳ—ὅτι σε ἐκπέφηνεν..., rendered by G. "But do you ask the reasons for which...": but I should prefer: "And now to come to the reason for which I have introduced these matters—[it is] because...." To these may be added Euseb. P.E. vi. 7. p. 256 C, ἐκεῖνό μοι λέγε...ἀρὰ γὰρ τί ἐσμεν ἐγώ τε καὶ σύ;—φαίης ἂν—τοῦτο δὲ ὁπόθεν ἴσμεν; where I should suggest a repetition of λέγε. "Tell me this...Do we exist, you and I—yes, you say of course—but [tell me] whence we know this." Gifford renders, in note, "But do you ask whence do we know this?" The facts confirm Blass's conclusion.

apply to men of the world generally, "Ye that are rich and great will not believe without signs and wonders! [Is it to be so with thee?]"

(β) Οὐκοῦν

[2233] xviii. 37 (R.V.) "Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then (οὐκοῦν βασιλεὺς εἶ σύ;)" Οὐκουν, unaccented, may mean (1) "Not therefore," (2) "It is not, then?" (3) "Then it is so [is it not?]" In this last sense, in which it is commonly accented οὐκοῦν, it drops the negative and interrogative force, so that it can be used, in the sense "well then," even with an imperative, as in Kings (Heb.) "Be content, take two," where Symmachus has "Well then, take," οὐκοῦν (A οικουν, sic) λάβε². In such cases it means, "You'll do it, then, won't you?" It may be paraphrased as "come" when Persephone coaxes her husband to make Protesilaus young again, "Come, husband, prithee do thou cure this ill, also³."

[2234] In xviii. 37, the force of οὐκοῦν cannot be understood without reference to context (and perhaps to the Synoptists). All the four evangelists agree exactly in words and order as to the question addressed by Pilate to Jesus, "Thou art [it seems] the king of the Jews⁴!" But as to our Lord's answer, "Thou sayest [this]"⁵, the Synoptists assert that it followed at once, whereas John says that Jesus answered at once, "Sayest thou this from thyself.....?" Moreover, according to John, this answer provoked a contemptuous reply from Pilate, which led to Christ's explanation: "My kingdom is not from this world." Then, when Christ had thus admitted that He had, in some sense, a "kingdom," Pilate replies—dropping "Jews" and "the"—"Well then (οὐκοῦν) [we will not dispute about details, such as "the king" and "the Jews"] thou art a king." To this, and only to this—according to John—does Jesus assent by replying "Thou sayest that I am a king."

[2235] Μή ("it is not so, is it?" "can it be that?") is used interrogatively in the Fourth Gospel¹ more frequently than in all the Three Gospels taken together: but whereas the Three (Mark only using it once) restrict it to the words of Jesus, John almost restricts it to the words of others. There are but two instances of it in Christ's words, one being vi. 67, "Can it be that (μή) ye also (καὶ ὑμεῖς) desire to go away?"

² [2235 b] The other is xxi. 5 Παιδία, μή τι προσφάγιον ἔχετε; Field says (ad loc.) "ἔχεις τι; is the usual question...answering to our 'Have you had any sport?'" By adding μή to the usual phrase, the negative expectation is emphasized, "You have caught no fish, have you?" But ought we not to read μήτι (2702)?

[2235 d] On προσφάγιον, Field, quoting A.V. "any meat," and R.V. "ought to eat," says "Rather, 'Have ye taken any fish?'" Steph. shews that προσφάγιον was a vernacular word for προσόψημα, ὀψάριον (or ὄψον, which Clem. Alex. 104 substitutes (2307 a) when quoting this passage): and these words, though meaning literally "[relish] to food," were frequently used for "fish," in places where the habitual relish was "fish." In Oxyg. Pap. 736, προσφάγιον is rendered "relish"—after "beer, leeks,...asparagus, a cabbage"—"a relish half an obol," and again "relishes for the women on two days two and a half obols." Similarly 739 "a relish for the builder" thrice, 498 "each of us shall receive one loaf and a relish per diem." In 736, the editors also give "sauce (ὄψαριον) one obol...sauce (ὄψον) one obol, sauce (ὄψαριον) one obol." These entries are on three consecutive days, and—vegetables being excluded here by the mention of them in the context—it would seem probable that ὄψον means nearly the same thing as ὀψάριον and as προσφάγιον, namely "fish" in some form. Comp. Fayum Pap. cxix. 31 "for G.'s birthday feast send (?) fish (ὀψάρια) (sic) (edd. delicacies)...and an artaba of wheaten bread"; and Οxyr. 531 τοῖς ὀψαρίοις ἐξήλλαξας ἡμᾶς (?) "you won me over by the fish (edd. dainties)." The editors add that certain "cloaks" mentioned in the context may have been "in exchange for the ὀψάρια." Either interpretation would be compatible with the rendering "fish." Possibly, as "pickles" with us means "pickled (vegetables)," so the three Greek words above mentioned came to mean in certain localities, "[fish] for eating [with bread]," but different terms may have been applied to different kinds of fish, fresh, salt etc. Οxyr. Pap. 736 perhaps resembles Jn xxi. 5—9 in using 1st προσφάγιον and 2nd ὀψάριον to mean nearly the same thing. But in Jn the word may have a symbolic meaning (2703).

(ii) Interrogative tone

[2236] There is frequent ambiguity in sentences where the interrogation, if it exists, is expressed not by a particle, but by tone¹. In the first two of the following instances there is a protasis with a suspensive ὅτι, in the third there is not: i. 50 (R.V. and A.V.) "Because (ὅτι) I said unto thee I saw thee underneath (A.V. under) the fig-tree believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these"; xx. 29 (R.V. txt and A.V.) "Because (ὅτι) thou hast seen me thou hast believed: blessed [are] they that have not seen and [yet] have believed" (R.V. marg. "hast thou believed?"); xiv. 1 (R.V.) "Ye believe (marg. Believe) (πιστεύετε) in God: believe (πιστεύετε) also in me²."

³ [2237 a] The unambiguous aorist imperative, though theoretically somewhat different in meaning, differs sometimes little (in practice) from the present

[2239] On the other hand, πιστεύετε occurs in Matthew's version of Christ's words previous to His healing two blind men—theoretically capable of meaning "Believe," or "Believe ye?" or "Ye believe [I suppose]"—before the words "that I am able to do this⁴." Here it might have been plausibly argued that Jesus used the imperative to stimulate their faith, as He stimulates that of Jairus ("Be of good cheer, *only believe*⁵"): but this would be incompatible with the answer of the blind men, "Yea, Lord," which necessitates in πιστεύετε a meaning either directly interrogative ("Do ye believe?") or indirectly ("Ye believe [I assume before going further]?"). The latter is frequently used in English (e.g. "You will come with me?" "You will come with me, then?" for "You will come with me [will you not?]").

[2240] This last disconcerting instance from Matthew shews the difficulty and the danger of laying down a rule including all books of N.T. Each writer may have his own usage. But the usage of John (and of Mark, with whom John curiously agrees in some idioms) makes it probable that in the third Johannine instance above quoted (xiv. 1) πιστεύετε is imperative, "Believe in God,..."⁶ imperative. Comp. Mk v. 36 πιστεψε=Lk. viii. 50 πιστευσον, and Sir. ii. 6 πιστευσον αὐτῷ, ii. 8 πιστεύσατε αὐτῷ, xi. 21 πιστεψε τῷ κυρίῳ, with little apparent difference of meaning. Some writers may be more strict than others in discriminating between the two. Moreover, in particular verbs, e.g. ἔρχομαι, the use of the present and of the aorist imperative may vary according to special circumstances (2438 b).

⁵ Mk v. 36, Lk. viii. 50. Comp. Mk xi. 24 "whatsoever ye pray...believe (πιστεύετε) that ye have received them."

[2241] The other two instances (i. 50, xx. 29) differ from the third, and agree together, in being preceded by a protasis with suspensive $\delta\tau\iota$ ("Because I said unto thee...", "Because thou hast seen..."): and this leads us to ask what is John's usage after other Johannine instances of suspensive $\delta\tau\iota$. We shall find that there are four, and that the verb in the apodosis is always affirmative¹. This turns the scale in favour of an affirmative in i. 50 and xx. 29 "Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree, thou believest!" "Because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed!"²

[2242] Similarly in the Acts, Paul says to Agrippa "Thou believest ($\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon\epsilon\iota\varsigma$) the prophets [is it not so?]," and goes on to add the answer to this suggested question, "I know that thou believest³," and the Epistle of St James addresses a controversialist ironically thus, "Thou (emph.) ($\sigma\acute{\upsilon}$) [of course] believest that there is one God⁴?"—assuming, before the writer goes further, that this must be so, but putting the assumption as an affirmation with an interrogative tone. In the Fourth Gospel, $\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ is used by Jesus to Martha, "thou believest this [is it not so?]⁵," and, with videtur ex interpretatione sua Chrysostomus, quasi fides quam habebant...illis abunde præsidio esset." But might it not be consistent with an imperative rendering: "Be not troubled. Continue to believe.... That is to say, Your terrors will all pass away. For the belief in me and in the Father is stronger than your enemies"? Erasmus says that Cyril interprets both verbs imperatively. SS and a have "credite...et creditis," i.e. "believe in God and then ipso facto ye will believe in me"; but if this had been the meaning, would not Jn have written "the Father" (instead of "God")? The Vulgate and f have "creditis...credite"; Diatess., Syr. (Walton), b, d, and e have "credite...credite." Erasmus enumerates four possible interpretations (1) "creditis...creditis," (2) "credite...credite," (3) "creditis...credite," (4) "credite...creditis." To this may be added (5) (W.H. marg.), "credite, in Deum et in me credite" taking the 1st $\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon\epsilon\tau\epsilon$ absolutely; and possibly (6) "creditis in Deum? Et in me credite," "Do ye believe in God? Then believe also in me." The passage is one of the most conspicuous instances of Johannine ambiguity.

³ Acts xxvi. 27.

⁵ xi. 26 "...he shall never die. Thou believest this?"

a different shade of meaning, οὐ πιστεύεις to the blind man: "He [Jesus] said, Thou (emph.) believest in the Son of man¹." This apparently refers to the preceding facts—to the blind man's defence of Christ against the Pharisees, to his avowed belief in well-doing, and to his confidence that "God heareth" those who do His righteous will. If so, the meaning is, "Thou [I am sure] believest in the Son of man²," and there is little or nothing of the interrogative tone.

[2243] In xiii. 12—although R.V. and A.V. agree in the interrogative—"He said unto them, (R.V.) Know ye (γινώσκετε) what I have done to you?" the imperative is somewhat more probable, in view of xv. 18, "If the world hateth you, (R.V. marg.) know ye (γινώσκετε) that it hath hated me..." (1901, 2665—7), i.e. "understand, recognise, that the world hated me." The LXX usage rather favours the imperative³. In any case, we could not explain γινώσκετε in xiii. 12

² [2242 b] It may be said that Jesus could not have meant this, as the next words of the blind man are "And who is he, Lord?" But it may be replied that the blind man virtually believed in the ideal Son of man already, and that the Logos was supposed by the evangelist to discern this belief even before the blind man expressed it in the words (ix. 38) "I believe."

like πιστεύετε above, as “Ye know [do ye not?].” And the rendering, “Understand the meaning of what I have done to you,” makes excellent sense. Origen (ad loc.) allows both renderings.

[2244] In two instances, a conditional clause (“if...as you cannot deny”) prepares the way for something incongruous with that condition, which incongruity is expressed by an interrogative or exclamation of amazement: vii. 23 “If circumcision is received on the sabbath—[in the face of that fact] are ye angry with me (ἐμοὶ χολᾶτε) for healing on the sabbath?” x. 35—6 “If he called them gods...and the Scripture cannot be broken—[in the face of that fact] do ye (emph.) (ὕμεῖς) say (λέγετε), Thou blasphemest?” Here the emphatic “ye” means “ye the guardians and interpreters of Scripture.” Only under special circumstances could ὕμεῖς λέγετε, “ye (emph.) say,” at the beginning of a clause, be used interrogatively.

[2245] An interrogative or exclamatory tone may be suggested by initial words that imply incongruity or the need of explanation, “From Nazareth can any good thing come¹!” “Thus answerest thou the High Priest²!” “Your king am I to crucify³!” “Our fathers worshipped in this mountain, and [yet] (2136) ye say (ὕμεῖς λέγετε) that in Jerusalem is the place⁴!” Thus, an initial σὺ λέγεις, where there is no incongruity between the person and the utterance, would naturally mean “thou (emph.) sayest”; but an incongruity would make all the difference, e.g. “Dost thou [the General] say, ‘Flee’?” “Dost thou [the Priest] say, ‘Murder’?” Also such a sentence as “From thyself sayest thou this or did others say it to thee?” may be those of Jesus Christ. But as for his tried worth, I would have you recognise it, because, like child with father, he did laborious service with me for the Gospel.” It must be borne in mind that the pres. imper. γινώσκετε “be recognising,” “try to recognise,” would naturally be distinguished from γνῶτε “recognise [once for all],” by a careful writer (2437—9).

interrogative, a question being suggested by the words "from thyself" followed by the alternative "or from others¹?"

¹ [2245 a] xviii. 34 Ἀπὸ σεαυτοῦ σὺ τοῦτο λέγεις, ἢ ἄλλοι εἰπόν σοι περὶ ἐμοῦ; This is clearly interrogative. But in xviii. 37—in answer to Pilate's second question, "Well then, thou art [it seems] a king?"—when Jesus replies Σὺ λέγεις ὅτι βασιλεὺς εἰμι, there is no reason to suppose that this is interrogative (as it is punctuated in W.H. marg.). A distinction is clearly drawn between "the king of the Jews" and "a king." The former our Lord puts aside with contempt as a question dictated by "others," i.e. the chief priests. The latter was of a different kind. Everyone knew, even the boys in the streets of Rome, that the wise and virtuous philosopher claimed to be in some sense "a king," and the Book of Revelation (Rev. v. 10) claims that the followers of Christ are to be "kings and priests." To the latter, then, Christ assents in the words "thou sayest that I am a king." Comp. Lk. xxii. 70 "Ye say that I am [a king]." Mt. xxvi. 64 "Thou saidst [it]," σὺ εἶπας is parall. to Mk xiv. 62 ἐγὼ εἶμι. At the same time it must be admitted that (2234 b) the use of σὺ λέγεις, outside N.T. (so far as Wetstein's evidence goes) generally implies bad tidings. It is a phrase that might be explained (as a saying of Christ) by various contexts. In the bringing of bad news, it means (1) "Thou sayest this [not I]"; but where there is no bad news, it might mean (2) "Thou [of thyself] sayest this, unprompted by others." Jn combines (1) with (2) taken interrogatively.

[2247] In almost all the instances of affirmative, or exclamatory interrogation, it would be better for an English translator to imitate the Greek by leaving the sentence affirmative so far as concerns the words, trusting to context and punctuation to suggest the interrogative tone: “Thou (emph.) washest my feet!” If this were done, many sentences would be left less definite than in our R.V., but they would be closer to the meaning of the original.

(iii) Questions without interrogative particle¹

[2248] The list of interrogative sentences in the footnote appended to this section will be limited to those that have no interrogative particle. Some have been discussed under καί meaning “and yet” (2136—45). In iii. 10, οὐ is in such a context that it might possibly be called an interrogative particle, “Thou art the teacher of Israel; and [yet] dost thou not know this?” But on the other hand the whole of the sentence may be regarded as exclamatory, and οὐ as merely equivalent to alpha privative (“The teacher of Israel...and ignorant of this!”). Hence the instance is included below². The dozen or more of interrogatives with οὐ are excluded as they do not throw light on ambiguity³.

² [2248 b] In vii. 19, (R.V.) “Did not M. give you the law, and [yet] none of you doeth the law?” is prob. preferable to W.H.’s text, which ends the question at “give you the law,” and makes the following words a statement. In vii. 35, R.V. (“Whither will this man go that (ὅτι) we shall not find him?”) gives the impression of meaning “so that we shall not find him.” But that is not the meaning of the Greek. Jesus had previously said (vii. 34) “Ye...shall not find me.” The Jews now say in consequence “Where is he going? For [according to his account] (ὅτι) we shall not find him.” The initial ὅτι means “[We say this] because” or “for,” and introduces the reason for asking “Where is he going?” (2179).

³ [2248 c] i. 21 ἠρώτησαν αὐτὸν τί οὖν; [σὺ] ἦ. εἰ; (marg. τί οὖν σὺ; ἦ. εἰ;)... (iv) Indirect interrogative

[2249] This is rare in John. He prefers the direct interrogative even where it involves such a repetition as (xiii. 24) "Simon Peter beckoneth to him and saith to him, 'Say Who is it? about whom he saith [this],'" where many mss. have (A.V.) "beckoned to him that he should ask who it should be (πυθέσθαι τίς ἂν εἴη)," an alteration made (no doubt) for style. But he uses the indirect form in two passages as follows.

[2250] (i) vii. 16—17 "My teaching is not mine but [is the teaching] of him that sent me. If any man have a will to do his will, he shall know concerning the teaching, whether (πότερον) it is from God, or [whether] I am speaking from myself." Πότερον is not found elsewhere in N.T.¹ But it is here used deliberately to prepare the way for the weighty statement of an alternative that might at first sight seem superfluous—"speaking from oneself." Why is not John content to say "He shall know if [i.e. whether] it is from God²," and there to stop? The answer is, that John desires to emphasize "speaking from oneself," as being a crime. Some might urge that, according to the Synoptists, Christ taught "with authority," and that, in the Sermon on the Mount ("Ye have heard that it hath been said to them of old...but I say") He "spake from himself." John represents Christ as affirming, some seven or eight times¹, that He is not sent "from himself," and that He neither says nor does anything "from himself." Not even the Holy Spirit speaks "from itself²." The spontaneous or originating power of the Son, and of the Spirit, springs from the Father, or from the Son in union with the Father. To do anything "from oneself" in this Johannine sense—that is, apart from the fountain head of life, order, and harmony—is always evil³.

[2251] (2) x. 6 "This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were that he spake unto them (ἐκεῖνοι δὲ οὐκ ἔγνωσαν τίνα ἦν ἃ ἐλάλει αὐτοῖς)." The apparently superfluous words in "what things they were that" (instead of "what things" or "the things that") are intended to emphasize the absolute ignorance of the persons addressed⁴. Jesus had been "talking (λαλέω)" about a shepherd that rules the flock with his voice and not by coercion. Those whom He was addressing had no conception of ruling except by Law and punishment. The evangelist might have expressed this by the phrase used in the First Epistle to Timothy⁵, "did not understand about what things (περὶ τίνων)" Christ was teaching. But John wishes to say more, namely, that the very language was foreign to them. It might as well have been Iberian or Gallic. The thought must be compared with that in viii. 43 "Why do ye not understand my speech (λαλιάν)? Because ye are not able to hear my Word (ἀκούειν τὸν λόγον τὸν ἐμόν)," i.e. ye have not the spiritual sympathy that would give you a key to my language⁶.

■ [2250 b] It is worth noting how indignantly Pilate—a mere puppet in the hands of the chief priests, whose charge against Jesus he at first assumes to be true (xviii. 33), instead of first attempting to ascertain whether it is true—disowns the notion suggested to him by Jesus that he is not speaking "from himself" (xviii. 34 "sayest thou this from thyself?").

⁴ [2251 a] In vi. 64 ἥδει γὰρ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὁ Ἰησοῦς τίνες εἰσὶν οἱ μὴ πιστεύοντες καὶ τίς ἐστὶν ὁ παραδῶσων αὐτόν, the meaning is that Jesus could distinguish from the crowd of apparent believers the real non-believers and even the future traitor—not that He knew all about them. "From the beginning" may mean "from the time when the Gospel of the Cross began to be preached publicly in Capernaum, when schism and desertion first appeared among the disciples" (see 2254).

(i) Imperative, Indicative, Infinitive and Subjunctive, see Index, also Tense (in Contents) p. xxi.

(ii) Optative

[2252] The optative mood is practically non-existent in the Gospels except in Luke. For example, the optative of γένεσθαι occurs in Lk. (2), and that of εἶναι in Lk. (7), but neither of these occurs in Mk, Mt., Jn. In Jn xiii. 24 the v.r. πυθέσθαι τίς ἂν εἴη (not in W.H.) is a corruption. In Mark, the forms iv. 29 παραδοῖ, v. 43 and ix. 30 γνοῖ, viii. 37 δοῖ are subjunctive: but xi. 14 καρπὸν φάγοι has a true optative corresponding to Mt. xxi. 19 καρπὸς γένηται. Compare 2 S. i. 21 μὴ καταβῇ δρόσος, B καταβοῖ, A καταβήτω, and Deut. xxxiii. 24 "let him be," LXX ἔσται; also Oxyr. Pap. 742 ἵνα πάλιν φ[ι]λος ἡμῖν παραδοῖ.

NEGATIVE PARTICLES

(i) Μή

[2253] In later Greek, μή encroached on οὐ, especially in connexion with participles¹. In John, μή for οὐ is not so frequent

Gk λαλέω means "talk freely," as at table, or in one's family, or in gossip abroad. In N.T., it means "talk freely," sometimes in bad sense, 1 Tim. v. 13, Jude 15, 16 or with suggestion of bad sense; but much more often of the free and public proclaiming of the truth of the Christian Gospel, as freq. in the Acts and the Pauline Epistles, and also of spiritual song and prophecy. Hence John—who deprecates the view that Christ taught secretly or privately—uses this word more freq. than Mk and Lk. taken together, and assigns it to Christ 33 times in the first person, whereas it is never thus used by any Synoptist (exc. Lk. xxiv. 44, after the Resurrection). Comp. Jn xviii. 20 "I have spoken freely to the world and in secret spake I never (lit. nothing)." The word is used in Mk xiii. 11, Mt. x. 19, to represent the unpremeditated speech that was to flow from the disciples (when put on their defence before kings and rulers) under the influence of the Holy Spirit, when they would not speak "from themselves" but the Spirit would speak for them. That exactly represents the Johannine use of λαλέω when used by Jesus concerning His own teaching.

as in the Synoptists. But it is probable that vii. 15 "How doth this man know letters not having learned (μὴ μεμαθηκώς)?" does not imply doubt as to the negation ("if as we are given to understand he has not learned") but means "being, as he is, one that has not learned," "one of the illiterate class¹." In vii. 49 ὁ ὄχλος οὗτος ὁ μὴ γινώσκων, John could not have used οὐ without limiting the assertion to a particular crowd pointed out, whereas the meaning is "This multitude [these and their like, this rabble] that knoweth not the law are accursed." In iii. 18 "He that believeth not is already condemned because he hath not believed (ὅτι μὴ πεπίστευκεν)," the unbelief, though implied as a fact, is stated, not as a fact, but as the ground for condemnation, and the meaning "condemned for not having believed" (2187) approximates to "pronounced guilty of not believing." See 2695.

[2254] The words of Christ, vi. 64 "There are among you some that do not believe (εἰσὶν ἐξ ὑμῶν τινὲς οἱ οὐ πιστεύουσιν)" are followed by the comment "For Jesus knew from the beginning (lit.) who are those that are not believing (τίνες εἰσὶν οἱ μὴ πιστεύοντες) and who is he that shall betray him (καὶ τίς ἐστιν ὁ παραδώσων αὐτόν)." It had been previously stated, before any mention of Christ's preaching, that many in Jerusalem, being impressed by His "signs," "believed" in Christ after a fashion, in whom Christ Himself (ii. 24) did not believe—presumably knowing that they did not really believe. From the first, then, Christ had this power of distinguishing unreal from real belief, so that He could answer with an affirmative the question "Knowest thou who are they that do not really believe?" But, since that time, the Twelve had been appointed and the Gospel of the Bread of Life had been preached in Capernaum. And, from the beginning of this Gospel, Judas (it would appear) had shewn signs of his future treason. Here it is added that Jesus noted these signs and knew to what they pointed. (See 2251 a.) We are not to suppose, with some ancient Greek commentators, that "from the beginning" means "from the foundation of the world²." As to the change from οὐ πιστεύουσιν to μὴ πιστεύοντες, it is what might have been expected in consequence of the change from the indicative to the participle. On x. 12 ὁ...οὐκ ὦν ποιμὴν, see 2704.

² [2254 a] Chrys. ἄνωθεν, Cramer πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου. 'Εξ ἀρχῆς, "from the beginning," is similarly used in xvi. 4, and ἀπ' ἀρχῆς in 1 Jn ii. 7, 24 etc.

(ii) Οὐ μὴ with Future and Subjunctive

[2255] Οὐ μὴ is comparatively rarely used with the future in N.T. In John it occurs fourteen times with subjunctive¹ and thrice with future, as follows: iv. 14 οὐ μὴ διψήσῃ εἰς τ. αἰῶνα, vi. 35 ὁ ἐρχόμενος πρὸς ἐμὲ οὐ μὴ πεινάσῃ κ. ὁ πιστεύων εἰς ἐμὲ οὐ μὴ διψήσῃ πώποτε, x. 5 ἀλλοτρίῳ δὲ οὐ μὴ ἀκολουθήσουσιν ἀλλὰ φεύξονται. The second instance (vi. 35) invites inquiry, in view of the parallel πεινάσῃ and διψήσῃ. But a review of N.T. usage indicates no settled or general distinction of meaning. Compare Heb. viii. 12 οὐ μὴ μνησθῶ, quoting Jer. xxxi. 34 correctly, with Heb. x. 17 οὐ μὴ μνησθήσομαι quoting the same incorrectly: also Mt. xxiv. 35 οὐ μὴ παρέλθωσιν with parall. Mk xiii. 31 (W.H. marg.) οὐ μὴ παρελεύσονται (W.H. txt om. μὴ) and parall. Lk. xxi. 33 οὐ μὴ παρελεύσονται. In John's three instances there occur severally (1) εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, (2) πώποτε, (3) a following future (φεύξονται). These facts suggest that he had in his mind an emphasis laid rather on futurity, than on certainty (which would have been indicated by the subjunctive).

(iii) Εἰ οὐ

[2256] Εἰ οὐ never occurs in John, as an undivided phrase, except in antithesis (twice) v. 47, "If ye fail to believe (οὐ πιστεύετε) his writings how can ye [succeed in] believing my words," x. 37 "If I fail to do (οὐ ποιῶ) the works of my Father...but if I [succeed in] doing them...." In both cases οὐ has the force of alpha privative, or may be treated as part of a compound verb, the hypothesis being positive but the compound verb negative. It is not the same as a negative hypothesis ("except ye believe," "except I do"). In iii. 12 οὐ πιστεύετε is divided from εἰ, "If I have told you earthly things and ye disbelieve (οὐ πιστεύετε)."

(iv) Οὐ...οὐδέις¹

[2257] This particular phrase with the double negative, which Mark frequently uses in narrative but only once (Matthew and Luke never) in Christ's words², John uses, never in narrative, but frequently in Christ's words³. It is never ambiguous.

(v) Οὐτε...καί

[2258] This construction is of the nature of a Latinism in 3 Jn 10 "he neither himself (οὐτε αὐτός) receiveth the brethren and those that desire [to come] he hindereth," where the sentence is long and periodic. It is quite different in Jn iv. 11 "Neither (οὐτε) a bucket hast thou—and the well is deep," where it is strange that more Greek mss. have not adopted the obvious alteration introduced by D, οὐδέ, "not even a bucket" (so too SS). But οὐτε...καί is highly characteristic of the style of the woman's talk, which is somewhat flighty, passing from "neither bucket hast thou [nor rope to let down the bucket]"—which she had at first in her mind—to the thought of the "depth" of "the well." The construction is not alleged to occur in N.T. outside these two passages (Winer p. 619, Westc. on 3 Jn 10).

³ [2257 b] Jn v. 19 οὐ δύναται ὁ υἱὸς ποιεῖν ἀπ' ἑαυτοῦ οὐδέν, v. 22 οὐδὲ γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ κρίνει οὐδένα, v. 30 οὐ δύναμαι ἐγὼ ποιεῖν ἀπ' ἑμαυτοῦ οὐδέν, vi. 63 ἡ σὰρξ οὐκ ὠφελεῖ οὐδέν, viii. 15 ἐγὼ οὐ κρίνω οὐδένα etc. (about 12 times). It is also used in the words of others, iii. 27, vi. 33 etc. Jn has once οὐδέπω οὐδεὶς in xix. 41 μνημεῖον καινὸν ἐν ᾧ οὐδέπω οὐδεὶς ἦν τεθειμένος, which resembles Lk. xxiii. 53 μνήματι λαξευτῷ οὐ οὐκ ἦν οὐδεὶς οὕτω κείμενος.

(vi) Οὐ (or, μή) combined with πᾶς

[2260] A distinction must be drawn between (1) οὐ...πᾶς, (2) πᾶς...οὐ, and (3) οὐ πᾶς. The first two belong mostly to Hebraic, the third—in which πᾶς follows οὐ without any intervening word except perhaps the verb “to be”—belongs mostly to Greek idiom. In (1) and (2) the meaning of πᾶς is generally to be expressed by “any,” in (3) by “every.” But in John a literal translation is sometimes preferable as will be seen below.

[2261] In Hebrew, when “not” and “all” occur (as mentioned above) in the same sentence, the “not” goes with the verb in a manner unusual in Greek and English, (Gen. ii. 5) “all plants of the field were not as yet,” i.e. no plants yet existed; (Gen. iv. 15) “for the not-smiting him of all finding him,” i.e. that none finding him should smite him; (Ex. xii. 16) “all work shall not be done”¹ etc. The last sentence might well be understood to mean “all kinds of work must not be done, but only the following”: and, generally, the Hebrew idiom might produce ambiguity, which we escape in English and Greek by saying “not any (or, no) work”—and in Greek sometimes by repeating the negative (“no work shall not be done”). In the Synoptists, we have but few instances of either (1) οὐ...πᾶς or (2) πᾶς...οὐ².

[2262] In John's Gospel, and perhaps in the Epistle, there are no instances of οὐ...πᾶς meaning “not any,” but πᾶς followed by οὐ (or, μή) is very frequent in both. It is partly explained by the writer's love of universal propositions, especially in connexion with the Church (“all that thou hast given me,” “every branch in me,” “everyone that believeth³”). These are connected mostly with affirmatives, but (a) sometimes with negatives followed by affirmatives thus: iii. 16 “in order that everyone (πᾶς) that believeth should not (μή) perish but should have eternal life,” vi. 39 “in order that everything that he hath given to me I should not (μή) lose [aught] from it but should raise it up": (b) sometimes with negatives implying a negation of death or darkness, xi. 26 "everyone that liveth and believeth in me shall surely not (οὐ μή) die," xii. 46 "in order that everyone that believeth in me may not (μή) abide in darkness¹."

² [2261 b] See (1) οὐ...πᾶς in Mk xiii. 20, Mt. xxiv. 22 “not...any flesh,” Lk. i. 37 “not...any word,” (2) πᾶς...οὐ in Mk vii. 18 πᾶν...οὐ δύναται, Mt. xii. 25 πᾶσα...οὐκία μερισθεῖσα...οὐ σταθήσεται (parall. Mk iii. 25 ἐὰν οἰκία...μερισθῇ, οὐ δυνήσεται στήναι), Lk. iv. 33 (pec.).

[2263] On the other hand, the Greek usage of οὐ πᾶς, "not everyone," is frequent in traditions that say, in different forms, what the Lord says in the Sermon on the Mount, "Not everyone (οὐ πᾶς) that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven²." So in the Epistle to the Romans, "Not all that are from Israel" are really Israel, "nor yet (οὐδέ), because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children"; the Gospel was preached to them "but not all hearkened³"; so to the Corinthians, "Not in all [men] is knowledge," "Not with the most of them (οὐκ ἐν τοῖς πλείοσιν αὐτῶν, Clem. Alex. πᾶσιν αὐτοῖς) was God well pleased." And in the Fourth Gospel Jesus says to the disciples (xiii. 10, 11, 18) "Ye are clean but not all," "Not all of you are clean," "Not about you all do I speak." Some uses of the phrase "not all" may be derived from Attic and colloquial Greek, as in the famous saying, familiar to us through Horace, but Greek in origin, "The voyage to Corinth is *not every man's*⁴." How naturally it might occur to evangelists

¹ [2262 b] In the Epistle, the negation is sometimes a negation of truth, life, light etc., ii. 21 "every lie is not of the truth," ii. 23 "everyone that denieth the Son hath also not the Father (οὐδὲ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει)," iii. 6 "Everyone that sinneth hath not seen him" (antithetical to iii. 6 "Everyone that abideth in him sinneth not"), iii. 10 "Everyone that doeth not righteousness is not of God," iii. 15 (lit.) "Every murderer hath not eternal life" (a sentence hardly English, and certainly not Greek, in form), iv. 3 "Every spirit that confesseth not Jesus is not of God." Πᾶς is followed, as in the Gospel, by negation of death, darkness etc. in 1 Jn iii. 6, 9, v. 18. In 1 Jn ii. 16 "everything that is in the world" is separated from "is not from the Father" by an intervening appositional clause—"the desire of the flesh and the desire of the eyes and the vain glory of life." To the negations of good may be added 2 Jn 9 "Everyone that...abideth not in the teaching of Christ hath not God."

failing to make converts, or finding converts relapse into unbelief and hostility, is shewn by St Paul's prayer "that we may be delivered from unreasonable and evil men; for the faith [of Christ] is not the portion of all (οὐ γὰρ πάντων ἡ πίστις)¹."

[2263 d] Westcott paraphrases this, "that they may be made manifest that they are not, no not in any case, however fair their pretensions may be, of us." The words I have italicised indicate that he takes the negation as universal, "not any of them." He gives, as a reason, that "when the πᾶς is separated by the verb from the οὐ, the negation according to the usage of the New Testament is always universal." This is true; but does it apply when the verb is εἶναι, and in such a writer as John, who nowhere else uses the Hebraic οὐ...πᾶς? If, for example, John had written in xiii. 11 οὐκ ἐστὲ πάντες καθαροί (instead of οὐχὶ π. κ. ἐστε) should we have translated this, "Ye are not any of you clean"? I am disposed to think that 1 Jn ii. 19 does not afford a unique instance of the Hebraic οὐ...πᾶς, and that the words refer to the departure of "Israel after the flesh," and of other temporary converts, very much as the Epistle to the Romans mentions it. If so, there is a confusion between (1) φανερωθῶσιν ὅτι οὐκ εἰσὶν ἐξ ἡμῶν, and (2) φανερωθῇ ὅτι οὐ πάντες [οἱ δοκοῦντες] εἰσὶν ἐξ ἡμῶν. One thought is "they were not really ours"; another, "not all that seem to be ours are really ours." Origen illustrates the "going out" of Judas by the "going out" in the Epistle. Now concerning Judas it is said in the Gospel "not all of you are clean," and "not all" is repeated in this connexion. This seems to confirm the view that "not all" in the Epistle is similarly used as meaning that "many are called but not all chosen."

[2263 e] In viii. 35 "the slave doth not abide in the house for ever (ὁ δὲ δοῦλος οὐ μένει ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα)," if we are to adopt here the meaning of οὐ (or μή, μηκέτι etc.)...εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα everywhere else in N.T. (Mk iii. 29, xi. 14, Mt. xxi. 19, Jn iv. 14, viii. 51, 52, x. 28, xi. 26, xiii. 8, 1 Cor. viii. 13) it should mean "never." Then the sentence would mean "The slave, e.g. Ishmael, shall never [be allowed to] abide permanently in the house," with allusion to the tradition quoted by St Paul (Gal. iv. 30, "cast out the handmaiden and her son"). The preceding words are "everyone that doeth sin is a slave [of sin]," but SS, D, b, and Clem. Alex. omit "of sin," which may be a gloss added to explain "slave." With this omission, the whole may be paraphrased, "Whosoever doeth sin is not a son but a slave. Now the slave, who is not under grace but under law and constraint, has no abiding-place, and never shall have, in the family of the Father."

[2263 f] The following words, "But the Son abideth for ever [in the house of the Father], if therefore the Son shall free you, ye shall be really free," may

(vii) Οὐ, v. r. οὐπω

[2264] In vii. 8 (R.V. txt and W.H. txt) "I go not up yet to this feast," the reading, "I go not up to this feast" is very strongly supported. W.H. and R.V. place it in their margin, and it is now confirmed by SS. Porphyry¹ attacked Christ for the change of purpose implied (by "go not up") in this passage, when contrasted with vii. 10—14 "then he also himself went up...now about the middle of the feast Jesus went up to the temple and began to teach." Chrysostom and Ammonius the Elder (Cramer) write apologetically on it without any apparent knowledge of such a reading as οὐπω². It is almost incredible that οὐπω, if genuine—a reading that supplied so obvious an answer to all objections—should have been unknown to these commentators, and should have been supplanted in so many versions and mss. by the difficult reading οὐ.

[2265] The explanation of "I go not up to this feast," and its reconciliation with what follows, must be sought perhaps in the

be paraphrased, "But the son and heir, like Isaac the child of promise and grace, abides for ever in the house: if therefore ye shall receive into your hearts the Son of God and the Spirit of Sonship, then shall ye be really free, being freed from all fear of being 'cast out,' and knowing that ye are the heirs and inheritors of the House." If the positive "abideth for ever" had preceded the negative "abideth not for ever," it might have been argued (though not cogently) that in this particular place "not...for ever" must be taken in an unusual sense because of antithesis. As it is, there is no basis for any rendering except "never" for οὐ...eis τὸν αἰῶνα.

[2263 g] Cyril (Cramer ad loc.) explains οὐ μένει eis τ. αἰῶνα by adding "for he will hurry into the outer darkness (δραμεῖται γὰρ eis τὸ ἐξώτερον σκότος)."
Ammonius says, ὁ μὴ μένων eis τὸν αἰῶνα καὶ ὡσαύτως ἔχων αἰὲ δουλὸς ἐστί τῇ φύσει...πάντα γὰρ δούλα τοῦ κτίσαντος, μένει δὲ eis τὸν αἰῶνα ὡσαύτως ἔχων ὁ Υἱὸς ὡς φύσει θεός, where the punctuation is doubtful but the phrase "all things are slaves of the Creator" suggests that he did not read "slave of sin." Chrysostom (Migne) thrice drops eis τὸν αἰῶνα after οὐ μένει and interprets the words "the slave doth not abide for ever," as implying a "gentle casting down (ἡρέμα καταβάλλει)" of the things of the Law and the sacrifices prescribed by Moses (comp. Heb. iii. 5—6). Perhaps he took the words to mean, "The slave [even though he be faithful, as one of the prophets, or as Moses himself, is still below the son and heir, and] does not abide [as the son abides] in the house."

² [2264 a] Migne prints a quotation from Chrys. οὐκ ἀναβαίλω ἄρτι, and then (punctuating thus) Πῶς οὖν, φησὶν, ἀνέβη, εἰπὼν, Οὐκ ἀναβαίλω; Οὐκ εἶπεν καθάπαξ, Οὐκ ἀναβαίλω· ἀλλὰ, Νῦν, εἶπεν, τουτέστι, μεθ' ὑμῶν, where apparently the writer does not mean that Jesus said νῦν, but that He meant νῦν. In Cramer, this appears, with οὐπω, thus, Αὐτὸς δὲ πῶς ἀνέβη, φησὶν, εἰπὼν, "ἐγὼ οὐπω ἀναβαίλω..." It is clear that neither οὐπω nor νῦν nor ἄρτι was a part of the text thus commented on.

Johannine view of Christ's "going up" to Jerusalem as a whole. Two acts of this kind have been mentioned (ii. 13, v. 1), the first of which excites jealousy, the second hostility, and (v. 18) a desire to kill Him, in "the Jews." In view of this hostility, Jesus is regarded as now contemplating a time when He will "go up" to a feast and die, but this has not yet come: "I go not up to this feast, because my time is not yet fulfilled." Accordingly, though He goes up later, He does not "go up" to keep the feast as a whole, and does not enter the temple till the middle of the week. Ammonius the Elder says, fairly enough, "He has not contradicted His words by His actions, for *He did not go up to keep the feast*¹..." But something more is probably intended to be implied: "When my hour has arrived, then and not till then shall I really go up to the feast": and we are also probably intended to think of Christ's habitual language about "going up," meaning, to heaven, or to the Father.

[2265 (i)] Οὐχί presents nothing remarkable in ix. 9 ἄλλοι ἔλεγον Οὐχί, ἀλλὰ ὁμοίως αὐτῷ ἐστίν: for its use before a pause, and especially

[2265 δ] The remaining instance of ἀναβαίνω in Christ's words is x. 1 "He that entereth not through the door into the fold of the sheep but goeth up from some other quarter (ἀναβαίνων ἀλλαχόθεν)—that [man] is a thief and a robber." Beside the literal meaning we are intended to think of the two kinds of "going up" mentioned in the Bible. Rezin and Pekah (Is. vii. 1) "go up to Jerusalem" as enemies. When our Lord said (Mk x. 33, Mt. xx. 18, Lk. xviii. 31) "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem," He added, in effect, that He was to "go up" as a sacrifice. John is probably alluding to these two kinds of "going up." Jews would contrast Hezekiah, who (Is. xxxvii. 14) "went up unto the house of the Lord" to supplicate as a mediator, with the Roman Emperors, who exalted themselves and sat in the temple of God, setting themselves forth as God (comp. 2 Thess. ii. 4) and who said (Is. xiv. 13) "I will go up into heaven."

before a pause followed by ἀλλά, is frequent in Greek and in N.T. But neither N.T. nor the Thesaurus affords a parallel to the following, xiii. 10—11, “ye (emph.) are clean but not all (ἀλλ’ οὐχὶ πάντες)... for this cause said he (lit.) that ‘Ye are not all clean,’ ὅτι, Οὐχὶ πάντες καθαροί ἐστε¹.” Οὐχὶ is so frequently interrogative that, if the last tradition were found as a detached Logion of the Lord, we should certainly render it (as in Heb. i. 14 οὐχὶ πάντες εἰσὶν λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα) “Are ye not all clean?” But in Numbers (“I shall see him but not now”) LXX has καὶ οὐχί², as John has in xiv. 22 ἡμῖν... καὶ οὐχὶ τῷ κόσμῳ. Greek writers seem to have differed among themselves—and John seems to have differed from most—in the use of οὐχί and its equivalents³.

(i) Plural referring to preceding Singular

[2266] This occurs when the speaker passes from considering a multitude as a whole to considering them as units, vii. 49 “This multitude that knoweth not the Law—[they] are accursed,” xv. 6 “If anyone abide not in me he is at once cast out as the branch [from the vine] (τὸ κλῆμα)...and they gather them (i.e. such branches, αὐτά),” xvii. 2 “In order that all (sing.) that thou hast given to him—to [all of] them (αὐτοῖς) he may give eternal life” (see 1919 foll. and 2417—20).

(ii) Plural Neuter with Plural Verb

² [2265 (i) δ] Numb. xxiv. 17, LXX δέξω αὐτῷ καὶ οὐχὶ νῦν, representing the Heb. vav by καί. I have not found οὐχί in the Egypt. Pap. Indices.

³ [2265 (i) c] Steph. (v. 2351) shews that Xenophon regularly says Οὐκ, ἀλλὰ whereas Epictetus says Οὐ, ἀλλὰ. It has been shewn above (2231 a) that where Mt. has οὐχί interrog. the parall. Lk. sometimes differs. On the other hand where Lk. xii. 51 has the negative οὐχί, λέγω ὑμῖν, ἀλλ’ ἡ διαμερισμὸν, the parall. Mt. x. 34 has οὐκ...ἀλλὰ. Mt. never uses οὐχί otherwise than interrogatively. Mk does not use it at all. Steph. quotes Porphy. for a freq. and peculiar use of οὐχί δέ.

plurality may explain the plural (if genuine). In xix. 31, ἵνα μὴ μείνῃ ἐπὶ τοῦ σταυροῦ τὰ σώματα... ἵνα κατεαγῶσιν αὐτῶν τὰ σκέλη καὶ ἄρθῶσιν, is, if genuine, an extremely remarkable variation of singular and plural verbs with neuter plural subjects—and that too in similar construction and order (ἵνα μὴ μείνῃ... ἵνα κατεαγῶσιν). But (in spite of the genitive αὐτῶν, 2419 b) σκέλη may be accusative: “that they might have their legs broken and be taken away.” In the parable of the Good Shepherd, πρόβατα is at first regarded as the flock that (x. 3—4) “hears” and “follows” the shepherd. Then the reason is given (x. 4) “they know (οἶδασιν) his voice,” and, having thus dropped into the plural, the writer continues to describe them individually: x. 5—8, “they will not follow,” “they will flee,” “they know not,” “the sheep heard (pl.) them not (οὐκ ἤκουσαν αὐτῶν τὰ πρόβατα).” Finally the writer returns to the singular with οὐκ ἔστιν—an emphatic phrase frequent in classical Greek—describing the “hireling” as one (x. 12) “whose own the flock is not (οὐδ’ οὐκ ἔστιν τὰ πρόβατα ἴδια).”

(iii) Special words

(a) Αἵματα (i. 13)

[2268] Concerning those who (i. 12) “received” the Logos it is said that “he gave them authority to become children of God,” and that these (lit.) “not from bloods (αἱμάτων), nor yet from will of flesh, nor yet from will of man (ἄνδρός), but from God were begotten.” The plural of “blood,” both in classical Greek and in Hebrew, almost always means “bloodshed¹.” But Horæ Hebraicæ (ad loc.) calls attention to a passage of Shemoth Rabba (referring to Ezekiel), where Jerusalem is described as a babe born in uncleanness, but purified by Jehovah; and in Ezekiel the Hebrew four times uses the plural “*bloods*²” in such a way as to indicate that it might mean there, as Chrysostom says it means here, "the fleshly pangs of childbirth¹."

[2269] An objection that may be raised against this view is that it represents the evangelist as describing at great length (saying in effect "begotten of no mortal mother, nor of any fleshly union, nor of any mortal begetter," ἀνδρός as distinct from γυνή) what might have been expressed more briefly in one or other of the shapes in which the best Greek ms. and the earliest Fathers quote it². Possibly one

[2269 b] Justin Martyr has several passages that indicate an ancient tradition, "Not of man's seed but of God," referring to Christ, and some of these mention "blood." In the following extracts, γεννηθῆναι is rendered "generated," to distinguish it from γεννηθῆναι, "begotten": Apol. 21 "That the Logos, which is the first begotten offspring (γέννημα) of God, has been generated (γεγενῆσθαι) without sexual union (ἐπιμιξίας), Jesus Christ our teacher..."; Apol. 22 "But even if [or But if also, referring to previous ἐὶ καὶ κοινῶς] we say that uniquely, contrary to common birth (γένεσιν), He has been generated (γεγενῆσθαι) from God [as] God's Logos, as we said above, let this be in common with you (κοινὸν τοῦτο ἔστω ὑμῖν) who say that Hermes is the Logos that brings messages from God"; Apol. 32 "For the phrase (Gen. xlix. 11) 'blood of the grape' was significant of the fact that He that was to appear would indeed have blood, but not from human seed but from divine power...: for as not man, but God, hath made (πεποίηκεν) the of the two clauses θελήματος σαρκός and θελήματος ἀνδρός may be an interpolation; but ἐξ αἱμάτων is too original a phrase to be thus explained. It points to some allusive meaning such as that in Ezekiel above mentioned, which was interpreted Rabbinically as referring not only to the blood attendant on childbirth, but also to what may be called the Jewish sacraments of Circumcision and Passover, by which the Israelites were "brought into covenant¹." If that allusion is included here, the meaning of "not from bloods" is twofold, 1st, "not from mortal generation," 2nd, "not from such sacramental regeneration as Jews could offer to Gentiles through the Law."

blood of the vine, so this blood also was hereby indicated as to be generated (ἐμηνύετο...γενήσεσθαι) not from human seed but from [the] power of God."

[2269 c] Justin's Dialogue has similar passages: Τρυφή. 54 "Christ hath indeed blood, but not from seed of man (ἀνθρώπου) but from the power of God (τοῦ θεοῦ). For as not man, but God (lit.) begot (ἐγέννησεν) the blood of the vine, so [the prophet] indicated beforehand that the blood of Christ also would be not from human birth (γένους) but from [the] power of God. Now this prophecy... demonstrates that Christ is not man from men begotten (γεννηθεῖς) in the common way of men (κατὰ τὸ κοινὸν τῶν ἀνθρώπων);" Τρυφή. 61 "[The Logos] may be called by all [these] names from the fact that He ministers to the Father's desire and purpose and from the fact that He has been generated by the Father by will (καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς θελήσει γεγενῆσθαι);" Τρυφή. 63 "since His blood (lit.) has not been begotten from human seed (ὡς τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἐξ ἀνθρωπείου σπέρματος γεγεννημένου) but from [the] will of God (ἀλλ' ἐκ θελήματος θεοῦ);" Τρυφή. 76 "For the phrase (Dan. vii. 13) 'like a son of man' makes it clear that He was to appear and to have been brought into being (φαινόμενον καὶ γενόμενον) a man, but not from human seed...He was indeed to have blood, but not from men; even as not man, but God, begot the blood of the vine."

[2269 d] These passages indicate the existence of early discussions about "blood," in connexion with the birth and nature of Christ. [The mention of (Lk. xxiv. 39) "flesh and bones" (without "blood") suggests that there were other discussions about the nature of His body after the Resurrection.] Justin appears to have laid great stress on these; and they seem to have influenced Irenaeus, Tertullian, and others, to such an extent that they have modified John's text, perhaps taking αἱμάτων to mean, "not from ordinary blood," or "not from mortal blood." But, in fact, the Johannine tradition teaches that the truth applies to all the children of God, so that "blood," in any sense, may be excluded from a consideration of the nature of the birth.

¹ [2269 e] Hor. Heb. on Jn i. 13 says, "The Israelites were brought into covenant by three things; by circumcision, by washing, and by offering of sacrifices," and quotes Shemoth Rab., sect. 19, and Gloss. in Vajikra Rab. fol. 191 as to "the blood of the passover mingled with the blood of the circumcised."

[2270] ἱμάτια (pl.) occurs in John as follows, xiii. 4 "he layeth aside his garments," xiii. 12 "he took his garments," xix. 23 "the soldiers therefore...took his garments," xix. 24 (quoting Ps. xxii. 19) "they parted my garments among them." In the last passage, the writer distinguishes ἱμάτια from the χιτῶν (i.e. undergarment), and describes the former as being divided into four pieces. Although the word is in the plural—meaning "the upper clothes," all except the tunic—yet the plural might apparently denote "cloak" when, as would be the case with the poor, the "upper clothes" consisted of a cloak alone, and not of a cloak and doublet. Hence "garment" is parallel to "garments" in the Synoptists, and Matthew in one passage interchanges singular and plural¹. All the Synoptists use the plural to describe the parting of Christ's "garments" among the soldiers. John does the same, but he indicates that the plural means a single cloak in seams capable of being divided equally among four soldiers. John adds a negative detail about "not rending the tunic²," but casting lots for it; and he quotes the Psalmist's prophecy "They parted my clothes (ἱμάτια) among them, and on my clothing (ἱματισμόν) they cast [the] lot." This prophecy may have afforded John an additional reason for preferring the plural ἱμάτια, even though our Lord wore nothing but the cloak over the tunic³.

¹ [2270 a] Mk v. 28 ἱματίων=Mt. ix. 21 ἱματίου: Mk v. 27 has ἱματίου (but ib. 30 ἱματίων). Mk v. 27—30 has pl. in speech, sing. in narrative.

³ [2270 c] In iii. 33 ὕδατα πολλά, the pl. of ὕδωρ, being freq. (Steph.) in non-hebraic Greek as well as in LXX, calls for little comment except as to the combination "many waters," which occurs in N.T. only here and Rev. i. 15, xiv. 2, xvii. 1, xix. 6. In Rev. xvii. 1 (Jer. li. 13, LXX pl.), it is used of turbulent forces (as in Is. viii. 7, LXX sing.). The first use of Heb. "many waters" (Gesen. 913 a) refers to the waters of Meribah (Numb. xx. 11, LXX sing.). In the Psalms xxix. 3, xxxii. 6, lxxvii. 19, xciii. 4, cvii. 23, cxlv. 7, ὕδατα πολλά denotes stormy violence, over which Jehovah rules, or from which He delivers the Psalmist. In Ezek. xvii. 5, 8, xxxi. 5, "many waters" (LXX ὕδωρ πολύ sing.) denotes fertilising streams, but in Ezek. xxvi. 19 (LXX sing.) it denotes destroying inundation.

(i) Causal

[2271] This is more frequent in John than in the Synoptists. The Johannine phrase "answered and said," as distinct from the Synoptic "answering (ἀποκριθείς) said," shews that John avoids the participle as a substitute for "and." But he frequently—or at all events more frequently than the Synoptists—uses it for "because."

[2272] In iv. 6 "Jesus, therefore, because he was wearied (κεκοπι-ιακώς) by the journey, was sitting, just as he was (οὕτως) by the well," κεκοπιακώς must be interpreted in the light of the fact that the word occurs in John only here and in the context (iv. 38) "I have sent you to reap that over which ye have not wearied yourselves; others have been weary." The "weariness" is that of the labourers in the harvest of God. And the "weariness" of the Messiah, thirsting, and preaching the Gospel in "the heat of the day¹," prepared the way for the work of the Apostles in later times, as described in the Acts (viii. 25). The phrase "just as he was" indicates (from the human point of view) fortuitousness, or at all events (1916—7) absence of premeditation. But the narrative suggests that what might be called "casual" in all these details was really foreordained. On another occasion, when our Lord was apparently even more exhausted so that He fell asleep, Mark—and Mark alone²—says that the disciples conveyed Him "as he was (ὡς ἦν)" in the boat; and then He arises out of sleep to manifest Himself as Lord of the winds and waves. So here, the weariness is represented as the instrumental cause of an apparently casual consequence. It would have been somewhat too logical, and perhaps almost stilted, to say "because (ὅτι) he was wearied"; but the participle suffices to suggest it. And the story as a whole makes us feel that the journey itself, the intense weariness, and the sudden sitting down to rest just before the coming of the Samaritan woman, were all foreordained to divine ends.

¹ [2272 a] Mt. xx. 12, comp. Jn iv. 6 "it was about the sixth hour," i.e. noon. The "weariness" was not accidental but providential, like the journey itself (iv. 4 "there was need (ἔδει) that he should go through Samaria"). In Jn (as in Rev.) δεῖ always refers to spiritual decree or spiritual necessity, iii. 7, 14, 30, iv. 20, 24, ix. 4, x. 16, xii. 34, xx. 9.

[2273] In the same narrative (iv. 9) "How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink from me, being a Samaritan?" the participles might be most obviously explained as "though thou art," and "though I am." But an explanation more in accordance with Johannine usage would be to render the participles by "since," having regard to the negative implied in the question: "Thou hast no right, since thou art a Jew, to ask drink from me, since I am a Samaritan." So, in English, we should say, "You, being under age—what right have you to vote?" or "how is it that you vote?" In iv. 39, "because of the word of the woman testifying (τῆς γ. μαρτυρούσης...)" means "testifying as she did," suggesting "because she repeatedly testified¹"; and in iv. 45, "having seen" means "because they had seen." It would be impossible to find such a group of causal participles in the Synoptists. In xxi. 12 εἰδότες probably means "because they knew," not "though they knew" (1924 a).

(ii) Tenses of (see also Tense, 2499—510)

(a) ΤΥΦΛὸς ὢν (ix. 25)

[2274] In ix. 25 "One thing I know, that [though] being [once] blind, now I see (τυφλὸς ὢν ἄρτι βλέπω)," the present participle is perhaps used for brevity and ποτέ is omitted because it has already been used (ix. 13 τὸν ποτε τυφλόν). Compare ix. 17 "they say to the blind man" for "to the once blind man." But the writer may possibly intend to suggest that the blindness had been so recently cured that it was almost present, "being [up to this moment] blind."

¹ [2273 a] iv. 39 (A.V.) "the woman, which," (R.V.) "the woman, who." Possibly R.V. took it as τῆς γ. τῆς μαρτ., which Shakespeare would have rendered "the woman that," but which A.V. (according to its custom) renders "the woman which." R.V., which generally follows A.V. in this use of "which," deviates here, and adopts "who," presumably meaning "and she" or "for she." According to a convenient usage generally adopted in the English of Shakespeare and Addison, and one that would conduce to clearness in modern English, "who" should introduce a non-essential statement about the antecedent ("I heard it from the policeman, who heard it from the postman"). "That" should introduce a statement that is essential to the complete meaning of the antecedent ("I heard it from the boy that cleans the boots"). See the author's How to Write Clearly, Seeley and Co., and comp. 1493 a, 1564 b.

(β) Ὁ ὢΝ ἘΝ Τῷ Οὐρανῷ (iii. 13, R.V.)

[2275] In iii. 13 "No man hath ascended to heaven save he that descended from heaven, [even] the Son of man," R.V. text adds "who is in heaven," ὁ ὢν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ. W.H. reject the addition (without marginal alternative), pointing out that it is omitted in many early quotations in which the insertion of the words—had they been recognised by the quoters as genuine—might be described as "morally certain¹." Without this addition the words appear to mean that the real and spiritual ascension to heaven has always been the result of a descent from heaven. The descending influence was referred to earlier in reverse order, (i. 51) "the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of man," where it seems to mean the prayers of the Logos going up to heaven and returning to earth. Here the meaning seems to be that the Logos has always been descending on man to lift man up to God. This Logos, the express Image of God, is here identified with the incarnate Image of God, the "Son of man."

¹ [2275 α] W.H. point out that Origen's alleged quotations of the clause are only from the Latin of Rufinus, and elsewhere Origen omits it. They think the interpolation "perhaps suggested" by i. 18 ὁ ὢν εἰς τὸν κόλπον τ. πατρός. Possibly "the Son of man" seemed a weak ending, unless it was defined in some way as meaning the Divine Ideal of Man, the Man in Heaven. Some Greek conflation of ΟΥC ΤΟΥ ΔΝΟΥ (i.e. "the Son of man") and ΟΩΝΕΝΟΥΝΩ (i.e. "who is in heaven") may have favoured the interpolation. A* omits ΩΝ.

[2275 β] In v. 35 ἐκεῖνος ἦν ὁ λύχνος ὁ καίμενος καὶ φαίνων there are perhaps two allusions. The first is to Christ's doctrine about lighting the candle (λύχνος) and putting it where all may see (Mk iv. 21, ἐρχεται, but Mt. v. 15 has καίουσιν and Lk. viii. 16 ἄψας), and prob. to a proverbial distinction between the candle that has to be thus daily "lighted" (ὁ καίμενος) or "continually burns," and the sun, which needs no such lighting (comp. Philo i. 485 "for the one [the eye of the soul] is like the sun but these [the bodily eyes] are like candlebearers (λυχνούχους))." The second may be to Sir. xlviii. 1 "his word [i.e. the word of Elijah] burned continually like a torch (ὡς λαμπὰς ἐκαίετο)"; but there the Hebrew ("His words were like a burning furnace"), and the Greek context, indicate that καίω has a different meaning from that in Mt. Does καίμενος here mean "continually burning" or "lighted day by day"? In view of καίμενος "steadily burning" in Lk. xii. 35 λύχνοι καίμενοι, Rev. iv. 5 λαμπάδες πυρὸς καίμεναι ἐνώπιον τ. θρόνου, xxi. 8 τῇ λῆμνι τῇ καιομένῃ (comp. Rev. viii. 8, xix. 20) and ἐκαίετο in Sir. xlviii. 1, we are justified in concluding that the present participle means continuousness ("steadily burning"): but the verb itself ("burn") and the context, suggest that the continuousness is only for its appointed hour, and that the "candle" not only "burns" but also "burns away."

(γ) Ἡ ἐκμάζαα (xi. 2)

[2276] In xi. 2 "Now Mary was the [Mary, or, woman] that anointed...," it is correct, but not enlightening, to say that the Anointing "presented itself to the writer as a past event¹," and thus to explain the aorist participle used concerning an act that the evangelist records later on. Every event in the Fourth Gospel "presented itself to the writer as a past event." But, as to this particular event, the Anointing of Christ by a Woman—probably well-known, in some form, to all Christians at the end of the first century, but connected by Luke alone with a "sinner"—the Fourth Evangelist takes this opportunity (afforded by the necessity of mentioning Mary in connexion with Lazarus) to say, before he comes to the Anointing, that this same Mary was the Mary (or, woman) whose story was in everyone's mouth. It would have been tedious to say "the woman that will presently be described by me as anointing...."

(iii) Present with ἦν

[2277] The Hebraic use of ἦν διδάσκων, κηρύσσων etc. for the imperfect, "he was teaching, preaching etc." is quite distinct from such phrases as ἦν ἐκεῖ καθήμενος "there happened to be on the spot sitting" (where ἦν is separated from the participle) and also from ἦν with the perfect passive participle. In N.T., when ἦν is separated from the present participle, it is often better to supply some predicate from the context and to take the participle as in classical Greek, especially in those Gospels where the Hebraic participle is rare. In John, it is very rare. But there are approximations to the Hebraic participle in xiii. 23 ἦν ἀνακείμενος (which however resembles both in meaning and in sound the passive pluperfect) and in xviii. 30 εἰ μὴ ἦν οὗτος κακὸν ποιῶν, where perhaps the intention is, not to represent Hebraically the imperfect ἐκακοποίηι ("if he had not been doing mischief") but to suggest "if he had not been a man continually doing mischief," i.e. an habitual mischief-worker (SS, b, and f, "if he had not been an *evildoer*²"). John's general separation of participles from ἐγένετο and ἦν favours their separation in i. 6 "There came [into being] (ἐγένετο) a man (ἄνθρωπος), sent from God (ἀπεσταλμένος παρὰ θεοῦ)," where (1937) ἐγένετο is contrasted with ἦν above, ἄνθρωπος with Λόγος above, and ἀπ. π. θεοῦ with ἦν πρὸς τὸν θεόν above. The same applies to i. 9 "There was [from the beginning] the light, the true [light], which lighteneth every man, coming as it does (ἐρχόμενον) [continually] into the world." On this, see 2508.

² [2277 a] In Jn iii. 22—3 "Jesus and his disciples came into the land of Judaea and there (ἐκεῖ) he tarried with them and was baptizing (ἐβάπτισεν). Now there was also John (ἦν δὲ καὶ [ὁ] 'I.) baptizing (βαπτίζων) in Aenon," the context suggests the meaning "John, also, was in that neighbourhood, namely, in Aenon," so that it is not quite like the ἦν κηρύσσων or διδάσκων of Mark and Luke.

(iv) Agreement of [2278] A singular noun, when plural in meaning, is often the subject of a plural verb, but is not so often followed by a plural participle, as in xii. 12 ὁ ὄχλος πολὺς ὁ ἐλθὼν...ἀκούσαντες...ἔλαβον. In ἔλαβον alone there would have been nothing remarkable, nor in ἀκούσαντες if it had followed ἔλαβον: but, coming before the plural verb, the unusual plural participle suggests a desire to emphasize the plurality of the crowd,—a desire also apparent in the extraordinary phrase ὁ ὄχλος πολὺς (1739—40). In i. 48 πρὸ τοῦ σε Φίλιππον φωνῆσαι ὄντα ὑπὸ τὴν συκὴν εἰδὼν σε the participle may agree with the first or second σε, see 2372 b.

(v) Prefatory use of [2279] John uses prefatory participial clauses, to an extent unequalled in the Synoptists, to prepare the reader for some especially solemn utterance or act of Christ's. A combination of this use with the genitive absolute is particularly noticeable in the preface to the Washing of Feet: xiii. 1—4 "Now before the feast... Jesus knowing that his hour had come...having loved his own...he loved them to the end. And, while supper was going on (δείπνον γινομένου), the devil having now put it into the heart...knowing that the Father had given him all things into his hands, and that..., he riseth from supper." Similar phrases introduce some of the most important events in Christ's life¹.

PREPOSITIONS

[2280] For a brief comparison of the Johannine with the Synoptic use of prepositions in general and statistics bearing on the comparison, see 1881—5. The following remarks will deal with particular prepositions in alphabetical order, including some passages that may be of interest (apart from grammatical usage) because of their bearing on Johannine thought and purpose as distinct from mere style.

(i) 'Ανά

[2281] 'Ανά occurs only once in John, as follows: ii. 6 "Now there were six waterpots of stone set there after the Jews' manner of purifying, containing two or three firkins apiece (χωροῦσαι ἀνὰ μετρητὰς δύο ἢ τρεῖς)." 'Ανά, with numbers, occurs elsewhere in N.T., though very rarely¹. In the Apocalypse, it occurs in connexion with the "six" wings of the seraphs, whom Isaiah describes as with two covering the face, with two the feet, and with two flying². Philo (2283 b) speaks mystically of the number "six" as "composed of twice three, having the odd as the male and the even as the female" and as generating the things that are "perfected by the seven." No one disputes that purifying vessels of the Jews may have held "two or three firkins apiece" and that ἀνὰ μετρητὰς δύο ἢ τρεῖς means this: but if the phrase is also symbolically intended³, the symbolism may affect the grammatical interpretation of other parts of the narrative. According to a literal interpretation—which must be presumed to be part of the meaning even though the spiritual interpretation may be the chief part—the stone vessels were first filled to the brim by the attendants, and then they "drew" either (1) from them or (2) from the well⁴, and "carried" to the Ruler of the Feast, who said that "the

² Rev. iv. 8, alluding to Is. vi. 2 (where ἀνά is not used).

good wine" had been "kept to the last." (1) If the "drawing" was from the vessels, of which the contents were all changed into wine, then we have to suppose that 130 gallons of water were thus converted¹. (2) If, as Westcott explains it, the "drawing" was from the well—which would be the usual sense of ἀντλέω—then we have to suppose the filling of the vessels to be a preliminary and independent act, as though Jesus had said, "Before the water from the well can be turned into the wine of the Gospel, it must first be used to fill the vessels of purification of the Law."

[2282] The former interpretation ("drawing from the vessels")—besides the difficulty of the supply of wine being very far in excess of the need—describes the wine as being in the "stone vessels" of which the interpreters of the Talmud said, "If anyone have water fit to drink, and *that water by chance contract any uncleanness, let him fill the stone vessel with it*²." Westcott's interpretation avoids these ἡμεῖς τὸ ὕδωρ ἡντλήσαμεν· ἡμεῖς τὰς ὑδρίας ἐνεπλήσαμεν...." But Migne omits ἡμεῖς τ. ὕ. ἐνεπλήσαμεν and gives no v. r. The omission would leave the reader free to suppose that the attendants, according to Chrysostom, could say "We drew the water [out of the vessels]"—which accords with the view taken by Field. He apparently thinks that other attendants (or perhaps women) would have previously drawn water from the well for all the needs of the household, and that "the attendants" merely filled the vessels to the brim with this water and then "drew out" the water from the vessels. This is certainly more probable than that the attendants were sent away from the house to draw water from the well. Chrysostom clearly believes that the wine came out of the vessels—and not direct from the well (as Westcott suggests)—for he meets the objection of sceptics that perhaps these vessels had been used for vintage purposes and retained a savour of wine.

² [2282 a] Hor. Heb. ad loc. quoting Gloss. (apparently) on Kelim cap. 1, hal. 1. The phrase "the stone vessel" suggests that one vessel sufficed most households. And it seems reasonable to believe that this would often be the case if the vessel held 22 gallons. As for the μετρητής, Steph. says that the Attic measure differed from the Roman or Italian, and also quotes Aristotle as mentioning a μετρητής Μακεδονικός. The grammarian Thomas said, ἀμφορεύς λέγε, μὴ στάμνος μὴδὲ μετρητής, εἰ καὶ τινες. It is applied, however, by Polybius ii. 15. 1 to wine in Gaul (τοῦ δ' οἴνου τὸν μετρητήν) as though it needed no explanation. In the Indices to Egypt. Pap. it does not appear except in the Fayum vol., where it is used as a measure for oil, 95, 96 etc. Steph. describes it as "vas magnae cujusdam capacitatis nulla certa definitum mensura." It is made the subject of witticism when a man gives another a μετρητής of wine on condition that it shall keep its name because of μετριότης, i.e. he is to drink moderately. On the other hand, Xenarchus the Rhodian was called μετρητής because of his vast drinking.

two difficulties—but at the cost of converting the “filling of the vessels” into a mere symbol, while still taking the rest of the story literally. Nor is the symbol quite clear. The water of the Gospel, the water that becomes wine, comes independently from the well or spring. The preliminary water goes into the vessels of the Law and stays there. It does nothing.

[2283] On the whole it seems more in accordance both with the literal and with the spiritual interpretation that the water of the Word should be supposed to be placed first in the vessels of the Law. Thence, having been transmuted, it is “drawn forth now (emph., νῦν),” at Christ’s command, as the wine of the Gospel. To the objection that such water was “unclean” for purposes of drinking, might not the evangelist reply (like the voice that replies to Peter’s objection in the Acts¹) that what God hath “cleansed” is not to be called “common or unclean”? According to this view, Christ, in this symbolic story, transmutes the outwardly purifying element of the Law into the inwardly purifying element of the Spirit. If some such symbolism is really latent here, we should expect (according to the principle of Philonian interpretation) to find traces of it in the mention of the numbers “two,” “three,” and “six,” here mentioned by John. In a history, describing the sinking of so many triremes or the destruction of so many soldiers, numbers would be simply numbers. But in a symbolic story unfolding the future transmutation of Law into Gospel, numbers (not necessary for the narrative) would rarely be inserted unless they lent themselves to symbolism. From the allegorizing point of view, the numbers “two,” “three,” and “six” are easily capable of an appropriate meaning².

² [2283 b] Philo says (ii. 281) “The number Six is even and odd, composed of twice three, having the odd as the male and the even as the female, from which [numbers] are the origins [of things] according to the unalterable laws of nature,” and “What things the Six generates these things the Seven exhibits when perfected.” In Isaiah’s above quoted description of the seraphim (each of which had “six” wings) giving glory to the Lord in the Temple, “six” might be taken as symbolizing the created world giving glory to the Creator, and Isaiah’s mention of the uses of each of the three pairs of wings would favour Philo’s allegorizing interpretation of the “two” and the “three” as making up the “six.” A work like the Fourth Gospel, which appears, even when narrating facts, to set them forth with symbolism and allusion, might naturally illustrate this sign, apparently

(ii) Ἀντί

[2284] Ἀντί occurs only once in John as follows: i. 14—17 “And the Word became flesh and tabernacled in [the midst of] us...full of grace and truth...because from his fulness we all received and grace in the place of (ἀντί) grace: because [whereas] the Law through Moses was given [by God,] the grace [of God] and the truth [of God] through Jesus Christ came into being.”

performed on the sabbath, by a numerical detail suggesting “two” and “three” as part of the preparation for what Philo calls “the Seven when perfected.”

[2283 c] Origen (Philocal. i. 12) explains ἀνὰ μετρητὰς δύο ἢ τρεῖς as referring to three different aspects of the Scriptures, and he adds ἐξ δὲ ὑδρίαι εὐλόγως εἰσι τοῖς ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ καθαριζομένοις γενομένῳ (Robinson γεγεννημένῳ) ἐν ἐξ ἡμέραις ἀριθμῷ τελείῳ. By “perfect number” (Plato 546 B, and see Steph.) he means a number that is “perfected,” or “completed,” by adding the terms of an Arithmetical Progression. Thus 3, 6, and 10 are called perfect numbers, because $3 = 1 + 2$; $6 = 1 + 2 + 3$; $10 = 1 + 2 + 3 + 4$. Philo (ii. 183) and Clement of Alexandria (782) call 10 “the all-perfect or all-perfecting decad” (δεκάδι τῇ παντελείᾳ, ἡ δεκάς δὲ ὁμολογεῖται παντέλειος εἶναι (the fem. in -εία should be recognised in L. and S.)), but six is also a “perfect” number and one that would commend itself to a Jew as symbolical of creation. Since six derives its “perfection” from the addition of “two” and “three” to unity, it is all the more intelligible that Jn should here introduce the “two” and “three” as well as the “six.” It may be added that Augustine interpreted the “one hundred and fifty three” in xxi. 11 as being a “perfect number,” the sum of $1 + 2 + 3...$ up to 17, where 10 and 7 represent severally the “ten commandments” of the Law and “the seven spirits of God.”

[2283 d] A number may be allegorized variously by different interpreters, and the variation may be alleged as proof that no allegory or inner meaning was ever intended. As an instance, however, to the contrary, see Gen. xiv. 14 “three hundred and eighteen,” allegorized by Barn. ix. 8 and Clem. Alex. 782 as referring to the cross of Christ, but Hershon says: “Our sages say: ‘He went in pursuit with Eliezer alone, whose name has the numerical value of three hundred and eighteen.” The application of “numerical value” to names may be illustrated by the “number of the beast” in the Apocalypse, 666, a sort of parody, thrice repeated, of the “all-perfect number.”

"blow for blow" etc., and the Sermon on the Mount has "eye for an eye," "tooth for a tooth¹." But, apart from contexts suggesting endless vendetta, ἀντί might mean "[coming constantly] in the place of," so as to denote "one thing [following] upon another"; and Origen actually paraphrases it so here, "a second grace upon (ἐπί) a former grace," though both in the preceding and in the following context he quotes the clause with ἀντί². Ἀντί is used by Philo³ similarly, but somewhat differently, to describe the succession of the graces of God, who takes away the old, and dispenses to us constantly "new in the place of old." Elsewhere He is said to pour them on us in an unceasing and continuous succession or orbit⁴.

[2286] There is probably in John, as in Philo, an intention to suggest the notion of "exchange" rather than that of mere succession. Both Origen and Chrysostom appear to discern, in this passage, a taking away of the old grace, or gift of the Law ("the Law was given"), in order to substitute the new gift of the grace and truth that are in Christ. The Law was given to Israel through Moses because (Deut. vii. 7) the Lord "loved" them and "chose" them, that is to say, God gave it as a gift, or grace; but His full grace and truth, latent under that Law, did not come into being till the Word became flesh as Jesus Christ in order to "take away" the first grace, i.e. the Law of Moses, so as to establish the second grace, i.e. the grace of freedom, or sonship,—the grace of the Father as manifested in the grace of the Son⁵.

[2287] "We all" is perhaps intended to mean more than the "we" that is so common in the First Epistle ("we know," "we are the sons of God" etc.). "We" means "we Christians." But "we all"—like "every man" at the beginning of the Prologue—may mean "every human being from the creation of man." All have

(iii) Ἀπό

(α) Ἀπό and ἐκ meaning "[some] of," see 2213—5

(β) Ἀπο, transposition of [2288] Ἀπό, meaning "off," is placed before πηχῶν in xxi. 8 "about two hundred cubits off (ἀπὸ πηχῶν διακοσίων)." It is a natural transposition arising from the desire to give prominence to the notion "distant," as in our "distant two hundred cubits," and then, illogically, allowing the preposition that signifies distance to govern "cubits." Similarly πρό is transposed in xii. 1 (lit.) "before six days the Passover (πρὸ ἑξ ἡμερῶν τοῦ πάσχα)," for "six days before the Passover," like the Latin "before the fifth day the Kalends" for "the fifth day before the Kalends." Abundant instances will be found in the Thesaurus, and there is nothing in the Johannine passages that needs comment, except that the former transposition may be largely the result of Latin influence, and that it is found in Revelation (xiv. 20) "at a distance of...furlongs (ἀπὸ σταδίων...)."

(γ) Ἀπό and ἐκ describing domicile or birth-place

[2289] Ἀπό and ἐκ occur in i. 44 "Now Philip was from (ἀπό) Bethsaida², from out (ἐκ) the city of Andrew and Peter³," and

[2287 b] Perhaps, also, John wishes, at the outset of his Gospel, to indicate to his readers why he will very rarely use the Synoptic word, μισθός, i.e. "hire," "wages," or "reward." It expresses a truth: but, if used too often and without care, it might lead some to suppose that God bargains. The Fourth Gospel uses the word only once, when Jesus says (iv. 36) "Already is he that is reaping receiving wages," i.e. "The very act of reaping God's harvest is your 'wages,' just as the very act of doing God's will is my 'meat.'"

i. 45—6 “We have found...Jesus son of Joseph,—him [that is] from Nazareth (Ἰ. υἱὸν τοῦ Ἰωσήφ τὸν ἀπὸ Ναζαρέτ)...From out (ἐκ) Nazareth can any good thing be¹?” These two passages, so far as they go, suggest that (in both) ἀπό signifies domicile and ἐκ extraction. In the former, ἐκ may be used to imply that Philip, though resident in Bethsaida, had sprung “from” Capernaum, the city of Andrew and Peter; in the latter, to imply that the Messiah could not spring “from” Nazareth (instead of Bethlehem). But this rule seems broken in vii. 41—2 “But others said, Can it be that the Christ is to come from out (ἐκ) Galilee? Did not the Scripture say that from out (ἐκ) the seed of David, and from (ἀπό) Bethlehem, the village where David was (ὅπου ἦν Δ.), the Christ is to come²?” Here, where we might expect “from out Bethlehem,” to denote that the Messiah was to be born there, the weaker preposition is substituted, perhaps because the stronger has been already used to denote extraction from the family of David.

[2290] Concerning xi. 1 (lit.) “Now there was one [lying] sick (ἦν δέ τις ἀσθενῶν) Lazarus from Bethany (Δ. ἀπὸ Βηθανίας) from out (ἐκ) the village of Mary and Martha her sister” Chrysostom says, “Not at haphazard does the evangelist tell us whence Lazarus was (πόθεν ἦν ὁ Δ.), but for a certain cause, which he will subsequently mention.” By the “cause” Chrysostom (doubtless) means Christ’s special affection for the whole family at Bethany. For this reason, we ought perhaps to connect “from Bethany,” not with “Lazarus” adjectivally, but with “was” predicatively, thus: “Now a certain man, lying sick [at the time], Lazarus [by name], was from Bethany³,” which agrees with the construction in (2289) “Now Philip was from Bethsaida.” The writer proceeds on the principle of

"narrowing down." As Lazarus has not been mentioned before, he does not speak of "Lazarus from Bethany," but thus: (1) "one," (2) "lying sick," (3) "Lazarus," (4) "domiciled at Bethany," (5) "a native of the village of Mary and Martha." Then follow (6) "Mary was the woman that anointed the Saviour's feet," (7) "Lazarus her brother was sick," (8) "he whom thou lovest is sick¹." It is not certain, he seems to say, that Lazarus was born in Bethany; but it is certain that he was born in the same village as his sisters, and that he was living now at Bethany. The passage suggests that the evangelist is writing cautiously, in view of differences of opinion; but it favours the conclusion that he uses ἀπό to mean domicile and ἐκ to mean extraction.

[2291] xix. 38 "But after these things Joseph from (ἀπό) Arimathaea asked Pilate...²" All the evangelists use ἀπό here. But the parallel Mark and Matthew have "came" in the context of "from Arimathaea" in such a way as to suggest that Joseph came from that town for the purpose of presenting his petition to Pilate. Luke and John make it clear that "from Arimathaea" indicates Joseph's domicile, and does not mean that he came on that day from that village³.

[2292] From the Johannine combinations of ἀπό and ἐκ above we may conclude with certainty that John makes a distinction between them. Light on his motive may be thrown by the following facts. (1) Mark's only use of the phrase "Jesus from Nazareth" is connected with "come," so that it is ambiguous, "There came Jesus from (ἀπό) Nazareth of Galilee⁴," where the parallel Matthew omits "Nazareth" and has merely "from Galilee." (2) Matthew elsewhere says that Jesus left "the [city] Nazara" (in which Joseph of Bethlehem had settled on his return from Egypt⁵) and settled in Capernaum⁶, but that the multitude called Him (not "Jesus from Capernaum" but) "the prophet, Jesus, the [man, or, prophet] from

Nazareth of Galilee¹." Luke never uses the phrase "Jesus from (or, the [man] from) Nazareth"; but, in his Introduction, he describes Nazareth as the home of Mary and Joseph from the beginning (although Jesus was born at Bethlehem), and, in the body of his Gospel, on the only occasion on which he mentions Nazareth, he says, "And he came to Nazara where he had been brought up²." The only mention of Nazareth in N.T. apart from the Gospels is in the speech of Peter to Cornelius "Jesus the [man] from Nazareth³."

[2293] This, then, is one of the very many instances where John uses a phrase used by Mark and Matthew and disused by Luke—probably because Luke thought it likely to make people suppose that Jesus was born at Nazareth instead of Bethlehem. John takes up the phrase ἀπὸ N. and puts it before the reader, at the outset of his Gospel, along with ἐκ N., leading us to infer that Jesus might be domiciled at Nazareth without having been born there. At the same time he makes us applaud the faith of Philip, who could accept as the Messiah "Jesus a son of Joseph," domiciled at Nazareth, on the strength of His personality alone⁴.

³ [2292 a] Acts x. 36—8, an inextricably confused sentence, or rather group of clauses, in which—without any certain grammatical construction—τὸν λόγον, and τὸ γενόμενον ῥῆμα, and "beginning from (ἀπὸ) Galilee" occur in connexion with "Jesus from (ἀπὸ) Nazareth." Possibly there was some early confusion between "Jesus beginning" and "the Word beginning," and between the "word" in two senses. W.H. have a long marginal alternative.

[2293 b] The difference between ἀπὸ and ἐκ may also be illustrated by the

(iv) Διά

(1) Διά with Accusative of Person

[2294] An action may be done διά τινα when it is done “because of a person” in various aspects of causation: (1) (motive) “because of the doer’s love of, or fear of, or, desire to please, the person,” (2) (action) “because the person helped, prompted, or constrained, the doer.” In the former aspect appear “The Sabbath was made because of [God’s love of] man¹,” and similarly “because of the elect” and “because of Herodias².” The latter, if it occurs at all in N.T., may be exemplified by the phrase “because of the multitude,” which in various contexts may suggest (1) because of some one’s desire not to jostle, or press through, the multitude, or (2) because the multitude hindered, constrained etc. But in xi. 42 it means “for the sake of helping the multitude³.” The Epistle to the Hebrews contains the only passage in N.T. that combines the personal accusative and the personal genitive thus: “It became him, i.e. the Father, because of whom are all things and through whom are all things (δι’ ὃν τὰ πάντα καὶ δι’ οὗ τὰ πάντα), in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings⁴.” It is also concerning the Father that the Epistle to the Romans says, “From him and through him, and to him, are all things⁵.” But the Epistle to the Colossians says concerning the Son, “All things through him and to him have been created⁶.”

[2295] These quotations, by themselves, would suffice to make it probable that, by the end of the first century, Greek Christians would be weighing and discussing the exact phrases by which they ought to express the mediatory action of the Son in the regeneration of the world. Philo actually exhibits such a discussion concerning unique phrase (Jn xii. 49) ἐξ ἑμαυτοῦ οὐκ ἐλάβησα as compared with the usual οὐκ ἀπ’ ἑμαυτοῦ λαλῶ. The former goes back more definitely to the fountain-head. It is also more emphatic and comes appropriately in the solemn protest that concludes Christ’s public preaching.

the mediatory action of the Logos. He finds fault with Eve and with Joseph for using the phrase "through God (διὰ τοῦ θεοῦ)¹"—for which he would certainly have rebuked the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, as implying that God was an instrument. Towards the creation of anything there must be, he says, a combination of several things. To make a house, for example, there must be (1) builder, (2) materials, (3) instruments. In the abstract, he adds a fourth term as follows: (1) the ὑφ' οὗ, "by what," τὸ αἴτιον, "the causal," (2) the ἐξ οὗ, "from what," ἡ ὕλη, "the material," (3) the δι' οὗ, "through what," *τὸ ἐργαλεῖον*², "the instrumental," (4) the δι' ὧ, "because of what," ἡ αἰτία, "the cause (or, reason)." Applied to the House of the Universe, the Causal is God, the Material is the four elements, the Instrument is the Word of God³.

[2296] Philo lays great stress on this distinction between the Instrument and the Cause or the Causal. "It characterizes," he says, "those who love truth, and who desire true and wholesome knowledge; but those who say they have 'obtained a thing through God,' [wrongly] suppose the Causal, the Builder, to be a [mere] instrument, and [suppose] the instrument, the human mind, to be the Causal." The passage concludes with the assertion that salvation is not "through God," but "[a gift] from Him (παρ' αὐτοῦ) as being the Causal⁴."

³ [2295 b] So far, so good; but as regards the Cause, the δι' ὧ or αἰτία, the parallel between the earthly house and the House of the Universe is not maintained. For, in dealing with the former, instead of asking the question "Because of what?" (Διὰ τί;) he asks "On account of what?" (Τίνος ἕνεκα;)—"On account of what [is the house built] except for shelter and safety..." (Τίνος δὲ ἕνεκα πλὴν σκέπης καὶ ἀσφαλείας δι' ὃ τοῦτό ἐστιν;) The sense seems to require τὸ δὲ δι' ὃ τοῦτό ἐστιν, "and this constitutes the δι' ὧ or Why." In his description of the necessary conditions for a material house, he enumerates only three, (1) architect, (2) stone and wood, (3) tools. He omits the cause or motive. Also, in speaking of the House of the Universe, he says that "the cause (αἰτία) of its creation is the goodness of the Architect." Apparently he makes the object of the human architect, which he calls "shelter and security," parallel to the motive of the divine Architect, which he calls His "Goodness."

⁴ [2296 a] Οὐ διὰ τοῦ θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ παρ' αὐτοῦ, ὡς αἰτίου, τὸ σῶζεσθαι, where παρά implies proceeding from a person, whereas ἐκ might mean "from a source." The whole of the passage indicates a controversial attitude towards loose thinkers,

[2297] What, then, is the meaning of "because of the Father" and "because of me" in vi. 56—7 "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me and I in him. Even as the living Father sent me and I live because of the Father (διὰ τὸν πατέρα) so he that eateth me, he also shall live because of me (ζήσκει δι' ἐμέ)¹?" Starting from the second clause we begin by assuming that this is different from the corresponding phrase with the genitive in the Epistle, 1 Jn iv. 9 "In this was manifested the love of God in us because God hath sent his only begotten Son into the world that we may live through him (ζήσωμεν δι' αὐτοῦ)." The phrase ζῶ διὰ σέ may mean "I live because of thee" in two senses: (1) "I live because of thy action in the past [whether that of parents in giving life, or that of friends in saving it]," (2) "I live because I desire to serve thee, must serve thee, for the sake of serving thee [in the future]²."

who confused these distinctions. Taken all together, these extracts from Philo strengthen the probability that John deliberately reserved the instrumental phrase, δι' αὐτοῦ, for the action of the Logos, or Son, both in the Gospel and in the Epistle, so that he would not apply it to the action of the Baptist (2302—4). But they also suggest that John would take pains to distinguish his doctrine of the instrumental action of the incarnate Logos from that of Philo which contemplated no incarnation and perhaps no personality in the Logos. In any case the facts make it absolutely certain—at least for those who regard the evangelist as a careful writer (not to speak of his being more than usually careful) writing after, and in the midst of, such discussions as these—that John would not use the δι' ὧν for the δι' οὗ or vice versa.

² [2297 b] For (1) comp. Plut. Vit. Alex. § 8 (p. 668 d—e) concerning Alexander, who said he owed life to his father, but good life to Aristotle, δι' ἐκείνον μὲν ζῶν διὰ τοῦτον δὲ καλῶς ζῶν, Dion. Hal. 1570 διὰ τοὺς θεοὺς (478 δι' οὓς) μέγας ἐγενόμην (Sylb. "frequentius genetivum"), (?) Aristoph. Plut. 470, Plutus says δι' ἐμέ τε ζώντας ὑμᾶς (ambig., perh. "to gain me"). In Hesiod Works 3—4, ὅν τε διὰ βροτοὶ ἄνδρες...Διὸς μεγάλοι οἰκῆται may mean "because of his action in the past...and thanks to whom (or, at whose mercy) in the future." Timaeus (quoted in Longinus iv. 3) says that Athens was punished as a whole, for the mutilation of the Hermæ, more especially δι' ἑνα ἄνδρα, "because of one man," (Roberts) "the infliction of punishment was chiefly due to Hermocrates the son of Hermon, who was descended...from the outraged god."

[2297 c] For (2), Wetstein (on Jn vi. 57) quotes Xiphilinus in Caracalla p. 328 "I would fain live because of you alone (δι' ὑμᾶς μόνους ζῆν ἐθέλω) that I may be continually heaping favours on you [all]," and Eustathius, who (on Iliad v. 875 σοὶ πάντες μαχόμεσθα) says ἡγουν διὰ σέ, ὁμοιον τῷ Σοὶ ζῶ, ἥτοι διὰ σέ. This is important as indicating that ζῶ διὰ σέ was a familiar phrase meaning "I live for thy sake," i.e. to do thee service. Comp. Epictet. iv. 1. 150 (given by Wetst. as

But in later Greek the second of these interpretations predominates, especially with the word "live," and where the future is contemplated. Moreover the first interpretation ("I live because of thy action in the past") is scarcely to be distinguished from the genitival form "I live through thy action in the past." Hence we infer that in the present passage the phrase means—or perhaps it will be safer to say, includes as its first meaning—"he also shall live to do me service, or, to do my will."

[2298] Going back to the parallel and preceding clause, "I live because of the Father," are we to infer that this means "I live to do the will of the Father"? This is certainly one aspect of the truth, and it agrees with the tenor of the whole Gospel, and particularly with the words "I am come down from heaven, *not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me*¹." But Jesus also says "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me²," and this implies that the Father gives the Son "meat," that is, supports and strengthens, and causes the Son's life. Thus we have here the two aspects of causation mentioned above. The first is (motive) "I live because I desire to serve the Father"; the second is (action) "I live because the Father gives me life."

iii. 26) "For my part I had as soon not live, if one were bound to live for the sake of Felicion (διὰ Φιληκίωνα) [i.e. to do F. service] putting up with his frowns and fits of slave-like fury (δουλικού φρονήματος, i.e. such as one might expect from a slave promoted to office)." Also Winer (p. 498) quotes Long. Pastor. 2 p. 62 (Schaefer.) διὰ τὰς νόμους ἔζησε. So the philosopher in Epictetus says to God "I abide on earth merely for thy sake (διὰ σέ)" (2705).

[2297 d] Comparing the two groups, we see that later Greek takes διὰ τινα in the second sense, "to do anyone service," and especially in the phrase ζῶ διὰ. Where the future is in view, ζῶ διὰ would naturally have the second meaning.

to live "because of another." But here John speaks of the disciples as "living because of the Son" and of the Son as "living because of the Father" in a manner that suggests that this is the highest kind of life, hinting even at a reciprocal action, as though the Father also, from the beginning, might have "lived because of the Son"—as we may surely say that the Son "lived because of the Church."

[2300] This passage, also, partially answers the question, Why does John altogether omit the Synoptic doctrine that the disciples are to do this and that "for the sake of (ἐνεκα) Christ? The doctrine is here. It is implied that those who receive Christ's flesh and blood are so impregnated with the common life of the Church that henceforth they "live because of (διὰ) Christ. They do not serve Him in this or that single act, by a separate effort on each occasion, but spontaneously as the branch develops in the vine according to the law of the vine—a metaphor not yet mentioned by John but prepared for in the preceding words "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me and I in him¹."

(2) Διὰ with Genitive of Person

[2301] Strictly described, the author of an action (mentioned passively) is distinguished from his agent or instrument by two distinct prepositions, as in Matthew, "that which was spoken by (ὑπό) the Lord through (διὰ) the prophet²." But Luke only once uses this instrumental διὰ in connexion with "prophets" ("written (lit.) through (διὰ) the prophets"); and once he has "through (διὰ) the mouth of his holy prophets" (avoiding personal instrumentality)³. Where Matthew describes the Baptist as sending "through (διὰ) his disciples," Luke has "two (δύο τινάς) of his disciples⁴." In the Triple Tradition, this personal genitive with διὰ occurs only in the passages pronouncing woe on him "through whom (δι' οὗ) the Son of man is to be delivered up¹." In John, διά with genitive of person is repeatedly used to denote the agency of the Logos or of Christ, "All things came into being through him (δι' αὐτοῦ)," "The world came into being through him," "The grace [of God] and the truth [of God] came into being through Jesus Christ," "God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world but that the world should be saved through him²" etc.

[2302] There is ambiguity in i. 7 "This [man] came for witness that he might bear witness concerning the light (φωτός), in order that all might believe through him (or; through it, δι' αὐτοῦ). He (ἐκεῖνος) was not the light, but..." Is it meant (a) that all might believe through John the Baptist, or (b) that all might believe through the Light, or through the Logos in whom is "the Life" that is "the Light of men"?

In favour of (a) are these considerations. (1) John frequently speaks elsewhere of believing the Son, and on, or in, the Son, and of believing in the Light³; but (2) there is no other Johannine instance of "believe through the Son, or through Him, or through the Light." (3) The change from an unemphatic pronoun ("through him (αὐτοῦ)") to an emphatic "he (ἐκεῖνος)" may be illustrated by other instances in N.T.⁴, so that there is no difficulty in supposing both pronouns to mean "the Baptist." (4) In view of i. 17 "the Law was given through Moses," where subordinate agency is clearly attributed to Moses, why may it not be attributed to John the Baptist?

[2303] In favour of (b) are the following arguments. (1) This is the first passage in which the word "believe" is mentioned. Now belief, in itself, may be either good or bad, belief in the true God or belief in false gods. Is it likely that the new "belief" should be introduced by the evangelist, as being "belief through" a "man"? (2) When first introducing a term, it is in accordance with the evangelist's style to use it in a broad sense, which he afterwards "narrows down"; and all that he may mean here is that the belief is to be "through the Light" (not, like superstitious beliefs, "through the darkness"). (3) "That all might believe through John the Baptist”—even if we admit that this was the will of God in sending the Baptist—is not so natural, in any Christian writer, as “that all might believe through the Christ, or through the Son,” or “that Israel should believe through the Baptist.”

² [2301 a] Jn i. 3, 10, 17, iii. 17 etc. In xiv. 6 "No man cometh to the Father save through me," the context ("I am the way") may justify the supposition that the phrase is metaphorical, and that the genitive is local, δι' ὁδοῦ.

[2304] (4) In the Fourth Gospel, which consistently subordinates the Baptist to the Messiah, and in which the former is called by the latter a mere lamp (v. 35), is it likely that the evangelist should say that this “lamp” was sent to bear witness concerning the Light “in order that all men should believe—through the ‘lamp’”? (5) The agency attributed to Moses is merely the transmission (from God to man) of the written Law, which the context contrasts with “Grace and truth”; but the agency that would produce Belief is of a much higher and more subtle kind. (6) The work to be accomplished through the agency of the Baptist would be better described in his own language (“in order that there may be manifested to Israel”) as the manifestation of the Son, through whom “all” were to believe in the Father. (7) In xvii. 20 (“those who believe through their logos or word,” i.e. through the word of the disciples) the evangelist avoids saying “believe through them” (although St Paul uses that phrase¹) and this, too, although the disciples were destined to receive the Spirit: much more does it seem likely that John would avoid saying that “all men” were intended (in the divine Providence) to “believe through the Baptist.” (8) The pronoun αὐτός—with the exception of the unemphatic and parenthetic “his name was John” (ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰ.), rendered in Latin as well as in English “whose”—is used always in this Prologue for the Word, the Light etc.; and the words or phrases “through him,” “without him,” “in him,” “it,” “him” etc. occur so frequently that the interpretation of a particular “through him” as referring to John the Baptist carries with it a sense of incongruity. It may be added that the only instance of δι’ αὐτοῦ in the Epistle refers to the Son (“that we may live *through him*¹). There appears a preponderance of probability in favour of the interpretation "that he might bear witness concerning the Light that all might believe through that [Light]²."

(v) Eis (see also 2706 foll.)

(a) For πιστεύω εἰς, see 1480 foll.

(β) Eis without verb of motion

[2305] This construction is used in the words of Christ, ix. 7 "Go wash to the pool of Siloam," repeated by the blind man thus, ix. 11 "He said to me, Go to Siloam and wash³." Motion is also implied in xx. 7 "the napkin...apart, rolled up [and put] into one place," which perhaps implies more deliberateness ("first rolled up and then carried into a place apart") than would have been implied by ἐν.

[2306] Far more important than these, are passages, in connexion with some spiritual doctrine of unity, where John uses εἰς with a verb that does not imply motion, such as xvii. 23 "that they may be completely perfected into one (τετελειωμένοι εἰς ἓν)." This is perhaps little more than a brief way of saying "that they may be completely perfected and brought into unity." But it is not so easy to explain 1 Jn v. 8 "Three are they that bear witness, the spirit and the water and the blood, and the three are into the one (οἱ τρεῖς εἰς τὸ ἓν εἰσιν)." Εἰσιν appears to be emphatic ("are essentially"), and the writer seems to suggest (1) the reality of three witnesses tending "to" one truth, and (2) the reality of three essences harmonizing themselves "into" one nature, namely, that of the crucified Son who first delivered up His Spirit to God and then poured forth from His side "water and blood" for the sake of men.

² [2304 δ] Origen, after an exposition of the words "he came for witness to bear witness of the light," says (Huet ii. 85 D) "we must next consider what is to be thought about the words 'That all might believe through him.'" Unfortunately what should follow has been lost. Cramer, however, prints, as from Origen, "That is to say, so far as He was concerned (ὅσον ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ)—even though 'all' did not 'believe.' For [similarly], if all men should not receive the light that comes from the sun, one would not say, as a consequence, that the sun did not rise for the purpose of universal enlightenment; for the purpose of Him that sent him was that all should believe (ἡ γὰρ πρόθεσις τοῦ πέμψαντος αὐτὸν ἦν πιστεῦσαι πάντας)." This rather suggests that Origen took δι' αὐτοῦ to mean "through the Light—so far as the Light is concerned."

[2307] As regards the phrase twice¹ used to describe Christ's visitations after the Resurrection (xx. 19, 26) "and he stood (lit.) to the midst of the disciples," it is preceded in the former case by "Jesus came" and in the latter by "Jesus cometh," so as to preclude the explanation that it is a condensed form of "came to, and stood among, the disciples." And it is the more remarkable because, concerning a similar visitation, Luke has (xxiv. 36) "And while they were speaking these things he himself stood in the midst of them"; and the tradition about Jesus "in the midst" of the disciples is found in the Epistle to the Hebrews². The writer of that Epistle regards Jesus as "singing the praises of God in the midst of the disciples." Justin Martyr takes the same view. He mentions the "singing" immediately after mentioning the Resurrection; he says that Jesus "stood in the midst of the disciples," and he appeals for confirmation to "the Memoirs of the Apostles." His language indicates that he has in view the manifestation to the Eleven described by Luke³. John—on the supposition that he knew this traditional phrase to have been connected with Christ's resurrection by Luke—may be presumed to have had some good reason for departing from Luke's

So Just. Martyr Tyrph. 106 καὶ ὅτι ἐν μέσῳ τῶν ἀδελφῶν αὐτοῦ ἔστη, τῶν ἀποστόλων...καὶ μετ' αὐτῶν διάγων ὕμνησε τὸν θεόν, ὡς καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀπομνημονεύμασι τῶν ἀποστόλων δηλοῦται γεγεννημένον, τὰ λείποντα τοῦ ψαλμοῦ ἐδήλωσεν. "Ἔστι δὲ ταῦτα. Διηγῆσομαι τὸ ὄνομα σου τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς μου, ἐν μέσῳ ἐκκλησίας ὑμνήσω σε. The words "not ashamed to call them brethren" are illustrated by Jn xx. 17 "Go unto my brethren, and say to them, I ascend to my Father and your Father." This and Mt. xxviii. 10 are the only passages in the Gospels where Jesus uses the term thus definitely (1749).

language. Perhaps he wished to describe the Saviour, not as singing praises to God, but as bringing strength to men; and on that account he first mentions the "coming" (1633 foll.) so as to suggest the Helper, and then he mentions Him as "standing into the midst of the disciples," so as to combine mystically the ancient notion of the firm, erect, and immoveable Deliverer with that of the Spirit passing "into the midst" of the Church, and "into the midst" of each of the disciples¹. This view is somewhat confirmed by the next instance to be discussed.

[2308] i. 18 μονογενῆς θεὸς ὃς ὦν εἰς τὸν κόλπον τοῦ πατρὸς is the only passage where the Fourth Gospel uses εἰς with a form of εἶναι. SS has "an only [one] a Son from the bosom of his Father," and codex a "nisi unicus filius solus (? εἰς) sinum patris ipse enarravit." But there can be no doubt that εἰς τ. κόλπον is the true reading and that it is intended to mean something different from (xiii. 23) ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ². In i. 1, ὁ λόγος ᾗν πρὸς τὸν θεόν, καὶ θεὸς ᾗν ὁ λόγος, the preposition πρὸς is used to describe "God, the Logos" as from the beginning "[looking] toward (πρός) God." In xvii. 21 and elsewhere He is described as being "in" the Father and the Father "in" Him. But the present passage describes Him as Only begotten, incarnate, on earth, declaring the invisible mysteries of God to man. As He is "Only begotten," the word "bosom" is introduced to suggest the love of the Father for the Son; and as He is Mediator and Interpreter penetrating from earth into (εἰς) the deepest secrets of God in heaven,—where He IS, in Spirit, even when His body is on earth—He is described as "He that IS into the bosom of the Father."

¹ [2307 d] The passage may be compared with i S. iii. 10 "And the Lord came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel" (LXX κατέστη, but "Another" (Field) ἐστηλώθη). The Lord had been previously thrice described (i S. iii. 4—8) as simply "calling" Samuel; but the latter did not recognise Him. Now at last, it is said, the Lord "came and stood, or took up his stand" (Gesen. 426)"—and now Samuel recognises and replies, "Speak, for thy servant heareth." The Targum, understanding the meaning of the Lord's "coming" to be, not that He really "came," but that He revealed Himself as present, has "And Jehovah was revealed and stood ready (Levy Ch. ii. 250 a) and called." Both in Heb. and Aram. the word for "stand" here means "stand fast, or ready." There is little doubt that the Targum attached a spiritual meaning to the "standing" as well as to the "coming." A whole treatise might be compiled about Philo's views of God as "standing (ἐστῶτα)" and unchangeable, and of the Logos as "standing and health-giving" (i. 94 "None but the true God standeth," i. 93 "the standing, wholesome, and right Logos," comp. i. 269, 276, 425, 586, 591, 687, 688). Simon Magus (Clem. Alex. 456) claimed to be "the standing One." Origen (Huet ii. 82 (comp. ii. 129)) says that this "standing" denotes Christ's προηγουμένην ὑπόστασιν διήκουσαν ἐπὶ πάντα τὸν κόσμον κατὰ τὰς ψυχὰς τὰς λογικάς. Comp. Log. Oxyrhynch. "I stood (ἔστην) in the midst of the world (κόσμου) and in the flesh appeared to them." It is quite characteristic of John that he should introduce at the beginning and at the end of his Gospel similar yet varied traditions about the Logos, "standing in the midst" (2646—9).

[2309] As a whole, the evangelist's use of εἰς without verbs of motion leads to the conclusion that when he uses it of divine mysteries, he wishes to combine the notions of motion and rest as belonging to God and to the manifestations of God. From God, the Logos is ever coming to men and is also abiding in them. From Man the Logos is ever going up to God and is also abiding in Him. Hence concerning the Son incarnate on earth, but ever going up in thought and word and act to the Father, the evangelist says that "He IS to the bosom of the Father." Again, concerning the Son, when He has ascended to heaven, but is ever coming down to the hearts of men, it is said that He "came, or cometh, and stood to the midst of the disciples."

(γ) Εἰς, "to" or "into"

[2310] Εἰς is sometimes ambiguous, since it may mean "to" or "into." In iv. 5 "He cometh therefore to a city (εἰς πόλιν)," εἰς has not the same meaning as in iv. 8, 28 "had gone away, or, went away, into the city (εἰς τὴν π.)": for the context indicates that in the former passage εἰς means only "to the neighbourhood of." The ambiguity might have been avoided by writing "He draweth near to a city¹," but John prefers to give the meaning vaguely first and to "narrow down" afterwards (2290). It follows that, in the account of the Resurrection, (xx. 1) "she cometh to (ἔρχεται εἰς) the tomb" may be John's way of expressing what Mark and Luke express by the preposition ἐπί, "up to," or "towards," where Matthew has "they came to behold the tomb²." John perhaps hardly ever uses ἐπί of motion "up to" or "towards" a place (2336). After making this general statement about Mary Magdalene, he leads us to suppose that she did not go right up to the tomb but ran back—as soon as she perceived that the stone had been rolled away—to tell the story to Peter and his companion.

[2311] Mark and Luke describe the women as subsequently "entering (εἰσελθεῖν)." Matthew omits this. John has an account of the two disciples and Mary, in which the details—how the two "began to come to (ἤρχοντο εἰς)" (R.V. "went toward") the tomb, and the other disciple "came first," yet "entered not in," and how Peter "cometh" and "entered," and then the other disciple "entered" (he that "came first") and how Mary "stood outside"—are fully described in such a way as to suggest that the Fourth Evangelist desired to clear up obscurities in early tradition, and to shew how it came to pass that Mary Magdalene—although she did not actually "enter the tomb"—was the first to see the risen Saviour; and the unnamed disciple, though not the first to enter the tomb nor the first to see the Saviour, was the first to "believe."

(δ) Εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον

[2312] In vi. 27 "work not for the food that perisheth, but for the food that abideth unto eternal life (τὴν μένουσαν εἰς ζ. αἰώνιον)" if John had meant merely "abideth for ever," would he not have written, as elsewhere (viii. 35, xii. 34), "abideth for ever (μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα)," and consequently does he not mean here "abideth with a view to eternal life" i.e. in order to produce eternal life? That meaning is probably included. But as the "bread" is itself called (vi. 51) "living," and the "water" also (iv. 10, 11) "living," the full meaning probably is "abideth for life eternal" in the double sense of our English "for," namely, (1) "lasting for," (2) "for the sake of," or "for the purpose of producing."

[2313] Another interpretation would make a pause after "abideth" (as in xv. 16 "That your fruit may abide)¹," so that the meaning would be, "Work not for the transitory but for the abiding food—with a view to life eternal." The same doubt attends iv. 36, "Already doth he that reapeth receive wages and gather fruit—with a view to life eternal¹," where the "view" is probably not man's view but God's. That is to say, the reaper is not described as working with his eyes fixed on life eternal, but the fruit is regarded as stored up, in the eyes of God (or according to the will of God), for eternal life.

[2314] In iv. 14 "The water that I will give him shall become in him a fountain of water leaping (ἀλλομένου)—unto (εἰς) life eternal," some have taken the meaning to be "leaping into life eternal." This would imply that the water was, at first, in the human being, stagnant as in a cistern, and now became transmuted to a bubbling fountain. But all the Biblical traditions about the divine "Water," and especially those in John, suggest that the water from heaven is "living" from the first. Moreover, though "leap into life" is good English, the metaphor is not alleged to occur in Greek. Nor is ἀλλομαι alleged in the Thesaurus to be elsewhere applied to water. The Greeks have an abundant vocabulary to express a bubbling fountain²—but (so far as is known) they never use ἀλλομαι thus.

[2315] But a clue to the Johannine expression may be found in the fact that the evangelist always connects the "water" of heaven with the Spirit, directly or indirectly, and that he does this expressly in the words (vii. 38) "He that believeth on me...rivers from his belly shall flow—of living water," where he explains that this was "said about the Spirit," which was to be transmitted from Christ to the disciples and through them to the world in a continuous stream. Now ἀλλομαι, or ἐφάλλομαι, in LXX, is applied to the action of a "spirit of God," "forcing its way" or "falling violently" on Samson, Saul, and David³.

[2316] These passages suggest that "leaping" is used in the Gospel with some special reference to the action of the Spirit. As the Spirit, when likened to wind, may be said to "blow" or "breathe" where it listeth, so, when likened to water from heaven—which leaps down upon the earth and fertilises it—the Spirit may be said to “leap” with a mighty rush; and indeed this notion of rushing down mightily is connected by Luke with the Pentecostal descent of the Spirit manifested in tongues of flame¹. It is possible that there may be a double meaning in the word here. Superficially, and literally, it is intended to convey to the Samaritan Woman (or to readers in her position) the notion of a fountain “leaping up” (as in Numbers xxi. 17, “Spring up, O well”) in opposition to a deep well. But mystically it appears to mean water “leaping down” to convey life, or else “pulsing” with life, the water of regeneration².

² [2314 α] E.g. in Prov. xviii. 4 "the wellspring of wisdom is [as] a flowing brook" LXX ἀναπηδύει (al. ἀναπηδῶν), Aq. Sym. ἀναβλύζων, Theod. ἀνομβρῶν. Steph. quotes no passage except this to illustrate the use of ἀλλομαι "de aqua scaturiente."

[2316 b] Origen often quotes iv. 14, sometimes blending it with vii. 38 “rivers of water,” and seeming to interpret ἀλλομένον in different ways, occasionally altering εἰς to ἐπὶ to suit his interpretation. A passage in his Comm. ad loc. has ὥστε πηγὴν... ἀναβλυσθάνειν ἐν αὐτῷ ἄνω πηδώντων ὑδάτων... ἄλλεσθαι καὶ πηδᾶν ἐπὶ τὸ ἀνώτερον, ἐπὶ τὴν αἰώνιον ζωὴν. But he proceeds to quote Cant. ii. 8 “leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills,” πηδῶν ἐπὶ τὰ ὄρη διαλλόμενος ἐπὶ τοὺς βουνούς, which he explains of the Bridegroom—presumably the Holy Spirit, or the Word—“leaping” now upon the more exalted, now on inferior, souls; “Similarly here the fountain created in him that hath drunk of the water that Jesus giveth leapeth to eternal life.” Then he adds “But perhaps also it will leap after (πηδήσει μετὰ) the eternal life, [namely] to (εἰς) the Father [who is] beyond the eternal life. For Christ is the life. But He that is greater than Christ is greater than life.” Later on, he looks favourably on Heracleon’s explanation of “leaping.” Οὐκ ἀπιθάνως δὲ τὸ ἀλλομένον διηγήσατο, καὶ τοὺς μεταλαμβάνοντας τοῦ ἄνωθεν ἐπιχορηγομένου πλουσίως καὶ αὐτοὺς ἐκβλύσαι εἰς τὴν ἐτέρων αἰώνιον ζωὴν τὰ ἐπιεχορηγημένα αὐτοῖς. Heracleon’s rendering of εἰς ἀ. ζ., “with a view to produce eternal life” in others, agrees with the doctrine in vii. 38; but it will be observed that he does not paraphrase ἀλλομένον by ἀναβλύσαι but by ἐκβλύσαι. In Saul of Tarsus, for example, the water of life became a fountain—not merely “leaping [up]” to his own eternal life, but—“leaping [out]” to the eternal life of the Gentile world.

[2316 c] Comp. Aboth ii. 10—11 (ed. Taylor), where Rabban Jochanan, praising his five best pupils, calls Eliezer son of Hyrcanus “a plastered cistern, which loseth not a drop,” and Eleazar son of Arak “a welling spring.” He gave the palm to Eliezer, but the spiritually minded Abba Saul (1022) said, “If all the wise of Israel were in one scale of the balance, and Eliezer son of Hyrcanus with them, and Eleazar son of Arak in the other scale, he would outweigh them all.”

(ε) ὄψονται εἰς (xix. 37)

[2317] Εἰς τινα is used with ἰδεῖν, ὁρᾶν and βλέπειν to mean “looking to” a person for help or encouragement, or in regard and deference¹. Εἰς is also used thus in LXX, sometimes without a verb (“our eyes [are] to the Lord”) but sometimes with one, about “looking to” Jehovah, to Abraham etc.² Hence in xix. 37 “And another scripture saith, They shall look to (ὄψονται εἰς) him whom they pierced” we must be prepared to find the “looking” of a reverential kind. The “scripture” is from Zechariah’s prophecy about “looking” and “mourning,” where LXX and the other translators differ greatly³, and quotations from Revelation, Barnabas, and Justin indicate early Christian divergences as to traditions about “looking to” or “looking at” Jesus, and “mourning”⁴.

⁴ [2317 d] There was an early twofold application of Zech. xii. 10. Those who “looked” might be (1) Gentiles, (2) Jews; Gentiles, or “nations,” might be taken to include (3) the whole world, when referring to the Last Judgment. Zech. xii. 12 “And the land shall mourn, every family apart,” clearly refers to the “land” of Judaea, and the “families” are immediately mentioned as those of David, Nathan, Levi, and Simeon. But the LXX καὶ κήψεται ἡ γῆ κατὰ φυλὰς φυλάς, might be rendered “the earth...tribe by tribe,” and this might be taken to mean “the tribes, or nations, of the earth.” Moreover, in Zech. xii. 10, ὃς has ὄψονται for κήψονται, and this indicates that ὄψονται αὐτόν, “shall see him,” might be substituted for (Aq. Sym. Theod.) κήψονται αὐτόν, “shall mourn for him,” by Greek corruption.

[2317 e] Rev. i. 7 has ὁψεται αὐτόν πᾶς ὀφθαλμὸς καὶ οἵτινες αὐτόν ἐξεκέντησαν, καὶ κήψονται ἐπ’ αὐτόν πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς, which applies the prophecy to the whole world under the term “tribes of the earth.” But it drops the preposition after the verb of seeing, thus giving, “Every eye shall see him,” instead of “Every eye shall look to him.” However, it retains “for him” in “they shall mourn for him.”

[2317 f] Mt. xxiv. 30 has καὶ τότε [φανήσεται τὸ σημεῖον τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐν οὐρανῷ καὶ τότε κήψονται πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς καὶ] ὄψονται τ. ὑ. τ. ἀ. ἐρχόμενον

[2318] All the Synoptists mention a "beholding (θεωρεῖν)" of some kind immediately after the death of Jesus. But Mark and Matthew connect it simply with the women "standing afar off¹" and do not mention any "mourning." Luke, besides mentioning the women, describes "all the multitudes that had come together to behold this," as "beholding the things that had come to pass, and ἐπὶ τ. νεφελῶν. Here the three Synoptists agree in the words "And then shall they see the Son of man coming..." but the bracketed words, which are in Matthew alone, represent a version of the tradition of Revelation "they shall mourn for him," from which "for him" has been dropped, so as to represent the "tribes of the earth" as "mourning" for their own sakes—an entirely new departure.

[2317 g] Barnabas applies the prophecy to those who crucified the Lord, vii. 9 "Since they shall see Him (ὄψονται αὐτόν) then in the [last] day (Zech. xii. 10 "in that day") wearing the scarlet robe...and they shall say, 'Is not this He whom we crucified, having set Him at naught and pierced and spit upon Him?'" And he, too, drops the preposition that is essential to the meaning ("look to") and omits all mention of "mourning."

[2317 h] Justin expressly applies Zech. xii. 10 to the Jews, after mentioning a repentance that comes too late to prevent the tortures of hell, 1 Apol. 52 "And what the peoples (λαοί) of the Jews will say and do...was prophesied thus by Zechariah the prophet...They shall mourn (κόψονται) tribe to (πρός) tribe, and then they shall look to (?) Him whom they pierced (τότε ὄψονται εἰς ὃν ἐξεκέντησαν)"—a curious disarrangement, where perhaps Justin misunderstands "look to" (see below). The preposition "to" is retained, though "look" is dropped, when Justin, mentioning Hosea (!) and Daniel, says to Trypho (Tryph. 14) "Your people will see and understand to whom they have pierced (ὄψεται ὁ λαὸς ὑμῶν καὶ γνωριεῖ εἰς ὃν ἐξεκέντησαν)," and again (32) "one [Advent] in which He was pierced by you, but a second when ye shall recognise to whom ye pierced (ἐπιγνώσεσθε εἰς ὃν ἐξεκέντησατε) and your tribes shall mourn (κόψονται) tribe to (πρός) tribe..." (64) "whom they that pierced Him are destined to see and mourn (ὃν ὁρᾶν μέλλουσι καὶ κόπτεσθαι οἱ ἐκκεντήσαντες αὐτόν)," (126) "who shall come again also and then your twelve tribes shall mourn (κόψονται)." In all these passages Justin drops the prophetic "for him," and makes the Jews "mourn" for fear of punishment. In two of them he alters "look" into "know" or "recognise" in such a way as to suggest that he takes ὄψονται εἰς ὃν ἐξεκ. to mean, "they shall see and recognise Him against whom they have raised their hands to pierce Him."

[2317 i] The Gospel of Peter says that after the crucifixion (§ 7) "the Jews and the elders and the priests...began to mourn (κόπτεσθαι) and to say, Alas for our sins," and also that (§ 8) "the scribes and Pharisees and elders...heard that the whole people (λαὸς) murmured and [mourned] beating their breasts (κόπτεται τὰ στήθη)." This resembles Lk. xxiii. 48 τύπτοντες τὰ στήθη (where SS and other authorities add a clause like that of the Gospel of Peter).

beating their breasts¹—apparently indicating the dissent of the multitude of pilgrims from the act of the rulers of the Jews. John applies the prophecy of Zechariah (concerning the “looking” of the house of Judah “to” Him whom “they pierced”), not to the Jews but to the four soldiers used by the Jews as their instruments with the intention—so to speak—of “breaking the bones” of the Paschal Lamb. This intention is frustrated. Instead of “breaking the bones,” one of the soldiers pierces the side of the Saviour, thereby drawing forth “blood and water.” Then the four soldiers—representing the four quarters of the world—are supposed to stand “looking to him whom they pierced,” and the reader is left to interpret this in a twofold sense, present and future. They look to Him now in amazement; they will look to Him for forgiveness and salvation².

(ζ) Εἰς τέλος

[2319] Εἰς τέλος occurs in John once, in the only passage where he mentions τέλος, xiii. 1 (R.V.) “Jesus, knowing that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end (marg. to the uttermost) (εἰς τέλος).” It will be shewn that the ambiguity of this phrase has influenced other passages in N.T. and that John probably desires to suggest to his readers both the meanings given by R.V.

[2320] In LXX, εἰς τέλος means “to the end” in the sense of “to the [bitter] end,” i.e. utter destruction, or “to the [good] end,” i.e. perfect deliverance or salvation. Hence it sometimes represents the Hebrew verb reduplicated for emphasis (Gen. xlv. 4) “I will also surely bring thee up again,” LXX “I will bring thee up to the uttermost, or, in the end (εἰς τέλος).” On the other hand, in Job, LXX has “let him not cut me off to the [bitter] end (εἰς τέλος),” where the Hebrew and Aquila have “let loose the hand [for destruction]”³.

³ Job vi. 9 Aq. Sym. ἐπιβαλὼν τὴν χεῖρα.

Elsewhere εἰς τέλος means "to consummation," or "for ever," in such phrases as "the poor will not be forgotten for ever," "Arise and cast us not away for ever," "Wherefore hast thou, O God, cast us away *for ever*¹?" Somewhat different is its use in Ps. xvi. 11 "In thy right hand are pleasures [for] evermore" and (xlix. 9) "that he should still live *always*²."

[2321] In Greek literature of all periods εἰς τέλος is almost always used of that which lasts "to the end," or "*turns out to be the fact when one comes to the end*³." Exceptionally, in Polybius (where it is very frequent indeed), it means "perfectly"; but the Thesaurus quotes no instance of this meaning from any other ancient author. Lucian perhaps uses it once to mean "*perfectly*⁴," but he certainly uses it once to mean "*persistently*⁵," and the former passage may mean "even though you have not yet come to the end of your experience of me." In any case the meaning "to the end" is unquestionably predominant.

[2322] In N.T. the usage of εἰς τέλος is as follows. In 1 Thess. ii. 16 ἔφθασεν δὲ ἐπ' αὐτοὺς ἡ ὀργὴ εἰς τέλος "the wrath [of God] hath come upon them to [the bitter] end," the meaning follows the LXX.

A.* 161 θνητῶν δ' ὀλβιος ἐς τέλος οὐδεὶς. Steph. quotes no authors but Polybius and Theodor. Prodr. for the meaning "perfectly."

⁴ [2321 b] Lucian Somn. 9 (i. 12) "I am Education, my child, a familiar acquaintance of yours for some time, even though you have never yet had a perfect experience of me (εἰ καὶ μηδέπω εἰς τέλος μου πεπείρασαι)."

⁵ Lucian Navig. 28 (iii. 266) "you keep on jeering at my vow (ἐς τέλος... ἐπηρεάζων)," referring to (ib. 25) a previous mockery.

In Lk. xviii. 5 μὴ εἰς τέλος ἐρχομένη ὑπωπιάξῃ με, R.V. has "lest she wear me out by her continual coming," and this is probably correct, as the present subjunctive denotes a continuous "wearing out." Mark and Matthew assign to our Lord the saying, "He that endureth to the end he shall be saved," and this is (no doubt correctly) punctuated as meaning "He that endureth to the end—he shall be saved¹." But even in Greek, apart from Hebrew originals, εἰς τέλος is liable to create confusion by being connected with what precedes instead of with what follows². Much more, in Hebraic Greek, might a doubt arise, whether "to the end" ought not to be connected with "saved" ("he that endureth—to the end shall he be saved") as meaning "saved to the utmost," "saved in body, soul, and spirit." The parallel Luke omits "to the end," but has two clauses, "(1) A hair of your head shall surely not perish, (2) in your endurance ye shall win your souls³." This ("a hair of your head") resembles the saying to the Thessalonians "May the God of peace himself sanctify you wholly, and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ⁴"; whereas the Epistle to the Corinthians rather resembles Matthew and Mark, "Waiting patiently for the revealing of our Lord Jesus Christ who also shall confirm you to the end (ὡς τέλος) unproveable in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ⁵."

³ [2322 b] Lk. xxi. 18—19. Comp. Jas v. 11 "We call blessed them that endure. Ye have heard of the endurance of Job and have seen the end of the Lord," where "end" seems to mean "final salvation," and "endure" is taken absolutely as fn 2 Tim. ii. 12 "if we endure." It is also absolute in 1 Pet. ii. 20, Rom. xii. 12, and should almost certainly be taken so in Heb. xii. 7 "It is for [your] training that ye endure," i.e. God chastens you, not to give you pain, but to train you.

[2323] Returning to xiii. ι εἰς τέλος ἡγάπησεν αὐτούς, we have to bear in mind that John must certainly have known (1) that εἰς τέλος was used in the first century to mean “to the uttermost” and “to the end,” (2) that it was associated with traditions about final salvation after trial or temptation. Further, if we believe that he was acquainted with the first three Gospels, we must suppose him also to have known (3) that two of the three evangelists reported Christ’s saying about the “saving” of those who should “endure to the end,” and that the third had a parallel tradition (in effect) about being “perfectly saved” if men “endured.” It may be also assumed (4) that John does not mean to say merely—a platitude beneath the level of this Gospel—that the Son of God continued steadfastly loving His disciples to the end. (5) It has been shewn (1744 (iv) foll.) that in the Pauline Epistles and elsewhere the aorist ἡγάπησεν is applied to love expressed in action, and especially to the love of God for man expressed in the act of redemption. We may therefore infer that here, as in many other cases, John uses a phrase of ancient Christian tradition in more than one meaning—not excluding the interpretation of Aquila (2320 c) suggesting victory as well as consummation—and that he means something to this effect: “Having loved them before, he now loved them *to the last, in a last and crowning act of victorious love*¹.”

(vi) Ἐκ

(a) Ἐκ meaning “some of,” see 2213—5

(β) Ἐκ meaning “native of,” as distinguished from ἀπό “coming from,” or “resident in,” see 2239—93

[2323 b] There is a similar expression with ὑπεραγαπᾶν and πέρας in Barnabas v. 8 πέρας γέ τοι διδάσκων τὸν Ἰσραὴλ κ. τηλικαῦτα τέρατα κ. σημεῖα ποιῶν ἐκήρυσσεν, κ. ὑπερηγάπησεν αὐτόν, where πέρας means “as a climax” (or “finally”), ὑπέρ means “to the utmost,” and the aorist means that love was expressed in definite action.

(γ) Ἐκ μέτρου

[2324] This phrase occurs in iii. 34 "For he whom God sent speaketh the words of God: for not (lit.) from measure doth he give the spirit. The Father loveth..." It is non-occurent in LXX and the Thesaurus. Ἐν μέτρῳ means "in small measure" in Judith vii. 21, Ezek. iv. 11, 16, but "in large measure" in Ps. lxxx. 5 (where Aq. has τριστόν, and Sym. μέτρῳ without ἐν¹). The Thesaurus gives μέτρῳ for "in due measure," or "by measure," usually in a good sense, and ἐν μέτρῳ for "in metre." The text is uncertain². If "he" could be taken as the Son, the meaning might be "[the Son] doth not give from measure," i.e. from a limited store, it being implied that the store is unlimited from what follows, namely, "He hath given all things into his hand." The objection remains that ἐκ μέτρου is not found in Greek literature³. See 2714.

(δ) Ἐκ with ζῶω and τηρέω

[2325] It has been shewn elsewhere (940) that in LXX, and in John, ἐκ, with σῶζω and τηρέω, does not always imply "take me out of evils in which I am." It may be used in the prayer "Keep me altogether

¹ [2324 a] So, too, Apollinarius here (Cramer ad loc.) ἡμεῖς μὲν οὖν, φησί, μέτρῳ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ Πνεύματος ἐλάβομεν, αὐτὸς δὲ οὐχ οὕτως.

² [2324 b] B omits "the spirit" (but B² adds it in margin): Syr. Burk. "for not by measure did the Father give [the Spirit] to his Son, but he loveth..." SS is partly illegible, but reads "For not by measure gave God the Father, but to his Son [he was loving] and...." Cramer prints a comment of Ammonius, ὅλον ἔχει τὸ Πνεῦμα ὁ Υἱὸς οὐσιωδῶς, οὐ μὴν ἐκ μέρους ὡς κτίσμα: and Wetstein mentions ἐκ μέρους as a substitute for ἐκ μέτρου in three cursives. Many MSS. and versions insert ὁ θεὸς after δίδωσιν.

[2324 d] Ἐκ μέτρου might conceivably be a way of expressing ἐκμετρος i.e. "outside measure" so as to mean that the fulness of the gift of the Spirit to the incarnate Son was not "beyond the measure of His stature" (comp. Eph. iv. 13). But this adj., though freq. in non-Hebraic Greek, does not occur in LXX; and ἐκ μέτρου, in such a sense, is still more improbable. See 2714.

out of evil" and is probably thus used in xii. 27 "save me from (ἐκ) this hour" and xvii. 15 "keep them from (ἐκ) the evil [one] (τοῦ πονηροῦ)."

(ε) Ἐκ, ἀπό, and παρά, with ἐξέρχομαι

[2326] These three prepositions are used as follows to describe the coming forth of the Son from the Father:—

(1) (ἐκ) viii. 42 "For I came forth from (ἐκ) the Father and am come (ἦκω)," where the first clause expresses origin rather than coming, and the origin of the Son is contrasted with the origin of the Jews, who are said to be (viii. 44) "from their father the devil (ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς τοῦ διαβόλου)": xvi. 28 "I came forth from (ἐκ) the Father and have come (ἐλήλυθα) into (εἰς) the world," where the preceding verse says παρά τ. πατρὸς ἐξήλθον, i.e. "from the side, bosom, or home, of the Father," but this states merely origin, "out of" contrasted with "into," without the suggestion of domesticity or affection.

[2327] (2) (ἀπό) The words of the evangelist, xiii. 3 "Knowing that...from (ἀπό) God he came forth and unto (πρός) God he goeth back," are to be compared with those of the disciples, xvi. 30 "Herein we believe that from (ἀπό) God thou camest forth," where the disciples alter the words of their Master in repeating them, for Christ had said (xvi. 27) "I came forth from the side of (παρά) the Father," and (xvi. 28) "I came forth (lit.) out of (ἐκ) the Father." The disciples repeat neither of these prepositions. Possibly the same feeling that induces them to alter "Father" to "God" induces also the change from παρά and ἐκ to ἀπό. It is not for them to lay stress on the domesticity of the relation between the Father and the Son. The same feeling may have influenced the evangelist.

[2328] (3) (παρά) xvi. 27 "For the Father of himself taketh you as friends (φιλεῖ ὑμᾶς) because ye have taken me as friend (ἐμὲ πεφιλήκατε) and have believed that I came forth from the side of (παρά) the Father." Here the personal preposition is used because personal feeling predominates—the notion of a household bound together by affection. The same explanation applies to xvii. 8 "They [i.e. the disciples] recognised (ἐγνώσαν) in truth (ἀληθῶς) that I came forth from thy side (παρὰ σοῦ) and believed that thou didst send me." This is the last statement of the Son about His coming forth, and it seems appropriate that it should use the personal preposition. On φιλεῖ, see 1728 p and 2584 c.

(ζ) Ἐκ with πληρόω and γεμίζω

[2329] In xii. 3 “but the house was filled full (ἐπληρώθη) from (ἐκ) the odour of the ointment,” B reads ἐπλήσθη (for ἐπληρώθη) and this is the word used in 2 Chr. vii. 1 “the glory of the Lord filled (ἐπλήσε) the house,” as also by NA in Is. vi. 4 “the house was filled (LXX ἐνεπλήσθη) with smoke.” But perhaps John uses πληρόω to suggest spiritual filling, such as makes the Church really the Church, the full-filling, or Pleroma, of divine graces and powers. And some symbolism of this kind may also explain ἐκ, which is very rarely indeed used with verbs of filling in LXX and N.T.¹ It might be originally merely a Hebraistic form, such as may be found in the Apocalypse, in which ἐκ expressed the Hebrew preposition used with “fill.” But John might give it a spiritual application by taking the house as the House of God, i.e. the Church, which is “fulfilled,” i.e. brought into the fulness of the glory of Christ, as a result of (ἐκ) this sacrifice of sweet savour. Origen takes some such view of the “house,” which he calls “omnem hujus mundi domum ac totius ecclesiae domum².”

² [2329 b] Hom. on Cant. i. 12. He takes the fragrance however to be that of the “odor doctrinae qui procedit de Christo et sancti Spiritus fragrantia.”

³ Origen Comm. Matth. about “the seven loaves.”

κλασμάτων should be connected—as probably in Luke¹ (though Luke may mean “pieces broken for distribution”)—and that the meaning may be, as in the Syriac, “filled twelve baskets-of-fragments from the five barley loaves²,” taking γεμίζω and ἐκ together.

(vii) Ἐμπροσθεν

[2330] Ἐμπροσθέν σου occurs in Matthew and Luke (“prepare... before thee”) quoting Malachi about the messenger that was to “prepare the way,” and applying the prophecy to John the Baptist as being the messenger. In Malachi, both the Hebrew and the LXX have “before my face,” πρὸ προσώπου μου, instead of “before thee.” Mark omits the clause with “prepare,” but has “send my messenger before thy face (πρὸ προσώπου σου),” and attributes the prophecy to “Isaiah.” These facts shew that there were early Greek variations as to ἔμπροσθεν applied to the Baptist as being the forerunner of Christ. Like the English “before” (in “placed before,” “stands before,” “ranked before”) so ἔμπροσθεν, in certain contexts, might mean “superior to,” “above [in esteem].” This word, belonging to the Matthew-Luke tradition, is put by John thrice into the mouth of the Baptist himself testifying twice, (i. 15, 30) “He is become before me,” i.e. “ranked before me,” and, in the third instance, (iii. 28) “I have been sent before him,” i.e. as His herald or harbinger³.

² [2329 (i) β] The Syr. (Burk.) has “they gathered and filled twelve baskets of fragments from the five pieces of barley-bread—those which remained over from them that ate” (SS “they gathered them, the fragments that remained over of them and filled twelve baskets, the superabundance of those five loaves of barley and of those two fishes. Now the men that had eaten of that bread had been five thousand”). The Latin versions also have “fragmentorum” which prob. depends on “cophinos.”

³ [2330 α] See 830—5, where this Johannine use of ἔμπροσθεν should have been noted. In Heb., Gesen. 817 b mentions only two instances of Malachi’s word as denoting superiority, Gen. xlviii. 20 “set Ephraim before Manasseh (ἐθήκεν... ἔμπροσθεν),” Job xxxiv. 19 (LXX confused). Ἐμπροσθεν does not mean “superior” elsewhere in N.T., for Jn x. 4 “[the shepherd] goeth before them” is not an instance. No instance quoted by Steph. means “superior” except Plato 631 D ταῦτα δὲ πάντα ἐκείνων ἔμπροσθεν τέτακται φύσει, “these have a natural superiority to those,” but comp. Plato 744 A σωφροσύνης ἔμπροσθεν ὑγίειαν... ποιῶν τιμίαν, and 805 D ἔμπροσθεν... θεῖμεν ἄν.

(α) 'ΕΝ used metaphorically, e.g. "abide in," see 1881

(β) 'ΕΝ used temporally

[2331] ii. 19—20 "Destroy this temple and [with]in (ἐν) three days I will raise it up...thou within (ἐν)¹ three days wilt raise it up²!" The corresponding utterance in Mark and Matthew (omitted by Luke) has "after an interval of (διά) three days," and the context leaves the impression that no such words proceeded from Jesus but only from false witnesses. In the predictions of the Resurrection, whereas Mark has "after (μετά³) three days" (1297, 1301—2) Matthew and Luke have "the third day," and as these early variations cannot well be regarded as accidental, we are led to infer that something may be intended by John's variations here ("in" and "within"). B's reading represents Jesus as saying "in three days" and the Jews as quoting Him not quite correctly, "within three days." If the evangelist wrote this, his meaning may be that the Jews, while slightly exaggerating what Jesus had actually said⁴, nevertheless (by a sort of irony of Providence) more exactly predicted that which actually came to pass: Christ did raise up the Temple of His body "within three days"⁵. See 2715.

² [2331 β] The first ἐν is om. by B but ins. by N, the second ἐν is om. by N, α has "in triduo...tribus diebus," β "in triduo...in triduo," ε "in trib (sic) diebus ...in triduo."

⁴ There are many other instances in which Jesus is not quoted exactly; but the whole subject of quotations and repetitions in Jn is attended with great difficulty: they are so frequently inaccurate (2544—53).

⁵ [2331 γ] It would be wrong to translate Mk xiv. 58, Mt. xxvi. 61 διὰ τριῶν ἡμερῶν, "within three days," or anything but "after an interval of three days" (comp. Mk ii. 1 δι' ἡμερῶν), just as Mk viii. 31 μετὰ τ. ἡ. must be rendered "after three days." And these two expressions must be reconciled with τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ partly (see Field on Mt. xvi. 21) by Greek looseness of expression, and partly by Biblical influence. As regards Acts i. 3 δι' ἡμερῶν τεσσαράκοντα, Cramer publishes, as from Chrys., "he said not for forty days but (?) at intervals during forty days, for He was [during that time, now] approaching nigh and [now] removing again," οὐ γὰρ εἶπε τεσσαράκοντα ἡμέρας ἀλλὰ δι' ἡμερῶν τεσσαράκοντα· ἐφίστατο γὰρ καὶ ἀφίστατο πάλιν. If that is the writer's meaning, he gives to διὰ with ἡμερῶν an unprecedented rendering, which completely changes the sense. No authority

(γ) ἘΝ quasi-instrumental

[2332] John does not use the Hebraic ἐν for "with" in such phrases as "slay with the sword¹": but Hebraic influence may in part account for his use of ἐν τούτῳ where many would use διὰ τούτου "hereby": xiii. 35 "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." In part it may arise from his proneness to see things as though they were going on in spiritual regions (e.g. light, darkness, love), "In this region shall men for it is alleged by Blass (p. 313) except Mk xiv. 58, Mt. xxvi. 61, which, as stated above, must be rendered "after an interval of." D omits διὰ in Acts but places it above the line between τεσσ. and ἡμ., d has "post dies quadraginta." This makes excellent sense, "After an interval of forty days, giving them a vision of himself (ὁπτανόμενος αὐτοῖς) and speaking of the things concerning the kingdom of God, and (?) uniting himself with [them] (συναλιζόμενος), he exhorted them not to separate from Jerusalem." This would vividly represent what the Lord said and did in His last manifestation. The words attributed to Chrys. are not quite incompatible with the meaning in D, "After forty days [from the Resurrection] appearing [for the last time]." Chrys. may mean, "Luke said 'after,' not 'during,' for [during all those days] He came and went [not appearing continuously]."

[2331 d] Jn xx. 26 "after eight days," indicates that Christ had not appeared to the disciples since the appearance last (xx. 19) recorded, and favours the view that the manifestations after the Resurrection were not continuous. It also shews how divergent traditions about the intervals might arise; for the Hebraic phrase δι' ἡμερῶν "after [some] days," being as strange in classical Gk as in English, might be supposed to have accidentally omitted the number. Hence Η, "eight," or Μ, "forty," might naturally be inserted, being supposed to have dropped out before Η in ΗΜΕΡΩΝ. Even if Chrys. interpreted διὰ as meaning "at intervals during," it is impossible to accept his interpretation without a great deal of evidence for such a use of διὰ with a plural ("days," "years" etc.). See 2715.

[2331 e] In Lk. ix. 37 τῇ ἑξῆς ἡμέρᾳ, D has διὰ τῆς ἡμέρας, d "per diem," Syr. "on that day again (SS om. again)." The Gk of D, if it is another way of saying τῇ ἑξῆς ἡ., must mean "after the interval of the day," but seems to have been taken by the Latin translator as meaning "in the course of the day."

¹ [2332 a] Rev. vi. 8 ἀποκτείνει ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ. Comp. Lk. xxii. 49 ἐν μαχαίρῃ. A Tebtunis Papyrus 16 (B.C. 114) has ἐν μαχαίρῃ—and others (ib. 41, 45, 46, 47) have the same phrase (in pl.)—to express "[armed] with a sword." Comp. ib. 48 Λύκος σὺν ἄλλοις ἐν ὅπλοις, foll. by καὶ σπασαμένων τὰς μαχαίρας. As ἐν ὅπλοις practically means ὀπλοφόρος, "bearing arms," so ἐν μαχαίρῃ by analogy might come to mean μαχαίροφόρος, "bearing a sword." None of these papyrus passages have a verb like ἀποκτείνω or πατάσσω, as in Rev., Lk., and LXX (2 K. xix. 37, Jer. xxvi. 23 etc., where ἐν represents Heb. "in"). So, too, 1 Cor. iv. 21 ἐν ῥάβδῳ ἐλθεῖν—until instances are alleged from non-Hebraic Gk of ἐρχομαι ἐν—must be regarded as akin to 1 S. xvii. 43 ἐρχῃ...ἐν ῥάβδῳ καὶ λίθοις, ib. 45 ἐρχῃ...ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ, 2 S. xxiii. 21 κατέβη...(Field) ἐν ῥάβδῳ, parall. 1 Chr. xi. 23 κατέβη...ἐν ῥάβδῳ. The Targum follows the Heb. in using "in," and Deissmann (p. 120) gives no reason for rejecting the obvious explanation that the Pauline phrase had a Semitic origin.

discern that...," namely, in Christian fellowship. So xvii. 10 "I have been glorified in them" does not, perhaps, mean merely "in their hearts" (still less merely "by them") but "in the Church" as represented by the small band of disciples: and xvi. 30 "In this we believe that thou camest forth from God" may be intended to suggest the thought that, after wandering in the dark, the disciples, finding that Jesus miraculously knows their thoughts, seem to themselves to have emerged into light: "In [the light of] this [thy saying], we believe...."

(δ) ἘΝ used locally, ἐν τῷ τριζοφυλακίῳ (viii. 20)

[2333] viii. 20 "These words he spake in (ἐν) the Treasury teaching in the Temple." As no authority has been alleged for the supposition that the Treasury (τριζοφυλάκιον) was open to the public¹, it has been suggested that ἐν must here mean "near." But no authority for this hypothesis is alleged from N.T. Either therefore we must suppose that (1) a special part of the Women's Court, opposite the Treasury, was familiarly known as "the Treasury," or else that (2) John has used the expression loosely for some other reason. In support of (1), no instance has been alleged.

[2334] It is true that, according to the LXX of Nehemiah, the people were to bring their gifts "to the Treasury²," and this might suggest that the public had access to the Treasury. But according to Mark, Jesus stood "opposite the Treasury" when He taught the disciples to judge the widow's gift not as man sees it, but as God sees it; why then did not John adhere to Mark's tradition (supposing him to have known it) and say, "These things spake Jesus teaching opposite the Treasury"? May not the reason be that, from the symbolical point of view, the old phrasing was not quite appropriate? John perhaps accepted from the Synoptists the tradition that the Treasury was the scene of Christ's doctrine about judgment concerning gifts, as judged by man and as judged by God. But he may have also adopted a further tradition that His doctrine on that occasion included judgment in general (viii. 15 "ye judge after the flesh"), since the whole life of man may be regarded as a "gift" or "offering" to God¹. From his point of view, then, the Treasury has

² [2334 a] Nehem. x. 37 "to the chambers of the house of our God," εἰς τριζοφυλάκιον οἶκον τοῦ θεοῦ. This might give the impression that the people came into the Treasury.

¹ [2334 b] Mt. xxiii. 25 and Lk. xi. 42 protest against the tithing of mint, when accompanied by the neglect of "judgment." Mt. xii. 7 says, "If ye had known what that means, 'I will have mercy and not sacrifice,' ye would not have condemned the guiltless." Compare the tradition of Micah (vi. 7—8) that "to do justly" is better than offerings of "thousands of rams," and "rivers of oil." The Treasury, the receptacle of God's offerings, might well seem an appropriate place for doctrine about "doing justly" or "judging righteous judgment."

Note also the following uses of ἐν :—

[2334 c] 'Εν χειρὶ in iii. 35 πάντα δέδωκεν ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ is Hebraic as compared with xiii. 3 πάντα ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ εἰς τὰς χεῖρας. The second is the more emphatic—"gave him all things [giving them absolutely] into his hands." But indiscriminative writers or translators might use the two indifferently as in Josh. x. 30, 32 (bis) "delivered into the hand of Israel," Heb. "gave, or placed, in the hand," LXX εἰς χεῖρας...εἰς τὰς χεῖρας, but A ἐν χειρὶ...εἰς τὰς χεῖρας. Comp. Dan. i. 2 Theod. ἔδωκεν ἐν χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, LXX παρέδωκεν...εἰς χεῖρας αὐτοῦ.

[2334 d] The interpolation in v. 4 κατέβαινον ἐν τῇ κολυμβήθρᾳ is probably from a Semitic source. Comp. Judg. vii. 9 κατέβηθι ἐν (A εἰς) τῇ παρεμβολῇ and 1 S. xiv. 21 "into (marg. in) the camp," Josh. viii. 13 etc. Blass (p. 130) quotes Herm. Sim. i. 6 ἀπέλθης ἐν τῇ πόλει σου, and refers to Clem. Hom. i. 7, xiv. 6, and (p. 313) quotes Epict. i. 11. 32 ἀνέρχῃ ἐν Ῥώμῃ. But in Clem. Hom. i. 7 ἐν πυρὶ ἀσβέστῳ ριφθείσας τὸν αἰῶνα κολασθήσεσθαι, the meaning may be "punished in fire unquenchable." In Clem. Hom. xiv. 6 ἐν ἀλλοδαπῇ ὁρμήσασα is immediately described as ἐν ἀλλοδαπῇ γενομένη. The context lays stress on a voyage by sea, and suggests that the meaning may be, not "having set out in (for to)," but "having found anchorage in (ὁρμέω) a foreign coast." In Epictet., Schweig. says that ἀνέρχῃ covers an erasure, which, he says, may be ἀπέρχῃ. Comp. ib. ii. 20. 33 ἀπελθεῖν ἐν βαλανείῳ. This would reduce the two instances in Epict. to agreement with Herm. Sim. i. 6, and comp. Steph. 1289 D quoting Mustoxydis Anecd. ἀπελθόντος ἐν τῇ πατρίδι, and "alia non minus barbara schol. φοιτητῆς ὁ συνεχῶς παρὰ τῷ διδασκάλῳ ἀπερχόμενος." The facts indicate that in vernacular Gk, independent of Semitic influence, the use of ἐν was freq. with ἀπέρχεσθαι but not with other verbs of motion. Epictet. elsewhere uses ἀνέρχομαι with εἰς, and also absolutely (but not with ἐν), of "going up [to Rome]." Ἀπέρχομαι ἐν seems to have meant "I go and stay in [a place]." But the Fayûm Pap. 116, 138 give ἀπελθεῖν εἰς πόλιν (not ἐν, though the writers are illiterate).

a typical meaning. It belongs to the Father, and the Son comes to visit it in order to inspect the offerings made to His Father. In this light—the Son being regarded as Lord of the Treasury—it is more appropriate to think of Him as standing “in” it than “opposite to” it, or “looking up” to it¹.

[2335] Ἐνώπιον occurs only once, xx. 30 (lit.) “Many and other signs therefore on the one hand (πολλὰ μὲν οὖν καὶ ἄλλα² σημεῖα) did Jesus in the sight of (ἐνώπιον) the disciples,” and once in the Epistle, 1 Jn iii. 22 “we do the things that are well pleasing in his sight (ἐ. αὐτοῦ).” Mark and Matthew never use it. Luke uses it twenty-two times, the last instance being (xxiv. 43) “he ate in their sight,” i.e. “in the sight of” the disciples. This refers to the period after Christ’s resurrection: and it is noteworthy that the only Johannine instance of the word refers apparently to the same period, and to events of the same kind i.e. to signs wrought by Jesus “in the sight of” the disciples alone, and not in the sight of the world at large. If the “signs” had not been restricted to the “sight” of “the disciples,” the phrase (it seems probable) would not have been inserted.

(x) Ἐπὶ

(1) Ἐπὶ with Accusative

[2336] Ἐπὶ with accusative, which is frequently found in the Synoptists to express “coming up to” or “against” a person, thing, or place, is never used thus of literal motion by John except in xix. 33 ἐπὶ δὲ τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἐλθόντες. John uses it however of the Spirit (i. 33, 51) “coming down on” a person, and in vi. 16 “came down on (R.V. unto) the sea.” On the reading in xxi. 4 ἔστη ἐπὶ, where no verb of motion is expressed, see 2307 a.

² [2335 a] This use of “and” after “many,” though (Steph.) regular in classical prose, is not found elsewhere in N.T. except in Luke iii. 18 πολλὰ μὲν οὖν καὶ ἕτερα, and Acts xxv. 7. Jn xxi. 25 ἔστιν δὲ καὶ ἄλλα πολλὰ omits “and.” Both in the use of ἐνώπιον, and in the insertion of καὶ, this passage resembles the style of Luke. Also μὲν οὖν, which occurs in Jn only here and xix. 24, is extremely frequent in the Acts. Ἐνώπιον, in Lk., in connexion with “eating,” occurs in Lk. xiii. 26, “we did eat and drink in thy presence...,” where Mt. vii. 22 has “we prophesied in thy name....” Justin Mart. Apol. 16, Tryph. 76 has “we did eat and drink in thy name.” So has Origen repeatedly (Huet ii. 389—90, 393, Cels. ii. 49). Acts x. 41 has (Peter’s speech) συνεφάγομεν κ. συνεπίομεν αὐτῷ, Ign. Smyrn. 3 συνεφαγεν [i.e. the Lord] αὐτοῖς καὶ συνέπιεν ὡς σαρκικός.... The narrative of Jn xxi. 13 describes the disciples as eating in Christ’s presence and from His hand, but makes no mention of His eating.

(2) Ἐπὶ with Dative

[2337] Ἐπὶ, “close on,” “at,” “by,” in iv. 6 ἐπὶ τῇ πηγῇ, and in v. 2 ἐπὶ τῇ προβατικῇ, calls for no comment. In the latter, ἐπὶ—since it might be thus used whether the meaning were “by a gate” or “by a pool”—throws no light on the disputed ellipsis (2216).

[2338] In iv. 27 “And upon this (ἐπὶ τούτῳ) came his disciples and were amazed that he was speaking with a woman,” it has been shewn (1673 a) that “amazed” probably conveys a notion of being “shocked” or “scandalized.” “Upon this,” literally “on the top of this,” is frequent in classical Greek, where ἐπὶ occurs not only in such phrases as “evil on evil,” “one on another,” but also in the ordinary meaning of sequence, “on this,” “hereon,” “hereupon.” But in N.T. this use of ἐπὶ τούτῳ—apart from some verb preparing the way for ἐπὶ—is unique¹. Origen has ἐπὶ τοῦτο: SS has “while they [were] speaking”; the Latin versions, “meanwhile,” “forthwith” etc.; D^s*, ἐν. Chrysostom says, “‘Upon this came His disciples’: they came most seasonably when the teaching of the Lord had been completed²”—perhaps meaning “Jesus had just time to utter the words, I am He,” whereas the writer of SS (“while they were speaking [as above described]”) perhaps means “The woman had not time to add a word of question.” Both interpretations appear to recognise the exceptional meaning of “upon this” by an attempt to paraphrase it. The context supposes that the disciples did not hear Christ’s words; else they would have been “amazed” at what He said, not at the mere fact that He “spake with a woman”: but they came up just in time to prevent the woman from saying anything more.

[2339] In xii. 16 ταῦτα ἦν ἐπ’ αὐτῷ γεγραμμένα, D reads περί (comp. v. 46 περὶ γὰρ ἐμοῦ ἐκείνος ἔγραψεν) which would be the usual preposition if the meaning were simply “concerning”: but ἐπὶ “on the basis of” (not εἰς, “with a view to”), means that the Scripture was, by foreknowledge, "based on," and "adapted to," the act of Christ that fulfilled it. The context is quite different in Lk. xxiii. 38 ἐπιγραφὴ ἐπ' αὐτῷ: but probably ἐπί, there too, means "suited to the case of," and hence "concerning"—not "over his head" (506 (i) δ).

² [2338 a] Σφόδρα εἰς καιρὸν ἀπήντησαν τῆς διδασκαλίας ἀπαρτισθείσης. On Origen (ad loc.) ἐπὶ τοῦτο, note confusion of ο and ω. Nonnus is strangely confused, Χριστὸς ἐγὼ γενόμεν· οὐ δεύτερος ἄλλος ἰκάνει· Οὐδέ μιν ἤρετο Πέτρος ἄτε θρασύς....

(3) Ἐπί with Genitive

(a) Ἐπί τῆς θαλάσσης (vi. 19, xxi. 1)

[2340] John seldom uses ἐπί with genitive, for it does not (1882) lend itself to metaphor. The only instance of ἐπί with the genitive in Christ's words is in xvii. 4 "I have glorified thee on the earth." But the following passages claim attention:—vi. 19—21 "They behold Jesus walking on (? near) the sea (περιπατοῦντα ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης)...and straightway the boat (lit.) became on (? near) the land (εὐθέως ἐγένετο τὸ πλοῖον ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς) to which they were returning (εἰς ἣν ὑπῆγον)," xxi. 1 "After these things Jesus manifested himself again to the disciples on (? near) the sea (ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης) of Tiberias."

[2341] In the latter, there is no intention to represent Jesus as walking on the sea, for it is expressly said that "Jesus *stood on the beach*¹." Why, then, does not John use the customary² phrase "by (παρά) the sea"? Turning to the Synoptic account of the Walking on the Sea³, we find that Matthew curiously differs from Mark and John. Matthew has the phrase first with the accusative, "He came toward them walking on (? over) the sea (ἐπὶ τὴν θ.);"; then with the genitive, "seeing him on the sea (ἐπὶ τῆς θ.) walking." This change of case may be explained as follows, from a desire to clear up an early obscurity attaching to the phrase "on the sea," and to the word "walk."

[2342] "On the sea" is ambiguous—capable of meaning "near the sea," as when we say that a city "lies on the sea"—and more ambiguous in Greek than in English. We could not say, of a person, "he stood on the sea," for "on the edge of the sea." But Greek and Hebrew can say this. Moreover περιπατεῖν means as a rule "walk about" and not "walk" in the sense of progression.

³ Mk vi. 48—9, Mt. xiv. 25—6, not in Lk.

In LXX it is used of "walking to and fro," on a roof, or palace wall¹, and in classical Greek it was so frequently used about the "walking up and down" of the philosophic teacher that it gave the name to the Peripatetic philosophy. Plutarch says that people use the term "walk about" concerning those who "move up and down in the porches," not about those who "walk (βαδίζοντας) into the country or to see a friend²." Hence περιπατεῖν could not well mean "walk forward" except in some special context, as where Herodian says "He used to travel with them, mostly walking (περιπατῶν), rarely in carriage or on horseback³." If therefore Matthew desired to use the verb in the sense of "advance," some change in the context might be usefully introduced to suggest this⁴. Now from the time of Job ix. 8, Ps. civ. 3, describing Jehovah as "walking about (περιπατῶν)" on the waters, or on the wings of the wind, are prob. to be expl. in the light of Job xli. 23 (24) (LXX) "he reckoneth the abyss as a portico (ἐὶς περιπατον)," i.e. as a place for walking up and down in. Prov. vi. 28 "walk about on coals" conveys no notion of progressing. The accus. occurs in an erroneous rendering of Is. viii. 7 "go over all his banks," περιπατήσῃ ἐπὶ πάντων τείχεσσι ὑμῶν.

⁴ [2342 d] It may be urged that Mark himself distinctly mentions advancing in the words "*come*th (ἔρχεται) towards them." This is true, but the context indicates varieties of tradition. For (1) Mark adds "he wished to (lit.) come past them (ἤθελεν παρελθεῖν αὐτούς)." (2) Matthew omits this, but has ἦλθεν instead of ἔρχεται. (3) John also omits this ("wished to pass by") but has ἦλθεν in quite a different context ("they wished to receive him"). (4) Παρελθεῖν, instead of "pass by," might mean "come to [them]" in classical Greek, and might be taken by some as having that meaning here. (5) The three words ἠθέλων, ἠθελεν, and ἦλθεν might be easily confused. (6) The tradition that Jesus "wished to pass by the disciples"—and presumably gave up His wish—is fraught with great difficulty. (7) Matthew alone introduces a story about Peter here, asking Jesus to bid him "come" to Him "over the waters (ἐπὶ τὰ ὕδατα)," and then Peter "walked over the waters (περιεπάτησεν ἐπὶ τὰ ὕδατα)" and "came to Jesus." Taking all these facts into consideration we appear to be justified in inferring that Matthew's reason for deviating from Mark's use of the genitive (which is also the usage of the LXX) in the first instance in which he speaks about the "walking," was, that he desired to emphasize the meaning "walking onward," as distinct from "walking about."

[2342 e] Περιπατέω in N.T. means (1) "walk about," (2) "walk in love, faith, light etc." Applied to the lame, or paralysed, it may mean "recover the power of walking." When applied to Jesus, it probably means in most cases, as in classical Greek, "walk about while teaching." Where Mark describes Jesus as (xi. 27) "walking about in the Temple," Matthew has (xxi. 23) "came into the

Homer and Hesiod, ἐπί with the accusative of θάλασσαν, πόντον etc. was extremely common in the sense of sailing, advancing etc. over the sea or ocean¹. Consequently, by the slight change of the genitive

Temple," and Luke (xx. 1) "teaching the people in the Temple and preaching the Gospel"; and this is probably the real meaning of Mark's tradition. For several authors use the word thus (Steph.) Philostr. p. 21 "lecturing to one's audience (περιπατοῦντος ἐς τοὺς ἀκροωμένους)," ib. 302 "lecturing to people that are in a state of depression (π. ἐς ἀνθρώπους ἀθύμως ἔχοντας)," Diog. Laert. vii. 109 "Ask and answer and lecture (τὸ ἐρωτᾶν καὶ ἀποκρίνεσθαι καὶ περιπατεῖν)." As Jewish teachers "sat" while teaching, περιπατέω would not probably be applied to Jesus in this sense, except either as a Greek paraphrase, or as referring to His "going from place to place" while preaching the Gospel.

[2342*f*] Mt. iv. 18 περιπατῶν (Mk i. 16 παράγων) δὲ παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν τῆς Γ. occurs before the call of Peter. The corresponding narrative in Lk. v. 1 has ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ τὸν ὄχλον ἐπικεῖσθαι αὐτῷ καὶ ἀκούειν τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ἐστὼς παρὰ τὴν λίμνην Γεννησαρέτ. If this detail in Lk. is parallel to the detail in Mk-Mt., Lk. would seem, as above, to have taken π. as "teach." In Lk.'s sequel, Jesus goes into a boat and (v. 3) "sitting down, from (ἐκ) the vessel he taught the multitudes." This resembles an incident, omitted by Luke, but recorded by Mark and Matthew before the Parable of the Sower, where the three Synoptists relate the gathering of a crowd. Mark and Matthew add:—

"...so that he himself went into a boat and sat in (ἐν) the sea, and all the multitude were toward the sea on (or, on the edge of, ἐπὶ) the land (ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς)."

Mt. xiii. 2

"...so that he himself went into a boat and sat, and all the multitude had taken up its stand on the beach (ἐπὶ τὸν αἰγιαλὸν ἰσθήκει)."

[2342*g*] The facts indicate that there were many traditions about Jesus teaching the disciples "in the sea" or "by the sea." It is not at all likely that περιπατήσεν ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης ἐλς τοὺς μαθητάς originally meant (according to the idiom of Philostratus) "He discoursed, on the edge of the sea, to the disciples"—for the idiom was probably confined to educated writers. But, reversely, it is possible that the original and poetical tradition about Jesus walking on the sea to the disciples may have been explained by some as meaning that He "stood on the edge of the sea and discoursed to them," or else "He, in the sea, i.e. in a boat on the sea, discoursed to the disciples."

[2342*h*] In Jn xii. 35 "Walk about (περιπατεῖτε) (R.V.) while (ὥς) ye have the light," the Syr. (Burk. txt) has "walk in the light"; and a little later (xii. 36) instead of "believe in (ἐλς) the light," Chrysostom has "walk [having regard] to (ἐλς) the light." If ὥς meant "while," we should have to interpret the former passage "Be active," "be doing," assuming that the "walking about" is in the paths of righteousness; but more probably (2201) ὥς means "as" and the sense is "Walk according as ye have the light."

to the accusative, Matthew suggests that the meaning of the old tradition was not "walking about on the edge of the sea," but "walking over the sea [toward the disciples]." In the light of this, his readers would naturally interpret the next clause as "having beheld him, on the sea, walking [towards them]."

[2343] Mark's narrative suffers from ambiguity. He has the same two phrases as Matthew, but with the ambiguous genitive in both clauses. John has only one clause, and that contains the ambiguous genitive, "They behold Jesus walking on the sea (ἐπὶ τῆς θ.).¹"

[2344] The variations may be illustrated by the description (LXX) of Israel "encamped by the [Red] Sea." The Hebrew preposition means literally "upon." In the first instance, LXX renders this literally by ἐπὶ with the genitive, but a few verses afterwards by παρά with the accusative², which is the regular rendering all through the Bible, παρὰ θάλασσαν being very frequent whereas ἐπὶ θαλάσσης is extremely rare. When the latter occurs in the Psalms (R.V.) "terrible things by (Heb. on) the Red Sea," the Hebrew writer and the Greek translator (who uses ἐπὶ with the genitive) may be alluding to the passage in Exodus where the meaning is "on the edge of the sea."³

[2345] It appears, then, that the phrase used twice by Mark, "on the sea," is, both in Hebrew and in Greek, ambiguous. Matthew alters it in one case so as to make the meaning clear, "walking over the sea." John retains "walking on the sea." In view of Matthew's alteration, and of Luke's omission of the whole story, it is reasonable to conclude that there were early divergences of opinion as to the meaning of "on the sea" and to regard it as probable that John intended "walking on the sea" to mean something different from Matthew's "walking over the sea"—something more in accordance with the usage of Polybius—who describes the Roman soldiers as "standing on (i.e. on the edge of) the sea¹," and not venturing into it in order to attack the Carthaginians—and also in accordance with the LXX version of the Deliverance on the Red Sea and the allusion to it in the Psalms. And this hypothesis is made all the more probable because we thereby interpret the Johannine "on the sea" precisely as we are to interpret the Johannine "on the land" in the same story, and also as we interpret the Johannine "on the sea" in the narrative of the manifestation after the Resurrection. In each of these three cases "on" means "close to," "on the edge of."

² [2344 a] Ex. xiv. 2 ἐπὶ τῆς θ., xiv. 9 παρὰ τὴν θ. Ἐπὶ τὴν θ. occurs in Ex. xiv. 16, 21 etc. of Moses "stretching out his hand over the sea."

[2346] It has been shewn elsewhere that John's use of the rare (1735 b c) word ΗΘΕΛΩΝ in the context indicates that he was writing with allusion to Mark's ΗΘΕΛΕΝ. Mark had said that Jesus "willed" to pass by the disciples. John says that the disciples "willed" to receive Jesus: and then there was a miracle. The boat was "immediately on the edge of the shore"! But the difference between the Synoptic and the Johannine miracle is this, that in the former the Lord comes to the disciples, in the latter He draws the disciples to Himself². See also 2716—7.

² [2346 a] John, like Origen, may have regarded the story as typical of the Storm of Temptation. The narrative has some points of similarity to that of Adam and Eve, when they, after yielding to temptation, heard the voice of "the Lord God walking (περιπατοῦντος)," and they were afraid. Before they had tasted of evil, says Philo (on Gen. iii. 8), they were at rest themselves and believed God to be at rest: now, being themselves in commotion, they impute motion to Him. This is not the place to discuss the relation between the two Johannine descriptions of Jesus "on the edge of the sea (ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης)" of Tiberias—one before, one after, the Resurrection. But, as regards the former, the facts indicate that John found this ambiguous phrase in the Original Greek Tradition. Instead of omitting it, or altering it, he desired to set forth what appeared to him the true and spiritual traditions containing it. In other words, whereas Luke omits, John intervenes and explains.

[2346 b] The Acts of John says § 2 (ed. James) "When He had chosen Peter and Andrew, who were brethren, He cometh to me and to my brother James, saying, 'I have need of you: come unto Me.' And my brother <hearing> that, said 'John, what would this child have that called to us upon the shore?' (καὶ ὁ ἄ. μου τοῦτο εἶπεν, 'Ἰ. τὸ παιδίον τοῦτο <τὸ> ἐπὶ τοῦ αἰγιαλοῦ καλέσαν ἡμᾶς τί βούλεται;)."

[2346 c] The narrative goes on to say that, when they had "brought the ship to

(β) Ἐπὶ τοῦ σταυροῦ (xix. 19)

[2347] Jn xix. 19 ἐπὶ τοῦ σταυροῦ—which is parallel to Lk. xxiii. 38 ἐπ' αὐτοῦ, R.V. "over him," but better, perhaps, "concerning him" (506 (i) b)—requires in itself no grammatical comment, but perhaps points to mistranslation of Semitic tradition by one or more of the evangelists.

(xi) Κατά

[2348] Κατά, in the Synoptists, is occasionally used of locality, both with genitive and with accusative. In John it is never thus used. In Mark, it occurs no less than seven times in the phrase κατ' ἰδίαν, "privately." John never represents Jesus as doing anything "privately" (comp. xviii. 20). This is one explanation of the rarity of κατά in John as compared with Mark. It is interesting to note that one out of two instances with the genitive, and one out of eight instances with the accusative, occur in interpolations (viii. 6, v. 4). The phrase εἰς καθ' εἰς is also part of an interpolation (viii. 9).

(xii) Μετά

(a) Μετὰ Ἰουδαίου (iii. 25)

[2349] Μετά with the accusative requires no comment, meaning almost always "after," of time, as in the Synoptists¹.

Μετά with the genitive of the person in N.T. regularly means "in company with," and frequently "associated with (as a friend)," "on the side of." Except in Revelation, it is not used in N.T. with verbs land," the brothers presently saw Jesus "helping along with us to settle the ship (τὸ πλοῖον ἐδράσωμεν)." For this remarkable expression comp. (Steph.) Callixenus Athen. 15, p. 204 D ἐδρασθῆναι τὸ πλοῖον ἀσφαλῶς ἐπὶ τῶν φαλάγγων (i.e., Steph. viii. 603, on the (1) "stocks" or (2) "rollers"), and Constantin. Basil. Mac. c. 34, p. 90 ἐπὶ τινος ἀσφαλοῦς ἐλπίδος ἐδρασθῆναι (metaph.). In N.T. also we have "hope" connected with steadfastness in two metaphors, (1) Col. i. 23 τεθεμελιωμένοι καὶ ἐδραῖοι καὶ μὴ μετακινούμενοι ἀπὸ τῆς ἐλπίδος..., (2) Heb. vi. 18—19 ἐλπίδος, ἣν ὡς ἄγκυραν ἔχομεν. This "settling the ship" is perhaps originally derived from some poetic metaphor.

In the historical books of LXX, μετὰ ταῦτα is very common (much more so than μετὰ τοῦτο). It occurs (5) in 1 Mac., but not in 2 Mac., 3 Mac., 4 Mac. It occurs (3) in 1 Esdr. but never in Ezr., which has μετὰ τοῦτο twice. Μετὰ ταῦτα is non-occurrent in Mk and Mt., but it occurs Mk-App. xvi. 12, and in Lk. (both speech and narr.). It is very freq. in Rev. (i. 19, iv. 1, 2, vii. 9 etc.).

of contention e.g. "fight with (i.e. against)¹," a use apparently confined to Hebraic Greek. In John, when it is used of people "talking," or "murmuring," or "questioning with one another (μετ' ἀλλήλων)²," the speakers are all on one side—either the Jews against Jesus, or the disciples wishing to question Jesus (not some for, others against, Him). And συνζητεῖν, ζήτησις etc. elsewhere are found with πρός or σύν or dative, but not with *μετά*³. These facts bear on the interpretation of iii. 25 (lit.) "There arose therefore a questioning from (? 2350) (ἐκ) the disciples of John along with (μετά) a Jew about purifying, and they came to John and said to him, Rabbi,..."

[2350] The whole of the context—which turns on the possibility of rivalry between the Baptist and Christ, who had come into the Baptist's neighbourhood—suggests that the Jews and some of the Baptist's disciples wished to incite the Baptist to jealousy. If we take ζήτησις to mean (as it does in the Acts and Pastoral Epistles) a quarrel⁴, and a quarrel about some matter that seems to the writer unimportant, we can give μετά its usual Johannine signification by supposing (1) a parenthesis after "quarrel⁵," (2) an ellipsis of τινες, "some," after ἐκ (2213—5), (3) μετά meaning "allied with": "There arose therefore a quarrel—[some] of the disciples of John [siding] with a Jew [or, Jews] about purifying; and they came to John and said, Rabbi,..." i.e. they tried to rouse him to jealousy of Jesus⁶. Nonnus has ἔρις... Ἰωάνναο μαθηταῖς Ἑβραίου μετὰ φωτός.

⁶ [2350 c] The Latin versions have "Jews" instead of "Jew" and render ἐκ as follows:—a and f "inter," b "ex," e "de," d "a." They render μετά thus:—a "et" (but a has "inter Judaeos et discipulos Johannis"), b and e "cum," f "et," d "ad." Syr. Burks. has (txt) "among the disciples of John with the Jews," but his marg. gives "of one of the disciples of John with a Jew (or, 'the Jews') S," and the Arabic Diatessaron has "between one of John's disciples and

(β) Οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὄντες (ix. 40)

[2351] In ix. 40 (lit.) "There heard [some] of the Pharisees these things—those that were with him (ἤκουσαν ἐκ τῶν Φ. ταῦτα οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὄντες)," SS has "the Pharisees which were near him." This rendering, if allowable, would remove a great difficulty; for the context represents Christ as severely condemning them, so that "on his side," or "his companions"—the rendering demanded by usage¹—seems out of place here. But (1) μετά is hardly ever used of mere proximity, (2) the article would surely have been omitted, since the sense would require "some, being casually with him." Chrysostom paraphrases it as "following him superficially (ἐπιπολαίως)": but how can the supposition of such an ellipsis be justified? It would be more allowable to suppose that, as in ix. 25 τυφλὸς ὢν means "being once blind," so here οἱ ὄντες means "those who once were." But there the context continues "now I see (ἄρτι βλέπω)," so that the antithesis and the context together make the meaning clear: "Being [known to everyone as] blind," or "being [up to this moment] blind," now I see. Here there is no such context, and no satisfactory explanation presents itself².

(γ) Μετά compared with παρά

[2352] John only once says μένειν μετὰ³, the reason being perhaps one of the Jews." These last two renderings necessitate that the two must be described as going together to John and saying "Rabbi" etc.

[2350 d] Chrysostom supposes that the "Jew" was one of Christ's followers, one whom the disciples of John tried ineffectually to persuade. But this view, besides not explaining μετά, fails to explain why the evangelist here alone uses the word "Jew" instead of "a disciple of Christ," the term he elsewhere applies (xix. 38) to Joseph of Arimathæa.

² [2351 b] Ποτέ, "once," occurs in this narrative, a little earlier (ix. 13) "him that was once blind (τόν ποτε τυφλόν)." And the context implies that, whereas "the once blind" had been caused to see, so, "those who had once seen"—i.e. those who, being Pharisees, had once been disciples of the Lord—had been made blind. It would therefore make good sense to read οἱ ποτε μετ' αὐτοῦ ὄντες, and ποτε might have been dropped owing to its similarity with ὅτε of which it seemed a repetition. But there is no variation in the MSS. except that A places ὄντες before μετ' αὐτοῦ.

that μετά mostly implies companionship, friendly conversation, aid etc., for a special occasion, unless the contrary is implied by adding "for ever" etc.¹ When the Paraclete (i.e. Friend and Helper) is first mentioned, it is with μετά, but qualified by "for ever," then with παρά, "at home with," then with ἐν, as follows, xiv. 16—17 "another Paraclete will he give to you that he may be in companionship with you (μεθ' ὑμῶν) for ever, even the Spirit of truth, which the world is not able to receive, because [the world] doth not behold it or understand it. Ye understand it because it abides, as in a home, with you (παρ' ὑμῖν μένει) and in you it [really] is (καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν ἔστιν, v.r. ἔσται, W.H. txt ἔστίς)."

[2353] Here are three stages of revelation. The first is, that the new Friend—instead of being the companion of the disciples for a few months (like the Lord in the flesh) (μετά)—would be their companion, guide, and prompter, "for ever (εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα)." The second is, that since the companion was the Spirit of Truth and the disciples had a spiritual affinity with Truth, they were already in sympathy with the Spirit, and it was already (in the eyes of the Lord who saw things as they were) at home with them (παρά). The third statement is, that the Spirit was indeed essentially "in them," i.e. in their inmost being (ἐν)². The mss., except BD, read (xiv. 17) ἔσται "shall be in you." But "ye understand it because it shall be in you" makes very poor sense. Our Lord has previously used the present tense to the disciples ("Ye are") telling them that they are (xv. 3) "pure" by reason of "the Word" that He has, as it were, spoken into the hearts of all but Judas. This "word" is regarded as being the beginning of the Spirit, which, therefore, He now says, "in you [essentially] is."

(xiii) Παρά

(1) Παρά with Accusative

[2354] This construction is never used by John. Whereas Mark and Matthew have "by the sea (παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν)" with verbs of rest or motion, and Luke twice has "standing by the lake (ἐστώς, or ἐστῶτα, παρὰ τὴν λίμνην)¹," John, though he at least once describes Jesus as standing by the sea, never uses παρὰ thus. It has been shewn (2340—6) that once at least (and probably twice) he uses ἐπὶ with the genitive to mean "on the edge of the sea."

² [2353 α] In some contexts, ἐν ὑμῖν might mean "among you all" and not "in you individually." But the whole passage indicates that the three prepositions describe three stages of spiritual help for each one of the disciples individually, the Spirit being (1) "by his side," (2) "at home with him," (3) "in his heart." Moreover, the Johannine ἐν almost always means "in," not "among."

(2) Παρά with Dative

(a) Παρά with Dative and μετά with Genitive, see 2352—3

(β) Synoptic and Johannine use

[2355] In the Synoptists, παρὰ τῷ θεῷ, or τῷ πατρί, "with God," or "with the Father," mostly suggests "in the sight of God," "in the estimation of the Father," not "in His, [so to speak, literal] presence." But in John the sense is local and metaphorical, as in viii. 38 "that which I have seen with (παρὰ) the Father," that is "in the home of my Father," or "by the side of my Father." It means the spiritual region that we call "heaven." Compare xvii. 5 "glorify me...by thy side (παρὰ σεαυτῷ)...with the glory that I had by thy side (παρὰ σοί)." In xix. 25 "Now there stood (ἰστήκεισαν δέ) by the cross (παρὰ τῷ σταυρῷ) of Jesus his mother..." there occurs the only instance in N.T. where παρὰ is used with an impersonal dative. It is quoted by Chrysostom with παρεστηκέναι and the dative. Is it possible that "the cross" had already acquired a shade of suggestion of a "sign" or military "standard," so that when Christ's disciples had abandoned Him in the conflict, the women are described as still "standing by the cross," as soldiers "stand by the colours"?

(3) Παρά with Genitive

[2356] On παρὰ and ἐκ, with ἐξέρχομαι, see 2326—8. Παρὰ Κυρίου occurs in Mark and Matthew as a quotation in connexion with the Corner Stone ("This [thing] is from the Lord") and in Luke, in connexion with the Incarnation, just before the Magnificat². In John, παρὰ with genitive almost always means "from [the bosom, or home, or hand, or immediate presence, of]" God³.

² [2356 a] Mk xii. 11, Mt. xxi. 42 (Ps. cxviii. 23). Lk. i. 45 ἔσται τελείωσις... παρὰ Κυρίου, and also i. 37 οὐκ ἀδυνατήσει παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ πᾶν ῥῆμα (alluding to Gen. xviii. 14 "too hard for the Lord," παρὰ τῷ θεῷ ῥῆμα) refer to the Incarnation.

³ In this sense it occurs about 18 times, in other senses about 7 times.

(4) Παρά with Genitive and with Dative interchanged

[2357] In the following, the dative construction is followed by the genitive construction (but D, and most Latin and Syriac versions, have assimilated the latter to the former) viii. 38 ἃ ἐγὼ ἐώρακα παρὰ τῷ πατρὶ λαλῶ· καὶ ὑμεῖς οὖν ἃ ἠκούσατε παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς ποιεῖτε. Commenting on this, Origen adduces vi. 45—6 πᾶς ὁ ἀκούσας παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ μαθὼν ἔρχεται πρὸς ἐμέ. οὐχ ὅτι τὸν πατέρα ἐώρακέν τις εἰ μὴ ὁ ὢν παρὰ [τοῦ] θεοῦ, οὗτος ἐώρακεν τὸν πατέρα. But in the latter Origen reads ὁ ὢν παρὰ τῷ πατρί instead of ὁ ὢν παρὰ [τοῦ] θεοῦ¹, and Chrysostom reads ὁ ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ at least once².

[2358] Retaining the text in vi. 45—6, we may explain ὁ ὢν παρὰ [τοῦ] θεοῦ, like ὁ ὢν εἰς τὸν κόλπον τοῦ πατρὸς above (2308—9), as a combination of rest and motion, suggesting the divine nature of the Son on earth, not “sent from the side, or home, of God” like John the Baptist (i. 6 ἀπεσταλμένος παρὰ) but “BEING from the side of God,” i.e. eternally existing and proceeding from God. There is a distinction between the believer—who (through the Law of Moses and of Nature) “hath heard” voices issuing from the Father’s House and “hath understood” their humanising and loving tendency—and the Son, in the Father’s House, who “hath seen the Father.”

[2359] In viii. 38, the interpretation of the whole largely depends on the interpretation of ποιεῖτε as indicative or imperative, on which see 2193 foll. On this, too, rests in part the application of τοῦ πατρὸς to God, or to Satan (who is shortly afterwards described as the “father” of those whom Jesus is addressing). But in any case there is the same contrast as in vi. 45—6 between the distinctness with which the Son “sees” the things in the House of the Father and the indistinctness with which men receive promptings from the invisible, whether for good or for evil. About the promptings for good Jesus said, "everyone that hath heard and understood." He does not here say, "the things that ye have heard and understood." Perhaps the evangelist wishes to suggest that the muttered instigations to evil need no such effort to "understand" them as is required by the promptings to good.

(xiv) Περί

[2360] Περί with accusative does not occur in John. On the v.r. in xi. 19 τὰς περὶ Μάρθαν, see 1990. With the genitive, περί occurs in John almost as often as in all the Synoptists together, because of the frequency of the Johannine phrases "testify concerning," "speak concerning" etc. This makes it almost certain that περί, the reading of A etc. in i. 30 ὑπὲρ οὗ ἐγὼ εἶπον, is incorrect; for there would have been no temptation to alter it. It also demonstrates that ὑπὲρ οὗ, in that passage, cannot mean precisely "concerning whom," for, had that been the meaning, John would have written περί. See 2369—71. The frequency of περί, and the existence of γράφειν περί in v. 46, shew that xii. 16 ἣν ἐπ' αὐτῷ γεγραμμένα does not mean quite the same as περί αὐτοῦ. See 2339.

(xv) Πρό

(a) Πρὸ ἐμοῦ (x. 8)

[2361] In x. 8 "As many as came before me (πρὸ ἐμοῦ) are all thieves and robbers," the difficulty of "before me" has caused its omission in several versions and quotations, because the phrase might be used against the Prophets and Saints of Israel. Πρό, in some contexts, might mean "in preference to"—as in "Thou shalt have none other gods *before me*¹," if rendered into classical Greek. But πρό, with ἐλθεῖν, could hardly mean anything except "in front of" or "previously to."

[2362] In the second of these two senses, however, the phrase will harmonize with the context, if "before me," referring to what has just been said ("I am the Good Shepherd") can mean "before the coming of the Good Shepherd in the dawn to open the door of the fold and to bring out the flock for pasture." In contrast with Him, the evil shepherds, or hirelings, may be supposed to come prematurely, while it is dark, trying to force their way into the fold in order to steal and kill. Possibly πρὸ ἐμοῦ may be also intended to suggest a notion of "preferring himself to me," but the fundamental meaning is that of time. Only, we are not to suppose that "before me" means "before I became incarnate" or that it is limited (as Chrysostom seems to suggest) to leaders like Judas and Theudas¹. It appears to be uttered by Christ in the character of the Good Shepherd—whether called the Shepherd of Israel, or the Shepherd of the world—and to mean "As many as have come to the flock, from the beginning, not waiting for the Good Shepherd's time, nor associating themselves with Him, but pressing forwards to rule mankind by the short methods of constraint."

(β) Πρό transposed

For xii. ι πρὸ ἐξ ἡμερῶν τοῦ πάσχα, see 2288.

(xvi) Πρός

(I) Πρός with Accusative, with verb of rest

[2363] The only Johannine passage that needs comment is i. ι "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with (πρός) God (τὸν θεόν)," where the question is, What is precisely meant by πρός? An evangelist might have used σύν "together with," or μετά "in companionship with," or παρά (with dat.) "by the side of," "in the household of"—as, in Proverbs, Wisdom personified, describing her close connexion with God, says, "Then [i.e. during the Creation] I was by His side (παρ' αὐτοῦ)²." But John uses a preposition that is (so far as present evidence goes) not used in this connexion by any

² Prov. viii. 30.

Greek classical author, nor in LXX.¹ And this is all the more remarkable because παρά with dative is used by John to describe "abiding with," spiritually, as well as literally, and this is also used in classical Greek, and in the Synoptists, to mean "in the house of," "at home with."

[2364] In N.T. πρός τινα is frequently employed, to mean, not exactly "at home with," but "in familiar intercourse with," "close contact with," sometimes hostile, but in any case close, communication². In the Second Epistle to the Corinthians the Apostle says that he desires "to be at home in converse with the Lord (ἐνδημεῖν πρὸς τὸν Κ.)" and in any case to be "well pleasing" to Him; and he uses this preposition to describe his "staying in converse with" Peter, and to express his hope that the youthful Timothy may "be free from intimidation in his intercourse with" the Corinthians³.

[2365] According to the analogy of Mark's usage, ὁ λόγος ἦν πρὸς τὸν θεόν would mean "the word was in converse with God": and John, in writing the words, might possibly have in mind the two passages (2364 a) in Mark's Gospel where Christ speaks of Himself as "having converse with" men, and where, in each case, either Matthew or Luke has omitted or altered the preposition. As the Logos on earth ἦν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους, so from the beginning He was

[2363 b] In 2 Chr. xxviii. 15 "they brought them to Jericho...unto their brethren," κατέστησαν αὐτοὺς εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ πρὸς τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς αὐτῶν, motion is implied. No instance has been hitherto alleged of εἶναι πρὸς τινα in LXX.

πρὸς τὸν θεόν, and the twofold application of the phrase “in converse with” prepares the way for the thought of a Mediator. Moreover, this preposition, being regularly used with many verbs of speaking¹, might seem appropriate to the definition of the Word.

[2366] But would an educated Greek at once understand ἦν πρὸς τὸν θεόν in this sense? In Mark, the context shews the meaning of εἶναι πρὸς, but it is not shewn thus at the beginning of the Fourth Gospel: and πρὸς with the accusative, in classical Greek, means “having regard to,” as in πρὸς ταῦτα “having regard to these things,” one of the commonest phrases in the language. Hence πρὸς τὸν θεόν might be taken by Greek readers to mean “having regard to God.” And this would agree with abundant instances of ζῆν πρὸς τινα, in classical Greek, meaning “to live in absolute devotion to anyone,” as where Demosthenes describes patriots as “living with constant regard to (πρὸς) their country².” This sense, too, suits the whole of the Fourth Gospel, which describes the Son as doing nothing except that which He sees the Father doing, so that the Logos is regarded as always, so to speak, [“looking] toward,” or “having regard to,” God. Probably John combines this spiritual meaning (“devoted to”) with the more local meaning (“in converse with”) and, in his own mind, the former is predominant³.

³ [2366 b] Πρὸς τινα with verbs of speaking—which is prob. non-existent in Mk-Mt. except in πρὸς ἀλλήλους or ἑαυτοὺς—is fairly frequent in Jn, but not nearly so frequent as in Lk. Jn seldom has it of words addressed by Jesus to others (iv. 48 “Except ye see signs...,” vi. 5 “Whence are we to buy loaves?” viii. 31 “If ye abide in my word...,” addressed to those who are soon afterwards called the children of the devil), but more frequently of words addressed to Jesus (ii. 3, iii. 4, iv. 15, 49 etc.). In Lk. it is so freq. as to occur six times in the first chapter. In LXX, πρὸς τινα in 1 Kings xii. 5, 7, 10, xxii. 18 etc. corresponds to twi in 2 Chr. x. 5, 7, 10, xviii. 17 etc.

[2366 c] In Mk xii. 12, πρὸς αὐτοὺς εἶπεν means “with reference to (or, against) them.” In Mk x. 26, W.H. read λέγοντες πρὸς αὐτόν without altern. following BC⁸, and this would mean “to Jesus.” But the text varies greatly. SS omits “saying” and has “in themselves,” and AD and the Latin vss. have πρὸς ἑαυτοὺς. There does not appear any reason why πρὸς αὐτόν, had it been in Mk, should have been altered to πρὸς ἑαυτοὺς. But if the ε in ἑαυτοὺς were dropped in some MSS. after the c in πρὸς, or if ἑαυτοὺς were spelt αὐτοὺς, it would be

(2) Πρός repeated after verb of motion

[2367] In xx. 2 "She runneth therefore and cometh unto (πρός) Simon Peter and unto (πρός) the other disciple whom Jesus loved and saith to them..." why is πρὸς repeated? The repetition would certainly indicate a desire to distinguish in a marked manner between the two, if πρὸς had been repeated in a brief phrase like πρὸς Σ. καὶ πρὸς Ἰωάνην. Perhaps here it means simply that the two were not living in the same house, and Mary is to be supposed as being accompanied by Peter to the house of the other disciple. No other instance quite like this is given by Winer-Moulton (p. 522, Part iii. sect. 1. 7. a). Elsewhere prepositions are repeated to give distinctness and weight to separated clauses as in Jn xvi. 8 (and, without καί, in Eph. vi. 12).

(3) Πρός with Dative

(xvii) Ὑπέρ (see also 2718—22)

[2369] Ὑπέρ with accusative occurs as v.r. for (xii. 43) ἡπερ, see 2092. Ὑπέρ with genitive occurs 13 times in John, more than twice the number of instances in all the Synoptists. In almost all the Johannine instances it refers to the death of one for the many³. But in the comparatively intelligible that αὐτοὺς (read as αὐτούς) should be changed to αὐτόν : and αὐτόν might be thought by the scribe of B to agree better with Mt.-Lk. and with the context, which describes Jesus as answering what is said by the disciples. W.H. reject B's reading of εἰαυτ. for αὐτ. in Mk viii. 37 and xi. 8, and place it in the margin in xi. 7. On the whole, in Mk x. 26, εἰαυτοὺς seems more probable than αὐτόν.

³ Jn xvii. 19 ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ἀγαθῶ ἐμαντῶν refers also to mediation.

following it is rendered by R.V. (as well as A.V.) "of": i. 30 "This is he of whom (ὑπὲρ οὗ) I said, After me cometh a man which is become (A.V. "is preferred") before me..."

[2370] Against this rendering is the fact that (2360) περί is the regular Johannine preposition in the phrase "speak of" meaning "speak about." Ὑπὲρ, it is true, is used by some authors in a sense closely resembling that of περί, as we might use "on" ("on this subject the writer urges etc." often with a notion of advocacy): but in such cases the context—referring generally to a thing, not to a person—ought to be such as to make the meaning clear¹. Here the context suggests "in behalf of." For the Baptist is speaking as a messenger or ambassador of the Messiah, and he might have used the words of St Paul "We are ambassadors in behalf of Christ²."

[2371] Ammonius³, among other explanations, suggests that ἀνὴρ is here applied to Christ by John the Baptist in the sense of νυμφίος, "bridegroom," and it is an undoubted fact that in the Fourth Gospel the singular of ἀνὴρ is always capable of this sense⁴: and the Baptist is introduced later on in this Gospel as calling Christ the "bridegroom" and himself the "bridegroom's friend⁵." This suggests a new way in which we may interpret ὑπὲρ in accordance with its legitimate meaning: "This is he in behalf of whom [coming as the bridegroom's friend in behalf of the bridegroom] I said, After me cometh a man...." It would be too much to substitute "husband" for "man": but a play upon the word, suggesting the former, may very well be intended. In the first statement of the Baptist's evidence the word "man" did not occur (i. 15) "This was he (lit.) that (1927) I said (οὗτος ἦν ὃν εἶπον), He that cometh after me...." The insertion of the word ἀνὴρ is therefore all the more remarkable here: and so is the insertion of ὑπὲρ. We may suppose that in the first moment of discovery the Baptist simply announces a superior. After an interval he is able to define the superiority: "He is the ἀνὴρ, the lord, the husband of Israel. I came and spoke *in his behalf, preparing the way for him as the bridegroom*¹." See 2718—22.

(xviii) Ὑπό and ὑποκάτω

(1) Ὑπό with Accusative

[2372] Ὑπό with accusative occurs only in i. 48 "Before Philip called thee being under the fig-tree I saw thee (πρὸ τοῦ σε Φίλιππον φωνῆσαι ὄντα ὑπὸ τὴν συκὴν εἰδόν σε)." This should be compared with the following, which contains the only instance of ὑποκάτω in John, i. 50 "Because I said to thee that I saw thee underneath the fig-tree (ὅτι εἰδόν σε ὑποκάτω τῆς συκῆς) thou believest!" Here a phrase with ὑπό and accusative is quoted with ὑποκάτω and genitive. Perhaps the more emphatic form ὑποκάτω, "under cover of," emphasizes the notion of secrecy: "Because I said to thee that I saw thee under cover of a fig-tree [as if that were, in thine eyes, so very marvellous]." The same substitution is found in Luke's, as compared with Mark's, description of the suppressed light. Mark has "under the bed," but Luke "under cover of a bed," or "thrust down under a bed"²."

¹ [2371 δ] For ὑπέρ with personal object and verb of speaking, comp. Xen. Cyrop. iii. 3. 14 ἐπεὶ οὖν σὺ σιωπᾷς ἐγὼ λέξω καὶ ὑπὲρ σοῦ καὶ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, Polyb. xxi. 14. 9 ταῦτα...ἀπεφώνητο ὑπὲρ παντὸς τοῦ συνεδρίου, xxviii. 16. 4 ὑπὲρ ἧς [πρεσβείας] ἐποιεῖτο τὸν χρηματισμὸν καὶ τοὺς λόγους.

[2372 β] There is ambiguity in the first words, πρὸ τοῦ...συκῆν. The caller might be Nathanael or Philip, and either Philip or Nathanael might be under the fig-tree. We have to infer the meaning from the context. And, even when εἰδόν σε is added, there is still ambiguity. ὄντα may agree with (1) the preceding or (2) the following σε: and the meaning may be (1) "[Long, or just] before Philip called thee at the moment when thou wast under the fig-tree—I saw thee," (2) "[Just] before Philip called thee—I saw thee in that moment when thou wast under the fig-tree."

[2372 γ] Chrysostom has a long and not very clear commentary, in the course of which he seems to assert that Christ had seen Nathanael not only "just before (πρὶν ἢ φωνῆσαι)" the calling but also "before this (πρὸ τούτου)": only the time had not come to say this. And yet Chrysostom previously says "But Jesus

(2) Ὑπό with Genitive

[2373] Ὑπό with the genitive is avoided by John (1885) as he prefers to speak of an agent performing an action rather than of an act performed by (ὕπό) an agent. It occurs only in xiv. 21 ὁ ἔχων τὰς ἐντολάς μου κ. τηρῶν αὐτάς ἐκεῖνός ἐστιν ὁ ἀγαπῶν με· ὁ δὲ ἀγαπῶν με ἀγαπηθήσεται ὑπὸ τ. πατρός μου, where perhaps the writer desires to repeat precisely the words ὁ ἀγαπῶν με so that they may constitute the two middle terms of the sentence (2544 a). Perhaps the frequency of the nominatives ὁ ἀγαπῶν and ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν in the Epistle (1 Jn ii. 10, iii. 10, 14, iv. 7 etc.) may partly explain the shape of the sentence here. Had the verb been τιμάω we should have expected εἰάν τις ἐμὲ τιμᾷ τιμήσει αὐτὸν ὁ πατήρ similarly to xii. 26.

PRONOUNS

(i) Αὐτός (see also 2723—7)

[2374] Αὐτός (nom. sing.), in Luke¹, sometimes means “he” (unemphatic); but John uses it always to mean “himself,” sometimes in a context mentioning other persons (“himself (αὐτός) and his mother,” “himself and his household²”) but more often without such context to mean “of his own knowledge, or motion,” “unaided,” “unprompted,” e.g. ii. 24—5 “But Jesus [of] himself (ἀ. δὲ ἴ.) would not trust himself to them because he understood [of] himself (διὰ τὸ αὐτὸν γινώσκειν) all men...for he knew [of] himself (αὐτὸς γὰρ ἐγίνω-answered as God. For indeed He said I have known thee from the beginning... and ‘But now (i.e. just now) did I see thee in the fig-tree (Καὶ γὰρ εἶπεν, ὅτι Ἀνωθέν σε οἶδα...καὶ, Νῦν εἶδόν σε ἐν τῇ συκῇ...).’” Probably καὶ γὰρ εἶπεν means “For indeed He said [in effect]” i.e. He meant. And Chrysostom perhaps implies that the words of Jesus contained both of the meanings above mentioned, though the time had not yet come when the former (“long before”) could be clearly expressed. It will be noted that he paraphrases “under the fig-tree” as “in [the covert of] the fig-tree.”

² [2374 b] Jn ii. 12, iv. 2, 12, 53, xviii. 1 (R.V.) “he entered himself (ἀ.) and his disciples,” (A.V.) “he entered and his disciples.”

σκεν) what was in man¹,” vi. 6 “For he himself (ὁ γὰρ) knew [i.e. he knew of himself, although he asked a question]...”

[2375] So in vi. 15 “Jesus withdrew again into the mountain himself alone,” αὐτὸς μόνος is in contrast with the multitude that wished to seize Him, and perhaps it does not merely mean “by himself alone.” Several authorities omit αὐτός. Perhaps it has a mystical emphasis (2724—6). The same phrase, αὐτὸς μόνος, is applied to the grain of seed that will not die, xii. 24, A.V. “It abideth alone,” but R.V. “it abideth by itself alone.” It would be well to use the emphatic pronoun elsewhere, e.g. vii. 10 “Then he himself also went up [following his brethren].” In v. 20 “The Father loveth the Son and sheweth him all things that he himself doeth,” R.V. has “himself,” but does not have it in xii. 49 “The Father that sent me hath himself given me commandment (ὁ πέμψας με πατήρ αὐτός μοι ἐντολήν δέδωκεν).” In the latter, αὐτός is not quite the same as ἐκεῖνος, “He and no other”; it is rather, “He in His own person,” or “He in His own character of Father².”

[2376] Αὐτούς (accus. pl. masc.) occurs very frequently in the Synoptic narrative, to denote disciples, multitudes, Pharisees etc., in relation to Jesus, describing how Jesus “taught them,” “healed them,” “called them,” “sent them,” “questioned them” etc. In John it occurs thus only four times³ (excluding one instance in an interpolated passage⁴). On the other hand it occurs nine times in Christ’s Last Prayer referring to the disciples, when He is praying to the Father concerning “them”⁵.

¹ [2374 c] A.V. omits “self” in each of the three cases, R.V. in every case but the third. The threefold repetition of αὐτός is remarkable. In reality it does not mean “Jesus, by himself”—for Jesus repeatedly declared that He does nothing “from, or by, himself”—but Jesus being one with the Father or with the Spirit. Comp. the threefold repetition of ταῦτα in 2396—7.

⁵ [2376 a] xvii. 6—23. The nom. pl. αὐτοί is used (perh. in a more personal and emotional sense than ἐκεῖνοι) in Christ’s Prayer for the disciples, xvii. 19 “that they may be also themselves hallowed,” xvii. 21 “that they may be also themselves in us.” In xvii. 8 καὶ αὐτοὶ ἔλαβον, there is perh. a notion of spon-

[2377] In xviii. 11 τὸ ποτήριον...οὐ μὴ πῖω αὐτό, there is probably a combination of two constructions (1) "that very cup (αὐτὸ τ. π.)," i.e. the cup just as the Father presents it, and (2) the repetition of αὐτό (more usually ἐκεῖνο) to emphasize the object¹. In xx. 2—15, after Mary has said "They have taken the Lord out of the tomb," the two disciples run thither, and one of them happens to be indicated by a pronoun (xx. 6 "Simon Peter following him"): but the narrative proceeds to describe how Peter (xx. 7) "entered into the tomb, and beholdeth...the napkin, which had [before] been upon his head," where "his," of course, means "the Lord's"—very naturally and dramatically since "the Lord" is in the mind of the evangelist and is assumed by him to be in the minds of sympathetic readers: and similarly Mary addressing, for the first time (as she supposes), the "gardener," says "Sir, if thou hast conveyed him away," although the "gardener" has merely said, "Whom seekest thou?"

[2378] The meaning of αὐτοῦ is disputed in the following, viii. 44 "He (ἐκεῖνος) was a murderer from the beginning and stood (ἔστηκεν) not in the truth because there is no truth in him. Whenever he is speaking that which is false (τὸ ψεῦδος) he speaketh out of his own (ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων) (2728); because he is a false speaker (ψεύστης) and the father of it (αὐτοῦ)." Here "of it" probably means "of that which is false." Falsehood is regarded as being slanderous, i.e. diabolic, or Satanic. Whenever Satan utters that which is false he speaks "out of the abundance of his heart," "out of his inmost nature"; but it is also suggested (by "your father" in the context) that, when the Slanderer causes men to slander, he speaks out of them as "his family"—ιδίων being either masculine or neuter. For Origen's and Chrysostom's views see 2728. R.V. has "speaketh of his own"—which, if "of" is meant for "from" (as in "give of," "take of"), is probably not English (2728 b), or only the English of scholars.

taneousness, "and they of themselves received the words I gave them." (In xvii. 11 αὐτοί (v. r. οὗτοι), if genuine, is antithetical to the following ἐγώ.)

² On αὐτοῦ, as distinct from ἐαυτοῦ or ἑδιος, used possessively, see 1720 a—i.

[2380] In xi. 45—6 "Many therefore of the Jews, [by 'many' I mean] those that had come (οἱ ἐλθόντες) to Mary...believed in him: but some of them (τινὲς δὲ ἐξ αὐτῶν) went away to the Pharisees and told them..." the pronoun "them" may mean either "the Jews" or that section of the Jews which "had come to Mary." For a discussion of this see 1941 foll. It is not likely that those who "told the Pharisees" told them from good will to Jesus, desiring to glorify the latter: for, had that been the meaning, the writer would probably have used "and," or "therefore," instead of "but" ("but some of them went"²).

[2379 b] Winer himself does not recognise the omission of the indefinite τις in any instance except where the subject can be supplied by the reader from his own knowledge or reading, or where it means "God," "Scripture," "the sacred writer" etc.: and, though it is frequent in LXX (as literal transl. of Hebrew, e.g. Ezr. iv. 15 "that [one] may search" ἐπισκέψηται, but 1 Esdr. ii. 18 ἐπισκεφθῆ) it requires more support than is alleged by Winer-Moulton before it can be recognised in any book of N.T., and especially in John, who had other ways of expressing himself (ἐάν τις λαλῇ, ὁ λαλῶν etc.), so that antecedently he would not be likely to use such an ellipsis even if the other evangelists used it.

² [2380 a] It may be said that the impotent man cured by Jesus gave information similarly (v. 15) to the Jews. But we are not told that he "believed in Jesus"; and it is quite possible that the evangelist regarded him as ungrateful and unbelieving—a contrast to the blind man, of whom it is expressly said that (ix. 36—8) he "worshipped," after expressing "belief."

It is difficult to explain how some of those who "believed in" Jesus could (apparently) act against Him. Possibly, it is one of the instances of John's manner of stating a fact, first, loosely and (strictly speaking) even inaccurately, and then correcting the statement (1925). If so, the meaning may be "those that had come to Mary [as a whole or, almost without exception]...believed...but some [few] of them [did not believe, but] went away to the Pharisees..." For $\delta\varsigma = \alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{o}\varsigma$ or $\acute{\epsilon}\kappa\epsilon\iota\upsilon\omicron\varsigma$, see below¹.

[2381] This pronoun is used frequently by all the evangelists as an adjective, especially in temporal phrases such as "in those days," "from that hour" etc., and all the Synoptists have it in the phrase "woe unto that man ($\tau\hat{\omega}$ ἀνθρώπῳ ἐκείνῳ)²." But the singular, as a personal pronoun, is almost confined to John³. He uses it sometimes, without much apparent emphasis, in narrating a dialogue ("he answered," "he saith") to mean "he, on his side, replied, said, denied etc."⁴

[2382] Outside dialogue, when John uses $\acute{\epsilon}\kappa\epsilon\iota\upsilon\omicron\varsigma$ in his own words, or in the words of others reported in the first person, it generally has considerable emphasis as in i. 8 "He was not the Light" (i.e. do not suppose that he, the Baptist, was the Light), i. 18 "The only begotten...he [and no other] hath declared," i. 33 "He that sent me...he [and no other] said to me," ii. 21 "[The Jews took the words literally] but he was speaking about..."⁵ It is often used by the Son concerning the Father, v. 19 "Whatsoever things he doeth" and similarly in v. 38, vi. 29, viii. 42. The Samaritan woman also uses it about the Messiah, iv. 25 "when he (emph.) ($\acute{\epsilon}$)

¹ [2380 b] In v. 11 $\delta\varsigma$ δὲ ἀπεκρίθη αὐτοῖς, AB alone retain $\delta\varsigma$ δέ, which is omitted or changed to \acute{o} δέ by other authorities. $\acute{o}\varsigma$ δέ is prob. more emphatic than \acute{o} δέ and less emphatic than αὐτὸς δέ (which, in Jn, would mean "he [of] himself said"). $\acute{o}\varsigma$, in this sense, occurs in N.T. elsewhere only in Mk xv. 23 $\delta\varsigma$ δὲ οὐκ ἔλαβεν (where NB and 33 almost alone preserve $\delta\varsigma$). It is one of several curious characteristics common to Mk and Jn. Steph. gives abundant instances of $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\delta\varsigma$ in Plato and Xen., but none of $\delta\varsigma$ δέ. But comp. Job xxii. 18 $\delta\varsigma$ δὲ ἐνέπλησεν, where $\delta\varsigma$ represents the Heb. pron. "he" and is emphatic, Aq. and Theod. have $\kappa\alpha\iota$ αὐτός (A ὅτε γε), Tob. v. 13 $\delta\varsigma$ δὲ εἶπεν, Ἐγὼ Ἀζαρίας (N $\kappa\alpha\iota$ εἶπεν αὐτῷ). $\acute{o}\varsigma$ μὲν... $\delta\varsigma$ δέ does not occur in Jn. ² Mk xiv. 21, Mt. xxvi. 24, Lk. xxii. 22.

cometh, he (unemph.) will tell us all things.” In the Epistle, it is the pronoun used to denote Christ, as being the Person always before the writer’s mind as his example. Ἐκεῖνος is used thus six times there, and in no other sense¹.

[2383] In John, ἐκεῖνος², when preceded by καί, is generally combined with it in the form καὶ ἐκεῖνος. The following is exceptional, xix. 35 “And he that hath seen hath borne witness, and his witness is true (ἀλ. αὐτοῦ ἐστὶν ἡ μαρτυρία) and he (καὶ ἐκεῖνος³) knoweth that he (unemph.) saith true (οἶδεν ὅτι ἀληθῆ λέγει), in order that ye also may believe.” Here ἐκεῖνος might theoretically be a mere emphatic substitute for the preceding αὐτός. Then the meaning would be simply, “he that hath seen is quite certain that he himself is speaking the truth.” But this does not make very impressive sense, whereas the occasion demands something not only impressive but uniquely impressive. Moreover it seems to demand a combination of more witnesses than one, as in the Gospel, where (viii. 17) “the testimony of two men” is mentioned, or in the Epistle, where (1 Jn v. 8) “three” witnesses are mentioned in connexion with “the water,” “the blood,” and “the spirit.”

[2384] The passage may perhaps in some respects be illustrated by v. 32 “Another is he that witnesseth concerning me and I know that the witness...is true,” where, though Chrysostom supposes Jesus to mean the Baptist, He probably means (2730) the Father, who “witnesseth” to the Son by the works that He (v. 36) “hath given” to the Son to accomplish. St Paul appeals sometimes to the testimony, as it were, or presence, of God or Christ⁴; and, on one occasion, not long after the words “the God and Father of the Lord Jesus Christ...knoweth that I lie not,” he passes to “visions and revelations of the Lord⁵.” So here, we appear to have a solemn appeal on the part of the evangelist touching the truth of a statement that he obviously regards as symbolical of a profound mystery not apparent to the soldiers at the crucifixion but revealed to him. To whom should he appeal except to the Lord Himself from whose side

⁴ Rom. ix. 1, Gal. i. 20, 2 Cor. xi. 10—11.

(as he declares) there flowed forth "blood and water"? But, if so, we have seen from the Epistle (2382) that the evangelist might naturally speak of the Lord as ἐκεῖνος, when recording His testimony to the truth of a tradition revealed to "him that had seen it," whether in a vision or otherwise, "And he that hath seen hath borne witness, and his witness is true, and He knoweth that he saith true, that ye also may believe¹." For a parallel from Barnabas, see 2731.

[2385] Chrysostom has the following comment on vii. 11 τοῦ ἐστὶν ἐκεῖνος; "By reason of their great hatred and rancour they would not even call Him by His name²." The same pronoun that might mean, in the mouths of admirers, "that [great] man," might mean, in the mouths of enemies, "that [notorious] man." In vii. 45 "There came therefore the officers to the chief priests and Pharisees and they (ἐκεῖνοι) said to them, Why did ye not bring him?"—we must bear in mind that John has previously described (vii. 32) "the chief priests and the Pharisees" as sending officers to arrest Jesus. Meantime, he has told us about the talk of "the multitude," of whom "some" say this, "others" that, some for, some against, Jesus: now, in contrast with the "division" in the multitude, he describes the fixed and virulent determination of the Pharisees by emphasising the pronoun in "they said³." See also 2732.

[2384 b] On xix. 35 Blass (p. 172) says, "There is doubt about the whole verse, which is wanting in ε, and Cod. Fuldensis of the Vulgate, about this particular clause [i.e. the ἐκεῖνος clause], about the text of this clause, as Nonnus read ἐκεῖνον οἶδαμεν, etc." But ε, besides omitting the verse, alters the order of the preceding words "sanguis et aqua" to "aqua et sanguis"; and it is possible that the omission may be from homoeotel., in passing from -is in sanguis to the -is in "credatis" ("ut et vos credatis"). So difficult a verse might naturally be amended into ἐκεῖνον οἶδαμεν; but the emendation is manifestly based on xxi. 24 οἶδαμεν ὅτι ἀληθὴς αὐτοῦ ἡ μαρτυρία ἐστίν. But there is great force in Blass's warning against basing "theories as to the origin of the fourth Gospel on this verse," and in his objection to "the meaning ordinarily attached to it."

³ [2385 a] The antithesis is much more obvious in Acts iii. 13 ὃν ὑμεῖς μὲν παρεδώκατε...κατὰ πρόσωπον Πειλάτου κρίναντος ἐκεῖνον ἀπολύνειν, "Ye on your side delivered up...when he on his side had decided to acquit." In the context of Jn there is no μὲν and there is a considerable interval between ἐκεῖνος and the earlier member of the antithesis. Still, antithesis is the explanation.

(iii) Οὗτος

[2386] Οὗτος nom. sing. masc. is about as frequent in John as in Mark and Luke taken together. This arises partly from the frequency of testimonies to Christ from the Baptist and others ("this is he that...")¹, but partly also from the evangelist's habit of using οὗτος after a previous description to sum up, or repeat, i. 1—2 "In the beginning was the Word...this [same] was in the beginning with God." So, too, at the close of his Gospel, after the many hints and suggestions as to "the disciple that Jesus loved" etc., xxi. 24 "This [same] is the disciple that testifieth concerning these things...." Οὗτος is also used, in apposition, to sum up a collective participle, vi. 46 ὁ ὢν παρὰ [τοῦ] θεοῦ, οὗτος..., vii. 18 ὁ δὲ ζητῶν...οὗτος, xv. 5 ὁ μένων...οὗτος (where the meaning would be quite different if οὗτος were after a participle without a pause, e.g. ὁ μένων οὗτος, "this man that remains"). In all these cases, the meaning is that if a man does a certain antecedent act, then "this [same] man (οὗτος)" also does a consequent act².

[2386 c] On xxi. 21 οὗτος δὲ τί; Blass (p. 177) compares Acts xii. 18 τί ἄρα ὁ Πέτρος ἐγένετο, Lk. i. 66 τί ἄρα τὸ παιδίον ἔσται; Joseph. Vit. § 296 οἱ εἰκοσι χρυσοὶ τί γεγόνασιν; Xen. Hell. ii. 3. 17 τί ἔσοιτο ἡ πολιτεία, and gives the rendering "what will become of him?" This is possible. But in all these instances there is no ellipsis. And the context in xxi. 21 points (2209) to some action, something more than mere passive "becoming." Comp. Luc. Dial. Mort. vii. 2 (i. 357) ὁ γέρων δὲ τί πρὸς ταῦτα; "and the old man—what [did] he in consequence?" Plat. Gorg. 502 A τί δὲ ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ Μέλης; ib. Rep. 332 E τίς δὲ πλεόντας [δυνατώτατός ἐστιν εὖ ποιεῖν] πρὸς τὸν τῆς θαλάττης κινδυνον; Κυβερνήτης. Τί δὲ ὁ δίκαιος; All these imply contrast, "so-and-so did thus: what shall this man do?"—so that they are parallel to xxi. 21. Nonnus supplies τελέσσει.

[2386 (i)] Οὗτος, if connected with a noun and not used predicatively, requires an intervening article as in classical Greek¹. In ii. 11 ταύτην ἐποίησεν ἀρχὴν τῶν σημείων, R.V. has “this beginning of his signs,” following \aleph and Chrys., who read τὴν ἀρχήν²—an interpolation so natural that its non-prevalence in the mss. is surprising. Basilides, after speaking of the ineffable spiritual life, likens it to the water at Cana and says, “This is the great and genuine ‘beginning of the signs,’ [that beginning] which Jesus wrought in Cana of Galilee³.” Origen comments on the fact that the Synoptists did not give the title “beginning of the signs” to the first “wonders” or “mighty works” wrought at Capernaum. He takes “beginning” as appositional or predicative and as meaning “chief of signs (προηγούμενον σημείων),” and he justifies this by saying that the creation of the draughts of sober joy is greater than acts of healing⁴. A similar predicative use of ἀρχή occurs in O.T. once, and perhaps only once, Prov. viii. 22 κύριος ἔκτισέ με ἀρχὴν ὁδῶν αὐτοῦ, about the creation of Wisdom⁵. The Hebrew word there rendered κτίζω is cana—Targum bara “create”—and means κτάομαι as well as κτίζω: and Aquila and the rest substitute ἐκτήσατο. Κτήσις, or κτήμα, is accepted by Origen as representing the meaning of Cana⁶. In the first verse of Genesis, where LXX has ποιέω for the Hebrew bara “create,” Aquila has κτίζω. Philo (i. 361), inveighing against drunkenness, quotes the passage from Proverbs thus, ὁ θεὸς ἐκτήσατό με πρωτίστην τῶν ἑαυτοῦ ἔργων⁷. These facts shew that ποιέω, κτίζω, and κτάομαι might be interchanged. Origen’s direct comment on “Cana” is lost; but he refers to what he had written as indicating that it denoted the "creation" or "acquiring" of the Church by Christ; and the Hebrew cana is used in O.T. of God (Gesen. 888—9) (1) "creating" heaven or Israel, and (2) "acquiring" or "redeeming" His people. The latter is symbolized in O.T. by wedlock. Using the same metaphor, Origen warns men to "abstain from the harlot Matter (ὕλη) and to be made one with the Logos that was in the beginning with God, and with His Wisdom, whom *He created as the beginning of His ways*¹." The facts indicate that ii. 11 ταύτην ἐποίησεν ἀρχήν means τοῦτο ἐποίησεν ὥς (or ὥστε εἶναι) ἀρχήν, that it is intended to sum up a typical description of the marriage feast of the Logos or Wisdom of God, that it was based on the above-quoted passage in Proverbs, and that Origen has rightly interpreted its inner meaning.

[2387] Διὰ τοῦτο, "for this cause," "consequently," is almost always placed by John at the beginning of the sentence. An exception is xv. 19 "If ye were of the world the world would love its own. But because ye are not of the world but I chose you out of the world—for this cause (διὰ τοῦτο) the world hateth you." The initial "for this cause" is so frequent elsewhere that we may infer that here, too, John writes with the feeling that he is introducing a new sentence, as though the last terminated with the statement "I chose you out of the world," as a consequence of which, "the world hateth" them². Another exception, according to R.V., is i. 31 "And I knew him not; but that (ἀλλ' ἵνα) he should be made manifest to Israel for this cause came I baptizing with water." Here, however, there is probably (2064) an ellipsis, as in other cases, before

iva, and the rendering should be "But [it came to pass] in order that he should be made manifest to Israel. For this cause came I etc."

[2388] In vii. 21—2, "...I did one work [on the sabbath] and ye all marvel. For this cause hath Moses given you circumcision... and on the sabbath ye circumcise a man," R.V. marg. gives "and ye all marvel because of this." But the text is to be preferred (in consequence of the regular Johannine usage) in spite of its difficulty, the meaning of "for this cause" being, perhaps, "in order to typify the subordination of the sabbath to man." The words point back to the cure just effected on the sabbath, at which the Jews, instead of welcoming it, "marvel," i.e. are amazed with a foolish and faithless amazement (1673 a—e). Rebuking them, Jesus says, "For this cause," i.e., for the cause of kindness, to reveal love and not law as the key to the mysteries of the Father, there has been ordained the rite of circumcision, always on the eighth day after birth, so that ye are forced sometimes to circumcise on the sabbath.

[2389] Διὰ τοῦτο, with an interval, frequently precedes ὅτι, "because," e.g. viii. 47 "He that is from God heareth the words of God. For this cause (διὰ τοῦτο) ye hear not, because (ὅτι) ye are not from God." Here, "for this cause" looks back to the general cause ("he that is...") and then forward to the particular cause ("ye are not..."). Some such restatement of a cause ("because of this, which I have just mentioned,...because, in other words, so and so happened") is very frequent in John. The phrase is almost always in asyndeton; but it is preceded by "and" and followed by "therefore" in one of the very few passages where it occurs in narrative, v. 15—18 "The man...told the Jews that it was Jesus that had made him whole. And (καί) for this cause did the Jews persecute Jesus; because [in other words] (ὅτι) he did these things on the sabbath. But he answered them, My Father worketh...and I work. For this cause therefore (οὖν) the Jews sought rather (2733 a) to kill him, because [in other words, or, from their point of view] he not only brake the sabbath but also called God his own Father...¹."

[2390] It is sometimes difficult to define exactly the noun

represented by τοῦτο, e.g. in xii. 37—40 “But...they did not believe, in order that the word of Isaiah might be fulfilled, ‘Lord, who [hath] believed...?’ For this cause they were not able to believe, because again Isaiah said, ‘He hath blinded their eyes....’” Apparently, however, “this” means the Law of fulfilment of Prophecy as being the Will of the righteous God. Isaiah’s question (“Who hath believed?”) amounted to a predictive statement, “None believed.” John, having expressed the fulfilment of this statement in the form “they were not able to believe,” goes on to explain this by another prophecy referring to retributive blindness¹.

[2391] An apparent, but only apparent, exception (to διὰ τοῦτο looking back) occurs in x. 17 “For this cause doth my Father love me because I lay down my life.” No doubt, the immediately preceding sentence (about “other sheep”) contains nothing to which the phrase could well point. But we must go back further and take the passage as a whole: “Even as the Father knoweth me....I lay down my life for the sheep—and other sheep I have...and they shall become one flock, one shepherd. For this cause doth my Father love me because I lay down my life that I may take it again.” It will then appear that “for this cause” looks back, past the intervening parenthesis, to the words “lay down my life for the sheep,” which are repeated, with modification, after “because.” Similarly in 1 Jn iii. 1 “...and we are [the children of God]. For this cause the world knoweth not us because it knew not him,” the reference of “this cause” is to the preceding words, “and we are [the children of God]”; and the meaning is, “Because we are His children the world knows us not—naturally, because it knows not the Father.”

(β) Ἐν τούτῳ

[2392] Ἐν τούτῳ, (neut.) “in this,” “herein,” “hereby²,” occurs five times in the Gospel and twelve times in the Epistle. The uses are not quite similar. In the Epistle, when followed by ὅτι or ἕάν, it seems sometimes to look forward, as in 1 Jn ii. 3 "And hereby know we that we know him—if we keep his commandments," i.e. by the following test. There is nothing in the preceding context to which "hereby" can well point. In the Gospel it always looks back. But (like διὰ τοῦτο) it may also look forward to something supplementary. This, however, is not the case in iv. 36—7, "He that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal; in order that he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together. For herein is the saying true that 'One soweth and another reapeth.'" Here the meaning is, that in the joy of the sowers and the reapers of the heavenly harvest there is fulfilled in the real and spiritual sense—namely, in the sense that the sower rejoices to sow for others—the proverb current among men of this transient world in the unreal saying that "fools sow and clever men reap." The ὅτι clause has nothing to do with ἐν τούτῳ but defines ὁ λόγος.

[2393] But ἐν τούτῳ is explained by a following ὅτι clause in ix. 30, where, the Pharisees having said "We know not," the blind man just healed says "Herein [i.e. in your not knowing] is the marvel [namely] because (ὅτι) ye know not whence he is, and [yet] he opened mine eyes." In xiii. 35 "...even as I have loved you that ye also love one another. Herein shall all know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," the cause is first stated before "herein" and then repeated with slight modification—"if [I say] ye have love among one another"—as though the "love" were a book in which "all" could read the truth of their discipleship. In xv. 8 "Herein [i.e. in your abiding in me] my Father was glorified in order that ye might bear (ἵνα...φέρητε) much fruit and might become my disciples," the reference is to previous statements (xv. 5—7) that, if the disciples "abide" in Christ (as the branches abide in the vine) they will "bear fruit," and that this "abiding" will procure the accomplishment of all their prayers. Here, as a climax, it is said that in this abiding the Father "was glorified," in the fulfilment of His will and effort (2093—6) "in order that (ἵνα)" the disciples "may bear much fruit." Thus the ἵνα clause does not define "herein" (as though it meant "in the fact that ye bear") but explains the object of the "abiding."

(γ) Μετὰ τοῦτο, or ταῦτα

[2394] Μετὰ τοῦτο is rarer in John than μετὰ ταῦτα. The former occurs only as follows, mostly implying a short interval, ii. 12 "After this [i.e. after the sign at Cana] he went down...,” xi. 7 “after this [i.e. after abiding two days] he saith,” xi. 11 “These things he said, and after this [i.e. after saying these things] he saith to them,” xix. 28 “After this [i.e. after giving His mother to the beloved disciple]...he saith ‘I thirst.’” In all these instances there follows some word or deed of Jesus. This is not the case after μετὰ ταῦτα in xix. 38 “after these things Joseph asked Pilate”; but in v. 1 “after these things there was a feast of the Jews, and Jesus went up,” an action of Christ practically follows as elsewhere¹. In ii. 12 and xix. 28, μετὰ τοῦτο might refer to the completion of a definite period or act (like the Hebrew in Gen. xxiii. 19 “After this he buried Sarah²”) as distinct from μετὰ ταῦτα referring to a collection of actions. But in xi. 7—11, the story of Lazarus, it is difficult to understand the twice-used phrase unless the intention is to describe the miracle as not being merely wrought at the grave but also prepared for, stage by stage, during the period of anticipation prescribed by the Father to the Son.

(δ) Αὐτοῖ omitted and ταῦτα repeated

[2395] For the most part, John avoids pronouns where classical Greek would use them, and prefers nouns, as in the Prologue and elsewhere (“In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God,” “not to judge the world but to save the world” etc.³). In the following, the mss. vary (ii. 12) “He went down to Capernaum, himself, and his mother and [his?] brethren and his disciples.” The Synoptists similarly vary when they describe Christ’s family as seeking to speak to Him; Mark has “his” twice, “his mother (αὐτοῦ) and his brethren (αὐτοῦ),” but Matthew and Luke have “his mother and brethren (ἡ μ. καὶ οἱ ἀ. αὐτοῦ),” thus knitting them into one group⁴. In John, inferior authorities have inserted “his”—naturally, because “his” comes before disciples. But perhaps John did not wish to apply the epithet “his” to “mother,”

¹ [2394 a] The other instances are iii. 22, v. 14, vi. 1, vii. 1, xxi. 21. It occurs once in speech, xiii. 7 “But thou shalt know after these things.”

³ i. 1, xii. 47, comp. ix. 5, x. 29.

"brethren" and "disciples" in that impartial way. He may have omitted "his" before "brethren" and inserted it before "disciples" because he has in view—what he tells us later on—that "his brethren did not believe in him¹."

[2396] This general habit of omitting pronouns makes the following passage all the more remarkable, xii. 16 "These things (ταῦτα) his disciples understood not at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things (ταῦτα) were written (γεγραμμένα) concerning (2339) him, and that they had done these things to him." On this Westcott says, "The threefold repetition of the words is to be noticed." He refers to the "threefold repetition" of ταῦτα. Schöttgen² gives a multitude of instances in which "this thing," represented by the Hebrew feminine "this" (mostly altered as to gender in LXX), is mystically interpreted as referring to the Messiah. The most important is Ps. cxviii. 22—3 "The stone that the builders rejected is become the head of the corner. This [thing] (αὐτῇ) is the Lord's doing." This is quoted by our Lord, soon after the Entry into Jerusalem, in Mark and Matthew, who follow the LXX in retaining the literal (but from the Greek point of view quite misleading) feminine³. Luke, however, stops short at the word "corner." This, then, is just one of the occasions where we might expect John to intervene (see Index, "John, interventions of").

[2397] There are good reasons for thinking that our Lord's quotation about the "stone" originally terminated with the words "head-stone of the corner," and that an early Christian congregational ascription of glory, or utterance of hope or thanksgiving, to God, was variously added (1) by Mark and Matthew, (2) by Luke, (3) by Barnabas¹. If this was the case, John, taking up Mark's tradition about αὐτη, and converting it into the more intelligible ταῦτα, may have placed the tradition in its right position, not as an utterance of Christ's, but as an evangelistic statement, namely, that the Church, in later days, recognised "these things," which took place in connexion with Christ's Entry into Jerusalem—meaning the whole, and not excluding the contrast between the fixed rejection by the rulers and the recognition by the multitude (xii. 9—10)—as being divinely ordained.

² [2396 a] Schöttg. ii. 45. Gen. ix. 12, 17 "This (τοῦτο) is the sign," Ps. xxvii. 3 "In this (ταύτῃ) do I trust," Jer. ix. 23—4 "Let him boast in this (τούτῳ)" are interpreted of the Messiah.

(iv) Τοιοῦτος

[2398] As to iv. 23 καὶ γὰρ ὁ πατήρ τοιούτους ζητεῖ τοὺς προσκυνούοντας αὐτόν, Winer-Moulton (p. 138) parallels it to Mk ix. 37 [ἐν] τῶν τοιούτων παιδίων "one of such little children²." But John has not prefixed the article as Mark has; and the article is invariably prefixed in N.T. wherever τοιοῦτος is used as a masc. pronoun, referring to some previous description. It follows that τοιούτους must be taken predicatively, although the construction presents difficulties. Perhaps ζητεῖ is nearly equivalent to "desire" (Dan. vii. 19 Theod. ἐζήτουν, LXX ἤθελον) and the meaning is "desires [to have] his worshippers such," as Horace uses "te semper amabilem sperat" for "hopes [to have] thee ever amiable." But of course ζητεῖ does not mean "desire" exactly: and the evangelist may intend to suggest not only what the Father "desires" His worshippers to be, but also the fact that He is "seeking" them out of the world, and "seeking" to help them, as the shepherd "seeks" his flock.

[2397 b] The words in the LXX "This (αὕτη) came (ἐγένετο) from the Lord and it is marvellous in our eyes" supplied an extremely appropriate congregational utterance for Greeks, coming after the words "The stone that the builders rejected"—as though the Gentile converts said, "The rulers of Israel, the builders of the Temple, rejected the Stone that was to become the head (κεφαλὴ), but we accept it, i.e. the head, and it is marvellous in our eyes." This would be an error; but, as we have seen, it was one that Origen certainly, and Chrysostom probably, adopted. Both these commentators connect the text with the notion of the corner-stone as uniting the believers in Israel with the Gentiles (Orig. Huet i. 467 E, Chrys. ad loc.).

² [2398 a] Mk ix. 37, x. 14, Mt. xix. 14, Lk. xviii. 16, Acts xxii. 22, Rom. xvi. 18, 1 Cor. v. 11, vii. 28, xvi. 16 etc. Chrys. ad loc. ei τοιούτους (Morel. τοῦτους) πάλαι ἐξήτει seems to have taken τοιούτους non-predicatively, but the usage of all books in N.T. (including 3 Jn 8) is hardly to be disputed.

II. PERSONAL

(i) Insertion for emphasis

[2400] But a great deal is lost by readers of the English versions of the Fourth Gospel from the general neglect of the translators to distinguish the instances where the English personal pronoun does,

¹ [2399 a] There is very little in the Synoptists like this use of ὑμεῖς. The nearest approach to it is the contrast between the "my" of prophecy, meaning God's ("my house") and "ye," in Mk xi. 17 (comp. Mt. xxi. 13, Lk. xix. 46) "My house shall be called a house of prayer...but ye (ὑμεῖς) have made it a den of robbers": and the Sermon on the Mount contrasts "I say unto you" with what was "said to them of old time" (Mt. v. 21—2, 33—4).

[2399 c] In 1 Jn, there is a clear distinction between "we write" and "I write." The Epistle opens with "we" thus (i. 1—10) "That which we have heard, that which we have seen...And these things we (emph. ἡμεῖς) write unto you that our (ἡμῶν, marg. ὑμῶν) joy may be fulfilled.... If we say that we have not sinned we make him a liar and his word is not in us." After thus writing in the name of the Apostles and Elders generally, describing their testimony, their privileges, and their dangers, the writer passes to his individual testimony (ii. 1) "My little children, these things I write unto you," and this is repeated nearly a dozen times, ending with v. 13 "These things have I written." But no pronoun is inserted except for emphasis or antithesis, i. 4 "And these things we write (γράφομεν ἡμεῖς) that our (v. 1. your) joy may be fulfilled."

from those where it does not, represent a Greek pronoun. Thus, ii. 18 (A.V.) "What sign shewest thou unto us?" and vi. 30 "What sign shewest thou then?" appear on the same level. But in the latter the pronoun, "thou," is inserted in the Greek; and the context shews that the Jews emphasize the pronoun, possibly meaning "thou also [like Moses]," whom they presently mention, or else meaning "thou on thy side [since thou demandest obedience from us]"¹. So in iv. 10 "If thou hadst known...thou (σύ) wouldst have asked him (αὐτόν)," the second "thou" is emphatic and the meaning is, "Thou wouldst have asked him [not waiting for him to ask thee]." There is also a deliberately intended difference between ἡμεῖς οἶδαμεν and οἶδαμεν in the following, ix. 29 "We (ἡμεῖς) know that God hath spoken to Moses, but this man—we know not whence he is" where the former means, "We, the guardians of the Law about which you know nothing."

(ii) Ἐγώ

[2401] For ἐγώ with εἰμί, see 2220—8. For ἐγώ, as denoting emphasis generally, see 2399 and 1713. The emphatic use of "I" in the testimony of the Baptist—attested sometimes by B alone among the uncial mss.—has perplexed some, who have not perceived that the Baptist is intended, by the use of this pronoun, to emphasize his own inferiority to Christ, or else the spontaneousness of his testimony, "I am not the Christ," "I am [but] a voice," "I baptize with water," "I am not worthy to loose his latchet" etc. The following are the instances in Greek: i. 20 ἐγὼ οὐκ εἰμὶ ὁ χρ., i. 23 ἐγὼ φωνή, i. 26—7 ἐγὼ βαπτίζω...οὐ οὐκ εἰμὶ [ἐγὼ] ἄξιος², i. 30 οὗτός ἐστιν ὑπὲρ οὗ ἐγὼ εἶπον (where Chrys. not only changes ὑπὲρ to the more usual περί but also drops ἐγώ), i. 31 (rep. 33) καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ᾔδειν, i.e. "and I for my part did not know him, it was God that revealed him to me," i. 31 διὰ τοῦτο ἦλθον ἐγὼ ἐν ὕδατι βαπτίζων, i. 34 καὶ γὰρ ἑώρακα, i.e. "and I, with my own eyes, opened by God, have seen," iii. 28 αὐτοὶ ὑμεῖς μοι μαρτυρεῖτε ὅτι εἶπον [ἐγώ] Οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐγὼ ὁ χριστός, i.e. I did not wait for others to dispute my claim to be Messiah, I myself spontaneously denied all claim. Here Alford rejects the first ἐγώ, apparently on the ground that B, alone of the uncials, has it.

(iii) Σ6

[2402] The pronoun "thou" (1726) occurs in John more frequently than in all the Synoptists together. It occurs four times in the short cross-examination of the Baptist by the Jews, four times in the Samaritan Dialogue, and seven times in Christ's Last Prayer—whereas in the whole of Mark's Gospel it does not occur more than ten times. In many cases the Jews use it to Jesus "Thou testifiest about thyself," "Art thou greater than our father Abraham?" etc. But its frequency extends to the whole of the Gospel and indicates the evangelist's tendency, 1st to lay stress on personality and, 2nd, to express personality in dialogue.

[2403] In xix. 9 "whence art thou (πόθεν εἶ σύ;)" a difficulty is raised by σύ as well as by πόθεν. As to πόθεν, it is barely conceivable that Pilate might have been so impressed by the charge of the Pharisees (xix. 7 "he made himself a son of God") that he returns to his mysterious prisoner with the question "From what source, celestial or terrestrial, art thou?" But, even in that case, there is no need of σύ, which in questions, as in imperatives, sometimes implies contempt (2734). Chrysostom—who apparently had a different reading—says that Pilate, terror-stricken, "begins his examination all over again saying, Art thou the Christ? (ἄνωθεν...λέγων Εἰ σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστός;)" But He gives him no answer¹."

[2404] The Index to Epictetus shews that πόθεν σοι; and πόθεν σύ; might be used, as detached phrases, to mean "How could you have the power to do so-and-so?" "How are you able to do this or that?"—with a suggestion of incredulity. This suggests another explanation of the words of Pilate. Fresh from the saying of the Pharisees ("He made himself Son of God") he comes back into the Praetorium repeating to himself "This man son of God!" and then utters his thought aloud to the prisoner, "How could you possibly be

¹ [2403 a] It is possible that Chrys. has confused the utterance of Pilate with the utterance of the High Priest in Mt. xxvi. 63, see 2734 d.

[Son of God]?” πόθεν εἶ σὺ; Some might take this as an inquiry about the province from which Jesus came—an inquiry mentioned by Luke alone². John, believing that this was an error, might insert the exact words that caused the error³. But see 2733—7.

III. RELATIVE

(i) “Oς

(a) Attraction of the Relative

[2405] In iv. 5 τοῦ χωρίου οὗ ἔδωκεν I., iv. 14 τοῦ ὕδατος οὗ ἐγὼ δώσω, xvii. 5 τῇ δόξῃ ἣν (marg. ἣν) εἶχον, xxi. 10 τῶν ὀψαρίων ὧν ἐπιάσατε, the relative pronoun corresponds to the defining relative in English (“that,” as in “the water that I shall give”) and John’s adherence to the Greek idiom of the attraction of the relative into the case of the antecedent helps to indicate that the latter without the former is incomplete⁴. Similarly in xv. 20 μνημονεύετε τοῦ λόγου οὗ ἐγὼ εἶπον ὑμῖν, the attracted relative indicates that “the saying” is meaningless until it is defined and completed. The meaning is not “the word, which I said,” but “the word that I said.”

[2406] But, if so, why is the relative not attracted—not at least in the best MSS.—in ii. 22 ἐπίστευσαν τῇ γραφῇ καὶ τῷ λόγῳ ὃν εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, and in iv. 50 *ἐπίστευσεν ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῷ λόγῳ ὃν εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς*⁵? The answer may be that in these two passages the “saying” is special, and may be called in some sense complete—not “the word that Jesus uttered [as a general doctrine],” but (1) “the [mysterious] word [about destroying the Temple], which Jesus then uttered,” (2) “the word [of healing, ‘Thy son liveth’], which Jesus

² Lk. xxiii. 6—7.

had just uttered." It may be urged that the same reasoning applies to xv. 20, which repeats the word "just uttered" in xiii. 16 "A bondservant is not greater than his lord." True, but it is also a word that Jesus uttered as a general doctrine (1784) "A disciple is not above his teacher."

[2407] The same explanation applies to the reading of B in vii. 39 τοῦτο δὲ εἶπεν περὶ τοῦ πνεύματος, ὃ ἐμελλον λαμβάνειν... Here W.H. place ο in marg. and οῦ in text. But the former may make better sense if the object is to make a pause after "Spirit." In that case, the meaning is not "the [new] spirit that was about to be received," but "the [Holy] Spirit, which (i.e. for indeed it) was about to be received." The relative "that" would differentiate the new outpouring of the Spirit from outpourings of the Spirit under the O.T. dispensation, by defining the former as "about to be received by believers." The relative "which" assumes that the readers know "the Spirit" to be "the Holy Spirit," and introduces a new fact about the Spirit, namely, that it was to be received after Christ had been glorified¹.

(β) Ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου ᾧ δέδωκάς μοι (see also 2740—4)

[2408] The relative has been altered by some authorities, because of its difficulty, in xvii. 11—12 "Holy Father, keep them in thy name that thou hast given me (ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου ᾧ δέδωκάς μοι) in order that they may be one even as we. When I was with them I kept them in thy name that thou hast given me (ἐν τῷ ὀ. σου ᾧ δέδωκάς μοι)." Some in the first clause, and more in the second, have changed ᾧ to οἷς ("those whom thou hast given me"), and SS omits both clauses. Chrysostom explains "in thy name" as "through thy help," and reads οἷς in the second clause (if not in the first).

[2409] If the text is correct, it implies a spiritual conception of God's Name and (probably) an indirect attempt to deliver the reader from some popular and philosophic misconceptions, which require a brief notice. All Jews were familiar with the prediction about the Prophet "like unto" Moses (that God's Name was to be "in him"), and with the language of Jehovah saying "I will put my name on" persons and places chosen by Him². The Epistle to the Philippians says that God "gave as a free gift (ἐχαρίσατο)" to Jesus "the name that is above every name," in order that "in the name of Jesus every knee should bow," whether in heaven or earth or beneath the earth¹. The Acts of the Apostles² relates an attempt of unbelieving Jews to use "the name of Jesus" as a sort of hocus-pocus for the purpose of casting out a devil; and the possibility of such an attempt is recognised in one version of Matthew-Luke's Tradition³. The Apocalypse says "To him that overcometh I will give a white pebble, and on the pebble a new name written, which none knoweth save he that receiveth it"⁴: it describes one sitting on a white horse as "having a name written that none knoweth save himself, and clad in a cloak sprinkled with blood, and his name is called the Word of God⁵," and adds, "His servants shall serve him and shall see his face and his name [shall be] on their foreheads⁶." These beautiful Apocalyptic traditions may be best and most naturally interpreted in a spiritual sense, but they are open to materialistic perversion.

[2410] Philo apparently implies that "the name of God" represents something inferior to God. The object to aim at is, to be (Deut. xiv. 1) "sons of the Lord God," but, he adds, "If anyone is not yet worthy to be called 'son of God,' let him aim at ordering himself after His firstborn Logos, the Angel, eldest [of angels] as being Archangel with many names: for He is addressed as 'Beginning,' and 'Name of God,' and 'Logos,' and 'the Man according to the Image,' and 'Seeing Israel⁷.'" And Justin says "As for name applicable to the Father of all, being unbegotten, there is no such thing... The words 'Father' and 'God' and 'Creator' and 'Lord' and 'Master' are not names, but appellations (προσρῆσεις) derived from beneficent actions and works⁸."

[2411] John's doctrine appears to be that the highest "name" of God is that of Him as Father—only as Father revealed through such a Son as Jesus Christ. In his Gospel, the word "name," when uttered by Christ, occurs almost always in the phrase (1) "thy name," or "the name of the (or, my) Father," or else (2) "in my name" as being the avenue through which the requests of the disciples are to pass to the Father¹. Christ's first mention of "the name of my Father" indicates that it is the stamp of the true Deliverer as distinguished from the false deliverer, who "comes in his own name." Hence, "thy name that thou hast given me" means "thy essential being, of Fatherhood, in the form in which thou hast given it to me, the Son." "Thy name," alone, might mean thy name as revealed to Israel under the Law, through Moses; but this "new name" is "the name of Fatherhood as given to the Son in order that He may transmit it to others, making all one in the Family of God²."

³ Mt. vii. 22 "In thy name have we cast out devils," where the parall. Lk. xiii. 25—6 omits the clause.

⁴ [2409 a] Rev. ii. 17. Ψῆφος "pebble," here (as in Acts xxvi. 10 and in Gk generally) probably means a voting tablet either for condemnation or acquittal, so that it may mean "forgiveness of sins." There may be a play on the phrase δίδωμι ψῆφον which means "I give my vote." Comp. 1 Jn iii. 20 "If our heart condemns us not we have confidence toward God." The context in 1 Jn indicates that this "non-condemnation" proceeds from "loving in deed and in truth": and Rev. ii. 17 perhaps means by "the new name" that new kind of love which the Son brought into the world and which "none knoweth save he that receiveth it."

[2411 b] "My name" occurs only in the Last Discourse, addressed to the disciples. Excluding the prediction xv. 21 "all these things will they do unto you because of my name, because they know not...," it is always in the phrase "in my name," concerning the disciples as asking, or the Father as "giving," or "sending" the Spirit, xiv. 13, 14, 26, xv. 16, xvi. 23, 24, 26—seven mentions.

² [2411 c] The "name," i.e. essence, of the Father (not of the Son) is "given" to the Son (not "revealed," which would imply unveiling). So in O.T. the Name of God is "put upon" the Temple. The Johannine doctrine bears on superstitious abuses of the name or names of God (see Orig. Cels. i. 6 and 24, comp. v. 45), and also on the interpretation of the words in the Lord's Prayer, "Father, be thy name made holy." In the Fourth Gospel, Christ only thrice uses the word "holy," namely, here, xvii. 11—12 "Holy Father, keep them in thy name that thou hast given me," xiv. 26 "the Paraclete, the Holy Spirit," and xx. 22 "Receive the Holy Spirit, whosoever sins ye forgive they are forgiven...." Taken together, the three passages suggest that "holiness" is manifested in connexion with the Holy Spirit, through unity and forgiveness of sins, and that God's "name" is "made holy" when the Spirit attains these objects.

[2411 d] Another aspect of the Johannine doctrine is in the Didaché x. 1 "Now after ye are filled (ἐμπλησθῆναι) give thanks thus, 'We give thanks unto thee, holy Father, for (ὅτι) thy holy name which (ὅδ) thou didst cause to tabernacle (κατεσκήνωσας) in our hearts,' where the writer means the relative clause to be essential, "the Holy Name of thine that" or "that Holy Name of thine which."

[2411 e] Why does Jn add "that thou hast given me" to "thy name"? Probably to lay stress on the free and full "giving"—"Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." This includes the Pauline distinction between attainment

(γ) ἘΝΤΟΛὴΝ ΚΑΙΝΗΝ...ὁ (1 Jn ii. 8)

[2412] In connexion with the above-mentioned "new name" of love, or Father, the following passage also may be mentioned as illustrating the use of the relative, 1 Jn ii. 8 "Again a new commandment (ἐντολήν) I write unto you, which thing (ὁ) is true in him and in you." Here, the preceding context bids the readers "walk" as Christ "walked," and the following context says that the true light is now shining, and (1 Jn ii. 10) "he that loveth his brother abideth in the light." In view of these contexts, the meaning of "which thing" appears to be "which assertion," namely, the assertion that the "commandment," which he has just called (1 Jn ii. 7) "not new," is also, paradoxically, "new." To love one's neighbour is a commandment of the Law, "old"; to love as Christ loved us is a commandment of the Son, "new." The only instance in which our Lord uses the word "new" in the Fourth Gospel is "A new commandment give I unto you that ye love one another—even as I loved you that ye also love one another¹." It is to this saying that the author of the Epistle is referring. The words may be paraphrased: "I have called the commandment 'old,' I now call it 'new': and truly the 'newness' is manifest—manifest in Him, giving His blood for us, manifest in you, made one with Him by His blood²."

attempted "through works," and "the free gift" received through "faith." The Hebrew "give" often means "appoint," and "the Law" is said to have been (i. 17) "given through Moses": but the same sentence adds that "the grace" (including all the grace that reached Israel through the Law) came through Jesus Christ.

² [2412 a] On viii. 40 ζητεῖτέ με ἀποκτείνει, ἄνθρωπον ὅς...λελάληκα, where ἄνθρωπον, at first sight, seems needless, see Origen who refers to it in his comment on Ps. lxii. 3 ἕως πότε ἐπιτίθεσθε ἐπ' ἄνθρωπον, saying, Τοῦτο ὁμοίον ἐστὶ τῷ Νῦν ζητεῖτέ με ἀποκτείνει. Ἀνθρωπον ζητοῦσιν ἀποκτείνει· καὶ οἱ ἐπιτιθέμενοι ἀνθρώπῳ ἐπιτίθενται. In the Hebrew of the Psalm, "man" appears to be emphatic, Sym. has ἀνδρός, and the Targ. has "a merciful man," as though the meaning were: "How long will ye spend your time in setting upon a man [made in God's image]!" To this emphasis Origen calls attention saying "This [expression of the Psalmist's] is like 'Now ye seek to kill me' [in the Gospel. In the Gospel] they seek to kill a man," and in the Psalm those that 'set upon [him]' set upon 'a man.'" Perhaps the present text in Origen has dropped ἄνθρωπον, and we ought to read Νῦν ζητεῖτέ με ἀποκτείνει, ἄνθρωπον. Ἀνθρωπον....

In Origen's Comm. Johann. (on viii. 40) although he does not quote Ps. lxii. 3 ἐπιτίθεσθε, the influence of it may be traced on his statement about τοὺς τῷ λόγῳ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐπιβουλευοντας that τῷ ἀνθρωπινωτέρῳ αὐτοῦ κ. βλεπομένῳ ἐπιτίθενται.

(ii) ὅστις

[2413] ὅστις, "whoever," "one that," is mostly used of a class. But it is also used in N.T. of an individual, to mean "the one that," especially at the beginning of a clause that introduces explanatory or illustrative statement¹. In such cases ὅστις, ἥτις etc. may be rendered "now he, she etc.," e.g. Gal. iv. 24—6 "One from mount Sinai...now this (ἥτις) is Agar...; but Jerusalem that is above is free, now this (ἥτις) is our mother." So in Jn viii. 53 "Art thou greater than our father Abraham (R.V.) which (ὅστις) died?" the purpose is to introduce the death of Abraham as illustrative of the necessity that all men should die. We may paraphrase the relative clause as "One that [great as he was] died," or "yet he died." In viii. 25 "Jesus said unto them (lit.), In the beginning whatever also I speak unto you (τὴν ἀρχὴν ὅτι καὶ λαλῶ ὑμῖν)," some take ὅτι as a conjunction, "because," but it is probably the neuter of ὅστις. This is discussed elsewhere (2154—6).

Subsequently he says οὐκ ἔστιν ὅτε ὁ κατὰ τὸν Ἰησοῦν τροπικῶς νοούμενος ἄνθρωπος οὐκ ἐπεδήμει τῷ βίῳ. These facts bear on the statement made above (1934—5) that ἄνθρωπον is emphatic in viii. 40, which means "a man, who"—quite distinct from "a man that" meaning "one that."

[2412 δ] In vi. 9 ἔστιν παιδάριον ᾧδε ὃς ἔχει, some authorities, including N, have δ. Some have ἐν before ᾧδε. Blass says (p. 317) "better παιδ. ἔχον, Chrys. Nonnus." Some corruption is indicated by the variations of words and order (b e, Syr. (Burk.) Chrys. "there is here a lad," a "est puer hic," f "est puer unus hic," SS "a certain lad hath on him here"). But ἔχει is probably correct. For Chrys. goes on to say μετὰ γὰρ τὸ εἰπεῖν "Ἐχει πέντε ἄρτους κριθίνους"—which suggests that a scribe has given his previous quotation incorrectly. As to the change of gender, comp. 2 S. xiii. 17 ἐκάλεσε τὸ παιδάριον αὐτοῦ τὸν προεστηκότα (unless the particip. is regarded as an appositional noun). Note also that N, which reads ῥ here, substitutes τινα in 1 Mac. xvi. 16 τινας τῶν παιδαρίων, and that D has OC here with a line drawn through the c. The facts indicate that δς was the original reading. On xix. 17 Κρανίου Τόπον δς, see 2738.

¹ [2413 a] In the parables, Matthew uses ὅστις to introduce the point of resemblance (of the householder, king, virgins etc.) between the emblem and the reality (e.g. "that planted a vineyard," "that took their lamps" etc.). So in Lk. vii. 37 "a woman that was in the city a sinner," the relative clause introduces what is essential to the narrative that follows. Comp. Mk xii. 18 "Sadducees (R.V.) which (ὅλτινες) say," where the "saying" is not a detached fact but bears on the following discussion. But initial ὅστις means "and accordingly or consequently" in Acts viii. 15 "They sent to them Peter and John, who accordingly (ὅλτινες) went down and prayed." It has been shewn (2273 a) that A.V. differs from Shakespeare, and R.V. from both, in the use of relative pronouns; and we must not expect Gk writers always to agree with one another in their use.

(a) "Οστις ἄν, or εἰάν

[2414] "Οστις with ἄν or εἰάν in the Johannine Gospel and Epistles occurs, certainly, only in the neuter, ii. 5 "Whatsoever (ἄν) he may say," xiv. 13, xv. 16 "whatsoever (ἄν) ye may ask." It is also probable in 1 Jn iii. 20 "[in] whatsoever (ὅτι εἰάν) our heart may condemn us." Bruder (Moulton) marks under this head xxi. 25 ἔστιν δὲ καὶ ἄλλα πολλὰ ἃ ἐποίησεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, ἅτινα ἐὰν γράφηται¹. But εἰάν here is generally regarded as meaning "if," in which case the construction would be quite different from that of ὅστις ἄν (or εἰάν), and the meaning would be "Of such a kind that if they should be written²." It is certainly strange that ἅτινα and εἰάν should be placed together by any N.T. writer except in the sense of "whatsoever things"³; and the fact is one of several that render the text extremely doubtful⁴. On ἄν and εἰάν interchanged see 2739.

² SS "that if one by one they were written," a, b, e, f, ff, "quae si."

[2414 c] In a second quotation, after describing Jesus as being (lit.) "a multitude of good [things] (πλήθος ἀγαθῶν)" Origen says about these "good [things]," (Huet ii. 12) "They have not however had room found for them (κεχωρημένων) by writings (ὑπὸ γραμμάτων). And why say I 'by writings,' when John says even (καὶ) concerning the whole world [that] 'Not even the world itself I think would have room for (οὐδὲ αὐτόν οἶμαι τὸν κόσμον χωρῆσαι) the books to be written'?" Here Origen seems to understand "the world would not have room" for the necessary books as meaning that not only "books," but even the "world," would be insufficient to "find room for" the expression of the acts of the Logos. The context and the quotation would make excellent sense if the two ran thus, in effect, "Why say I 'not by writings,' when John says 'not even by the world'?"—omitting "the books to be written."

[2414 d] In a third quotation, the context of which resembles that in the Philocalia above, Origen (Huet ii. 201 D foll.) says that "writing (γραφή)" in some cases, and "the tongue of man" in others, "have not made room for (οὐ κενώρηκε)," i.e. have not been capable of expressing, the highest mysteries of God; and he proceeds, "Ἔστι γὰρ καὶ ἄλλα πολλὰ ἃ ἐποίησεν ὁ Ἰ. ἅτινα ἐὰν γράφηται καθ' ἐν οὐδὲ αὐτὸν [τὸν κόσμον is omitted] οἶμαι χωρήσειν τὰ γραφόμενα βιβλία. Both in the Philocalia and here, he illustrates his view by St Paul's hearing (2 Cor. xii. 2 foll.) "words not to be uttered."

[2414 e] Again, in a fourth quotation, Origen (Huet ii. 326 D—E) speaks about the numerous words (ῥημάτων) of God "not only those that are written but also those that are (2 Cor. xii. 4) 'not to be uttered, which it is not lawful for a man to speak,' and these about which John says, οὐδ' αὐτὸν οἶμαι τὸν κόσμον χωρῆσαι τὰ γραφόμενα βιβλία": and he alludes to xxi. 25 as shewing that John could have written more Gospels than the world would hold (Huet ii. 88) 'Ἰωάννου, ὃς εὐαγγέλιον ἐν καταλείπειν, ὁμολογῶν δύνασθαι τοσαῦτα ποιῆσειν ἃ οὐδὲ ὁ κόσμος χωρῆσαι ἐδύνατο. He adds ἔγραψε δὲ καὶ τὴν Ἀποκάλυψιν κελευσθεὶς σιωπῆσαι καὶ μὴ γράψαι τὰς τῶν ἑπτὰ βροντῶν φωνάς—apparently as an instance of divinely commanded reticence.

[2414 f] In his Comm. on Lk. iii. 18 "Multa quidem et alia exhortans annunciabat," Origen freely refers to Jn thus, "De Christo refertur quia multa et alia locutus est quae non sunt scripta in libro isto quae si scriberentur neque ipsum puto mundum capere potuisset libros qui scribendi erant" (combining xxi. 25 with xx. 30 "not written in this book" and substituting "locutus est" for "fecit" so as to afford a parall. to Lk. iii. 18 "annunciabat"). On Lk. iv. 1 he has "Sicut mundus capere non poterat omnes libros si scripta fuissent quae fecit et docuit Jesus." Bearing on the many-sidedness of Christ's acts and words is a remark of Origen in his Comm. on Mt. xxvi. 55 indicating that he was disposed to believe that Christ's form was transfigured not only in the Transfiguration but on many other occasions: "Venit autem traditio talis ad nos de eo quoniam non solum duae formae in eo fuerunt, una quidem, secundum quam omnes eum videbant, altera autem, secundum quam transfiguratus est coram discipulis suis in monte, quando et resplenduit facies ejus tanquam sol, sed etiam unicuique apparebat secundum quod fuerat dignus. Et cum fuisset ipse, quasi non ipse omnibus videbatur: secundum quod de manna est scriptum, quando Deus filiis Israel panem misit de coelo omnem delectationem habentem, et ad omnem gustum convenientem: quando desiderio offerentis obsequens, ad quod quis voluerat vertebatur. Et non mihi videtur incredibilis esse traditio haec, sive corporaliter propter ipsum Jesum, ut alio et alio modo videretur hominibus, sive propter ipsam Verbi naturam, quod non similiter cunctis apparet." This belief comes out in the Acts of John (§ 2) where Christ standing on the shore of Gennesaret appears to James as a "child" but to John as a man, and afterwards in different shapes.

[2414 g] Again, Pamph. Mart. Pref. quotes from Origen "Ejus [Christi] gloriam esse discipuli, nec tamen audemus dicere quod facie ad faciem ab ipso traditam susceperimus intelligentiam eorum quae in divinis libris referuntur: 'quae quidem certus sum quod ne ipse quidem mundus' pro virtute ac maiestate sensuum 'capere potest,'" and ib. 3 "Sicut scriptum est: 'Ne ipsum quidem

[2415] On the whole it seems probable that the writer or editors of this Gospel have put down at its close a grammatically irregular utterance (perhaps one of the last utterances) of the aged Disciple, which combined the spiritual meaning of Philo with the hyperbolic expression customary among the teachers of Palestine. It also corresponded to the evangelist's saying in the Prologue that "the law [of God] was given through Moses but the grace and the truth [of God] came through Jesus Christ," and it came well here as a final warning: "Law may be put into writing but Grace and Truth cannot. No, even if a world full of books were written, more books would still need to be written, and yet the Grace of the Father and the Truth of the Father—which were the 'works' of the Son—would remain unexpressed." This statement has been placed in such a context that it might seem to refer to the great number of Christ's "mighty works," or "miracles." But that was probably not the Disciple's intention.

[2416] According to this view, in its original utterance the saying meant, in effect, "Whatever things (ἅτινα ἑάν) may be written about the Lord Jesus Christ, in detached narrative, [they will not suffice, nay,] even the whole world will not suffice to hold—[I will not say mundum capere posse arbitror libros qui scriberentur de gloria et de maiestate Filii Dei. Impossibile namque est literis committere ea quae ad Salvatoris gloriam pertinent." Here there is a distinct statement that the truths "cannot be committed to writing." This is quite a different statement from "the world could not hold the books," or "the mind of man could not take in the meaning."

[2414 h] Origen's view that χωρεῖν, "make room for," has for its object, not "books" but the attributes of the Logos, agrees both verbally and substantially with Philo (i. 253) τίς ἂν ἐχώρησε θεοῦ λόγων ἰσχὺν τῶν ἀπάσης κρείσσων ἀκοῆς... οὐδὲ γὰρ εἰ πλοῦτον ἐπιδείκνυσθαι βουλευθεῖη τὸν ἑαυτοῦ, χωρῆσαι ἂν (ἡπειρωθείσης καὶ θαλάσσης) ἢ συμπᾶσα γῆ, (i. 362) οὐδὲ γὰρ τῶν δωρεῶν ἱκανὸς οὐδεὶς χωρῆσαι τὸ ἀφθονον πλήθος, ἔσως δὲ οὐδὲ ὁ κόσμος, (ii. 218) ὁρέγω τῷ χάριτος ἀξίῳ πάσας ὅσας ἂν οἷός τε ἦ δέξασθαι δωρεάς, τὴν δὲ ἐμὴν κατάληψιν οὐχ οἷον ἀνθρώπου φύσις ἀλλ' οὐδ' ὁ σύμπας οὐρανὸς τε καὶ κόσμος δυνήσεται χωρῆσαι. In the context of the first of these three passages, Philo describes the flow of God's "graces (χάριτας)" ἐτέρας ἀντὶ ἐκείνων καὶ τρίτας ἀντὶ τῶν δευτέρων... in language remarkably like that of John (i. 16 χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος "grace for grace"); in the context of the second he quotes Proverbs (viii. 22) as attesting the existence of the Wisdom of God (which John calls the Logos) from the beginning. Add Long. De Subl. ix. 9 ὁ τῶν Ἰουδαίων θεσμοθέτης...τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ δύναμιν κατὰ τὴν ἀξίαν ἐχώρησε κατέφηνεν. Wetstein (ad loc.) quotes hyperbolic and literal traditions from the Talmud, that the world and the sky and the sea would not supply paper pens and ink sufficient to write out the knowledge of this or that Rabbi.

the portrait of the Lord, but] the books that would have to be written [in the attempt to represent Him]¹."

SUBJECT²(i) Collective or noun group

[2417] When the subject is a collective noun it may have in agreement with it a singular participle followed by a plural verb as in vii. 49 ὁ ὄχλος οὗτος ὁ μὴ γινώσκων τὸν νόμον ἐπάρατοί εἰσιν, xii. 12 ὁ ὄχλος πολὺς ὁ ἐλθὼν εἰς τὴν ἐορτὴν ἀκούσαντες... ἔλαβον. These two instances favour the plural reading in vi. 22 ὁ ὄχλος ὁ ἐστηκὼς πέραν τῆς θαλάσσης εἶδον (marg. ἰδὼν)³. In a subsequent clause, referring to "the multitude," the plural would naturally be used as in English, vi. 2 "There followed him a great multitude because they beheld" (comp. xi. 42, xii. 9, 18).

[2418] When the verb precedes several nouns that constitute its subject, the verb is mostly in the singular⁴. But in a few cases where perhaps the intention is, from the first, to set a list of names before the reader, the verb is plural, as in xix. 25 "Now there were standing... his mother, and his mother's sister, and..." xxi. 2 "There were together Simon Peter and Thomas and..." When a second verb subsequently refers to two subjects introduced by a first verb in the singular, the second verb is plural, xii. 22 ἔρχεται Ἀ. καὶ Φ. καὶ λέγουσιν, xx. 3 ἐξῆλθεν οὖν ὁ Π. καὶ ὁ ἄλλος μαθητῆς καὶ ἤρχοντο.

(ii) Neuter Plural

[2419] When the subject is a neuter plural, John's usage varies strangely. In most authors, the neuter plural with plural verb can often be explained on the ground that though the author writes a

² See also Anacoluthon, Ellipsis, and Number.

neuter noun, he is thinking of a masculine or feminine noun. But xix. 31 ἵνα μὴ μείνῃ ἐπὶ τοῦ σταυροῦ τὰ σώματα...ἵνα κατεαγῶσιν αὐτῶν τὰ σκέλη καὶ ἄρθῶσιν exhibits the two constructions side by side: and it can hardly be argued that σκέλη is more suggestive than σώματα of "a masculine noun." Is it possible that τὰ σκέλη is accusative, a construction very common with κατεαγῆναι in such phrases as "to have one's head, skull, collar-bone etc. broken¹"? This would have the advantage of avoiding the abrupt change of subject in passing from κατεαγῶσιν to ἄρθῶσιν (which, in classical Greek, would require αὐτοί before ἄρθῶσιν: "that their legs should be broken and the men themselves (αὐτοί) carried away"). Without αὐτοί, if σκέλη is nominative, the text reads as though the meaning were "that their legs should be broken and carried away." But if σκέλη is accusative, the meaning is "that they should have their legs broken and be taken away." In vi. 13, κλασμάτων...ἃ ἐπερίσσευσαν AN have -σεν, but the tendency to make this correction would be strong in some scribes; W. H. have -σαν without alternative.

(iii) Suspended

[2421] Ὁ πιστεύων, in vii. 38 ("He that believeth...rivers...shall flow from his belly") might be defended by some grammarians as implying ὅστις ἀν πιστεύῃ (where ὅστις might be regarded as having αὐτοῦ for its antecedent). But the construction is Hebraic (1920—2) as well as natural. In one or two passages, a word, or clause, with neuter noun or adjective, might be either subject or object, e.g. xv. 2 πᾶν κλῆμα ἐν ἐμοὶ μὴ φέρον καρπὸν αἶρει αὐτό. In the Parable of the Sower, Matthew and Luke have ὁ ἔχων where Mark has ὁς ἔχει¹, but there ὁ ἔχων is the subject of ἀκούετω.

[2419 b] The objection to this suggestion is that αὐτῶν should not have been inserted, as "their" is sufficiently expressed by the article. No authority omits αὐτῶν, but a renders it "illis." D and SS are missing. Syr. (Walton) has "ut confringerent crura eorum suspensorum atque deponerent eos," and so has the Diatessaron. In Nonnus, πόδες τέμνοντο favours the usual rendering.

(a) Πᾶν ὃ δέδωκας (xvii. 2)

[2422] The following requires separate discussion, xvii. 2 (R.V.) “Even as thou gavest him authority over all flesh, that whatsoever thou hast given him, to them he should give eternal life,” (A.V.) “that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him.” R.V., though closer to the Greek than A.V., has substituted “whatsoever” for “all that.” Grammatically, the Greek of the italicised words can only be construed as follows: “That he may give all that thou hast given him—[namely] eternal life—to them.” But the previous sentence mentions no persons that could be here referred to as “them,” so that this makes no sense. D alters “he may give” into “may have” and omits “to them,” leaving “that all that thou hast given to him may have eternal life.” This makes excellent sense and grammar, but there is no reason for supposing that it was the original text. Later on, we find “Father, [that] which (ὃ) thou hast given me, I will that where I am they also may be with me³,” which again indicates a desire to give prominence to the clause “that which thou hast given me” by assigning to it an irregular position in the forefront of the sentence. In these two passages, “all that (πᾶν ὃ) thou hast given me” (with or without “all”) means the Church collectively, and the subsequent pronoun (“to them,” “they also”) means the members of the Church individually. In the second of the two passages the pronoun happens to be capable of an appositional construction⁴, in the first it is not (1921—2). See also 2740—4.

³ xvii. 24. Here D makes no alteration.

⁴ [2422 a] In xvii. 24, we might theoretically explain the construction as θέλω ἵνα ὃ δέδωκάς μοι—ἐκείνοι ὧσιν μετ’ ἐμοῦ: but the author must not be supposed to have premeditated any such construction.

(iv) Omitted in partitive clauses

[2423] For the omission of the subject in a partitive clause as in xvi. 17 "[Some] of his disciples therefore said," and for consequent ambiguity, see 2042 and 2213—5.

(v) "They" non-pronominal.

[2425] In xviii. 25 "Now Simon Peter was...warming himself. [They] said therefore..." we must not render "they" by "people" but must go back to xviii. 18 "Now Peter also was standing with them and warming himself," treating the intervening words (xviii. 19—24) as a parenthesis². In xix. 29 "there was set there a vessel full of vinegar," the evangelist probably assumes that "vinegar" would be understood to mean "wine for the soldiers on guard" (just as, in ii. 10, "wine" implied "wine for the guests"). Consequently he assumes that the following words, "so [they] put a sponge," would be understood to refer to "the soldiers." In xx. 1—2 "Mary Magdalene...seeth the stone taken away from the tomb; she runneth therefore...and sayeth...['They] have taken the Lord out of the tomb,'" "they" cannot mean "people." Mary's mind is full of the thought of Christ and of what His enemies have done to Him. She infers, from what she naturally regards as a hostile act, that the chief priests, not content with killing Him, have removed the body, and "they" means "the chief priests," or "the Lord's enemies."

² [2425 a] Similarly, in ix. 24 "[they] therefore called," we have to pass over the immediately preceding verse about the man's "parents" and to go back to the statement about "the Jews."

Reviewing the instances, so far, we do not find any in which the missing subject cannot be supplied from the context¹.

[2426] We come now to omissions of the subject in words of our Lord. In one of them, "they" appears to refer to "the world" previously mentioned "If the world hateth you, reflect that it hath hated me...remember the word that I said unto you, 'The servant is not greater than his Lord.' If [they] persecuted me they will persecute you also²." But there is nothing for the pronoun to refer to in the earlier instance "If a man abide not in me he is cast forth as the branch [of the vine] and is withered, and THEY gather them and cast them into the fire and they are burned³." Here, theoretically, we might supply "people," and if the passage occurred in Mark that would perhaps be the best rendering; but as there has been no previous mention of vine-dressers, and as there has been a previous mention of the Father as "cleansing" the vine, it is probable that THEY—in accordance with frequent Jewish tradition as well as occasional Synoptic usage—means "the powers of heaven" or "the angels."

(vi) "We" non-pronominal⁴

[2427] "We" non-pronominal—i.e. expressed by verbal inflexion and not by pronoun—in 1 Jn i. 1 "that which we have heard, that which we have seen with our eyes...", appears to mean the writer of the Epistle and his companions, as "we" means in the opening sentences of a Pauline Epistle: but it may mean "we all," "we disciples of Christ," as probably in 1 Jn ii. 28 "And now, little children, abide in him, that, if he shall be manifested we [all] may have confidence." The most serious ambiguity arising from this use of "we" is in xxi. 24 "we know that his witness is true." Are these

¹ [2425 b] With these contrast Mk i. 32 (Mt. viii. 16 sim.) "But in the evening...[they] brought unto him all that were sick" (where Mk i. 29—31 has previously mentioned the healing of Peter's mother-in-law without any suggestion of persons that could be called "they"); the parall. Lk. iv. 40 has "All that had sick folk...led them to him."

² xv. 16—20, where "the world" is six times mentioned.

⁴ [2427 a] The difference between the non-pronominal and the pronominal "we" is illustrated by 1 Jn iii. 2, v. 15 (bis), 19, 20 οἶδαμεν and iii. 14 ἡμεῖς οἶδαμεν (where "we" is opposed to "the world"). In Jn vi. 42, ix. 24, 29 "we (ἡμεῖς) know" implies "we know, even if others do not" (2399—2400).

the words of the evangelist, and do they mean "We all know that the witness of the Son to the Father is true"? Or are they the words of some unknown persons, e.g. the elders of the Church of the city where the evangelist was writing, and do they mean, in effect, "We [elders of Ephesus, Antioch, or Jerusalem] hereby certify that the witness of this evangelist is true"?

[2428] Before discussing this very important passage, we may mention some instances in which our Lord includes Himself in the non-pronominal "we":—iii. 11 (to Nicodemus) "We speak that which we know and testify that which we have seen and ye receive not our testimony," vi. 5 (to Philip) "Whence are we to buy bread that these may eat?" xiv. 31 "Arise, let us go (ἀγωμεν) hence." In the first of these, there may be, on the surface, some slight irony—when our Lord ranks Himself with other teachers of spiritual truth, in addressing Nicodemus, who had called Him (iii. 2) "a teacher," and whom He had called (iii. 10) "the teacher." But there is also an inner meaning, namely that the Son is "not alone" in His testimony, which corresponds to that of "*two men*¹," being the testimony of the Father and the Son, so that "we speak" means "the Father and I speak." A similar inner meaning seems to belong to vi. 5 "Whence are we to buy bread," where the Johannine "buying"—an entirely new version of the parallel Synoptic "*buying*²"—appears to be typical of the procuring of the Eucharistic "flesh" and "blood," the sacrifice ordained by the Father and offered by the Son. The third instance has been discussed elsewhere, and it has been shewn that "Arise ye, let us go," is a tradition of Mark and Matthew omitted by Luke and liable to be misunderstood as meaning flight, but really meaning appeal to Justice. It ought however to be added that the insertion of "hence" by John ("Arise ye, let us go hence") assimilates the words to a famous tradition recorded by Josephus that before Jerusalem was taken by the Romans there was a noise in the Temple as of a rushing host, and the gate opened, and a Voice was heard, "Let us pass hence (ἐντρέθηεν)³." Of course these last two passages also have their literal meaning, in which Christ associates Himself with the disciples: but the non-pronominal "we,"

² [2428 a] Mk vi. 36—7 "that they may buy...are we to buy," Mt. xiv. 15 "that they may buy," Lk. ix. 13 "unless...we are to buy." In Mk-Lk. "we" means the disciples. Chrys., however, in Jn, omits the "buying." See 2745.

in a saying of Christ, is so fraught with probabilities of latent mysticism that it gives us very little help on the words, not uttered by Christ, now under discussion (xxi. 24) "We know that his testimony is true¹."

[2428 c] D has δι ἡμᾶς ἐργάζεσθαι. This might mean "for our sakes. Work ye." But D means δεῖ by δι, "it is necessary for us to work." MSS. often express εἰ by ι (see Boeckh Inscr. Gr. 4588 κε δι=καὶ δεῖ) and errors arise in consequence. Again ἡμᾶς and ὑμᾶς are liable to confusion—as may be seen from Jn viii. 54, 1 Jn i. 4 where W.H. give the two (ὑμῶν and ἡμῶν) as alternatives. Origen, then, might easily have read the words before ἐργάζεσθε as δι' ὑμᾶς "in order that the works of God may be manifested in him, i.e. the blind man, for your sakes." This would make excellent sense. Comp. xi. 42 (in the Raising of Lazarus) διὰ τὸν ὄχλον...εἶπον, "I said it for the sake of the multitude," xii. 30 οὐ δι' ἐμέ ἡ φωνὴ αὐτῆς γέγονεν ἀλλὰ δι' ὑμᾶς, "for your sakes," and so, xi. 15 χαίρω δι' ὑμᾶς ἵνα πιστεύσητε.

[2428 d] SS has "and me it behoves to do...," and so Ephrem (p. 197) "et me oportet operari..." The Vat. MS. of the Arabic Diatess. (ed. Hogg) has, as the preceding words, "that we may see the works of God in him," and the Clementine Homilies (xix. 22 Clark) have "that the power of God might be made manifest through him in healing the sins of ignorance." SS, Diatess. and the Latin vss all have "me" twice ("it behoves me—him that sent me"), but N*L have "us" twice.

[2428 e] Origen's first quotation is in a comment on Jer. xiii. 16 "Give glory to the Lord your God before (marg.) it grow dark," thus (Huet i. 125) "Perhaps we shall understand this scripture (τὸ γεγραμμένον) by applying (χρησάμενοι) a Gospel saying uttered by the Saviour, which runs thus (οὕτως ἐχούση) 'Work while (ἔως) it is day. There cometh night when no man can work.'" He adds that Christ gives the name of "day" to "this world," contrary to custom. His second is from the early part of his commentary on John (Huet ii. 25) "He says to them that are partakers of His own Light, 'Work as (ὡς) it is day. There cometh night when no man can any longer (οὐκέτι οὐδεὶς) work: when (ἔσταν) I am in the world I am the light of the world.'" It will be observed that in both these quotations Origen omits "the works of him that sent me (or, us)": and the length of the quotation, in the second instance, suggests that he is not quoting from memory but from MS. These and other variations, if they do not demonstrate that the passage is corrupt, suffice to shew that W.H.'s text cannot be relied on as a proof that Jesus here uses ἡμᾶς to mean "My disciples and I."

(a) "We know (οἶδμεν)" (xxi. 24)

[2429] We return to the discussion of the words "we know that his witness is true," in the hope of ascertaining what "we" means. According to the analogy of the Epistle, it might mean (1) the writer, associating himself with others ("we all know"), or (2) with some fellow-evangelists or fellow-teachers ("we know") as distinct from those who are taught, who might be addressed as "you." Both these meanings occur (2427) in the Epistle. But it might mean (3) "we, the elders of the Church among whom this Gospel has been preached and is now being published, know that the witness of the evangelist is true." This third hypothesis must not be discredited by the mere fact that such an attestation is unique in this Gospel. For how could it well be otherwise? It would come naturally at the end of the book, once for all.

[2430] One argument against this third hypothesis is the fact that it does not come quite at the end of the book. After it there comes one more sentence, which contains the first person singular, xxi. 25 "But there are also many other things that Jesus did, the which (?) if they are to be written (ἐὰν γράφηται) *one by one, I think not even the world will hold the books that are [to be] written*¹." Portions of this sentence are repeatedly (2414 b—f) quoted by Origen, and thrice as coming from the evangelist. It could hardly come from any one else, at least in substance². For what mere scribe, or Editor, would venture to append his own expression of personal opinion to such a work as the Fourth Gospel? Moreover, it exhibits a strong sense of the inadequacy of any "books" to represent the multifarious action of Jesus—just such a sense as we might suppose likely to be expressed again and again by a very aged disciple of Jesus contrasting his personal recollections of the Lord with "the books that were being written."

² [2430 b] Tischendorf says that xxi. 25, in Σ, is written by a different scribe from the one that wrote the body of the Gospel. But this scribe (according to W.H. ad loc.) appears to have been D, the διορθωτής, or corrector, of the ms., who also probably (according to Tischendorf (Σ p. xxi)) wrote the last leaf of Mk and the first of Lk., as well as what may be described as the title and the salutation in Rev. i. 1—4 "The Revelation...and from the seven Spirits which are before the throne and from Jesus Christ." These facts are consistent with the hypothesis that the change of handwriting may imply some special circumstances but not necessarily interpolation or diminished authority.

[2431] This postscript must be compared with a previous postscript. After the manifestation to Thomas ending with the words, "Blessed are they that have not seen and [yet] have believed," the writer adds, xx. 30—1 "Many other signs therefore did Jesus in the presence of the disciples, which are not written in this book. But these have been written that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that, believing, ye may have life in his name." This apparently deals solely with the Resurrection and the signs wrought by the Lord "in the presence of (2335) the disciples" after the Resurrection, committed to writing in order that, profiting by the rebuke to Thomas, the readers of his narrative ("ye") might be "blessed," "not having seen and yet having believed."

[2432] That would seem to have been a fit termination to the Gospel—a statement of its object, addressed by the impersonal writer to the readers in the second person "that ye may have life in his name." But something seems to have happened to make another termination desirable. The reputed author, or originator—the disciple whom Jesus loved—lived (so says tradition) to a great age prolonged past decrepitude: and it was commonly reported, on the basis of an utterance imputed to Christ Himself, that he was not to die till our Lord's coming. When the old man's end had arrived¹, or drew manifestly near, it would become desirable to contradict this rumour and to shew how it had arisen. For this purpose an account of the utterance and of its occasion and circumstances was committed to writing. And this we find in the last chapter.

[2433] These circumstances would be exceptional, and might well explain an exceptional conclusion. After this Appendix (concerning what may be called the Johannine manifestation of the Resurrection) had been written out, it may have been submitted to the aged Disciple of the Lord, to receive, perhaps, a word or two of writing in his own hand like that at the end of the Epistle to the Galatians "in large letters." If so, it might be difficult to say which part of the Postscript belonged to the evangelist—who regards himself as writing the Gospel in the Disciple’s name—which part (if any) to the Elders of the Church, and which to the Disciple himself¹. Chrysostom most certainly recognises nothing as coming from Elders. And he quotes οἶδαμεν, once at least, as οἶδα, “I know, he says, that the things that he says are true².” One might have supposed this to mean that the evangelist was “setting his seal” to the truth of the “testimony” of Christ³ about which the Gospel speaks so often: but apparently Chrysostom means “I know that the things I said about Him were true.” The context is not very clear, and it is possible that Chrysostom may have read οἶδα μέν and ἔστιν δέ, although he quotes the text freely as οἶδα and ἔστι γάρ⁴.

[2434] Some variations in the mss. and Latin versions add to the uncertainty of interpretation⁵. Of course unaccented Greek mss. would give no guidance as to ΟΙΔΑΜΕΝ whether it was to be taken as two words or one. The main internal evidence for ΜΕΝ, “on the one hand,” is found in the following ἔστιν δέ: but this is omitted by SS and by the best Latin versions⁶. Yet ἔστιν δέ is almost certainly

⁶ [2434 b] Οἶδαμεν occurs in 1 Jn iii. 2, v. 15 (bis), v. 19, 20, and ἡμεῖς οἶδαμεν an integral part of the sentence in which it stands. If both οἶδα μέν and ἔστιν δέ belonged to "the disciple whom Jesus loved," the most natural explanation of "his testimony" is "Christ's testimony"; and the Disciple must here be regarded as declaring his conviction that, whether he is to await the Lord's coming or to die—however much some may have misinterpreted the words "If I will that he tarry"—the Lord's testimony, and especially the testimony after the Resurrection, is absolutely true¹.

[2435] On the whole, the most probable conclusion is that οἶδαμεν is one word and represents the attestation of unnamed persons, and that the words following the attestation in the first person are an addition, supposed to come from the teaching of the aged Disciple, repeating, in effect, what he had said at the conclusion of the first edition of the Gospel. Then he had said that there were many more details, "not written in this book," of that vivid period after the Resurrection during which the Saviour was continually manifesting Himself to the disciples. Now he says that "if these details continue to be written," the world will not "hold" or "contain" all this "writing of books"—and he probably implies also that, "whatever number of these details may be written," the in 1 Jn iii. 14. In all these cases it means "We, the disciples of Christ, know." On the one hand, this might be urged as shewing that οἶδα μέν would be assimilated to the phrase in the Epistle by the error of scribes. But it seems to me a stronger argument, that a writer so fond of οἶδαμεν would not write οἶδα μέν.

[2434 d] If οἶδαμεν proceeded from the evangelist as part of the same sentence in which he also says οἶμαι, we should have to suppose the meaning to be "We [the disciples of Christ, all] know that the testimony of the Lord is true, but..." which seems improbable.

[2434 e] On Rom. vii. 14 οἶδαμεν γὰρ ὅτι ὁ νόμος πνευματικός ἐστιν, Alford says that Jerome has "scio." Gennadius (Cramer) certainly read οἶδα μέν, for he has ἐπίσταμαι ὅτι ὁ νόμος πν. ἐ. Cyril may have done so, for he has ἀμωμόν φησιν εἶναι τὸν νόμον, οἶδε γὰρ ἀμώμους ἀποτελεῖν. This is applied to David, as a parallel to the Apostle, who ληχυρίζεται μὲν ὅτι πνευματικός ὁ νόμος αἰτιάται δὲ τὴν ἀνθρώπου φύσιν. Οἶδε and μέν combine to suggest that he read οἶδα μέν. Origen (Lomm. vii. 31—2) seems to recognise, and to correct, this interpretation, by saying—after quoting the text with "scimus"—"Legem vero spiritualem esse non solus Paulus sciebat, sed et hi qui ab ipso imbuebantur."

portrait of the Saviour will not be "held" or "contained" in the "books".

TENSE

[2436] Tense-idioms will be conveniently arranged under subdivisions of Mood. Tense-rules are sometimes interfered with by word-rules, e.g. the perfects of some verbs are rarely or never used, so that writers may be led to use the aorist for the perfect in those words. Hence the difference between two writers can sometimes be best illustrated by comparing, not their tense-usage in general, but their uses of the tense of one or two words in particular: and the shades of meaning intended by a single writer can often be perceived in the same way.

I. IN THE IMPERATIVE MOOD

(i) Aorist (first) and Present

[2437] The first aorist imperative is (1) sometimes more definite, (2) sometimes more authoritative², (3) sometimes more solemn³ than the present imperative, which may denote continuous action. John uses the aorist "abide" in the Lord's mouth, but the present is used by the writer of the Epistle¹. The authoritative imperative occurs in the miracle at Cana, ii. 5 (Christ's mother) ποιήσατε, ii. 7—8 (Christ) γεμίσατε, ... ἀντλήσατε: at the Cleansing of the Temple, ii. 16 ἄρατε, and ii. 19 λύσατε: in Christ's words to the Samaritan woman, iv. 16 φώνησόν σου τὸν ἄνδρα, and afterwards to the disciples, iv. 35 ἐπάρατε...καὶ θεάσασθε: in the Feeding of the Five Thousand, vi. 10 ποιήσατε: in the Healing of the Blind, ix. 7 ὕπαγε νύφαι: in the Raising of Lazarus, xi. 39, 44 ἄρατε, ...λύσατε: in the rejected (937—40) prayer xii. 27 σῶσόν με, and in the accepted prayer (ιβ.) δόξασόν σου τὸ ὄνομα: in the last words to Judas Iscariot, xiii. 27 ποιήσον τάχειον: in the Last Discourse, xv. 9 μέινετε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ τῇ ἐμῇ: in the narrative of the Draught of Fish and the subsequent meal, xxi. 10—12 ἐνέγκατε and ἀριστήσατε.

[2438] The instance in the Last Discourse ("Abide in my love") is perhaps the nearest approach to an authoritative command (in John) to obey a moral or spiritual precept. Our Lord never uses (1507 a) the authoritative form of the imperative in "believe ye," but frequently the present imperative, which occurs also in vi. 27 ἐργάζεσθε, vii. 24 κρίνετε, and xii. 35 περιπατεῖτε etc.² The three Synoptists have "thou shalt love." Two (Mt.-Lk.) have "love ye (ἀγαπάτε)." John has neither. Yet his Gospel connects "love" with what Christ calls "my commandment," and his Epistle abounds in "love"—but never "love ye" except in the phrase "love not the world."

² [2438 a] In ii. 8 ἀντλήσατε κ. φέρετε, v. 11 ἄρον κ. περιπάτει why have we not ἐνέγκατε (as in xxi. 10) and περιπάτησον? Probably because only the first action is to be done at once.

[2438 b] The remarks in this section apply only to the first aorist imperative. The second aorist has not this solemn or authoritative meaning. Indeed, in special words, the second aorist may be less authoritative than the present. For example, in iv. 16 φώνησον...κ. ἐλθέ, it is probable that the substitution of ἐρχου for ἐλθέ would have been more solemn (as in i. 46, xi. 34, Rev. vi. 1, 3, 5, 7, xxii. 17 (bis), 20) or authoritative (as in Mt. viii. 9, Lk. vii. 8).

but believe at once (πίστευσον)¹. The aorist imperative is indeed assigned to Christ once (so W.H. without alternative) by Luke, in the Healing of Jairus's daughter. But the corresponding passage in Mark has the present². Mark again prefers the present imperative in xiii. 21 "If anyone say unto you, 'See, here is the Christ,' (lit.) Be not disposed to believe (μὴ πιστεύετε)" where Matthew has (xxiv. 23, 26) "Believe [them] not," μὴ πιστεύσητε. This use of the present imperative (Mk xiii. 21 "be not disposed to believe") may perhaps be applied politely to things already done (like the formula "let not my lord say so," applied to what is already said) as in Jn xix. 21 μὴ γράφε, concerning what is already written. It is equivalent to "let not my lord write," and invites Pilate to cancel what he has written³.

[2439 (i)] Both Origen and Chrysostom accept without question the imperative rendering of ἐραυνάω in v. 38—9 τὸν λόγον...οὐκ ἔχετε...ὅτι...οὐ πιστεύετε. ἐραυνάτε τὰς γραφάς, ὅτι ὑμεῖς δοκεῖτε ἐν αὐταῖς ζωὴν αἰώνιον ἔχειν· καὶ ἐκεῖναί εἰσιν αἱ μαρτυροῦσαι περὶ ἐμοῦ· καὶ οὐ θέλετε ἐλθεῖν πρὸς με.... But against this view is the fact that in the few cases where ἐραυνάω is imperative in O.T. and N.T. the aorist is used⁴, and that one of these passages is in John and refers to the searching of Scripture. Chrysostom says that the Jews merely "read" the Scripture whereas Christ bade them "search" and "dig" in them. But the answer is (1) that the Jews did "search," (2) that their term "Midrash" implied most diligent "searching," and (3) that the Pharisees themselves exhorted Nicodemus to "search." It is also antecedently more probable that Christ would have advised the Jews to turn their hearts toward the love of God rather than to "search the Scriptures." Moreover the indicative agrees better with the indicatives that precede and follow: "Ye have not his word in you...because...ye believe not. Ye search the Scriptures (1722 g)

² [2439 δ] Mk v. 36 μόνον πίστευε, Lk. viii. 50 μόνον πίστευσον καὶ σωθήσεται, "only a special act of faith and she will be healed!" Comp. Epict. Fragm. § 3 "If you wish to be good, first believe once for all (πίστευσον) that you are bad."

³ The explanation "Do not persist in writing" would apply to Jn xix. 21, but not to Mk xiii. 21.

[2439 (ii)] In xii. 19 οἱ οὖν Φ. εἶπαν πρὸς ἑαυτοὺς, θεωρεῖτε ὅτι οὐκ ὠφελεῖτε οὐδέν, A.V. has "Perceive ye...?" R.V. "Behold" imper., but marg. "Ye behold." The indicative is supported by Acts xix. 25—6 ἐπίστασθε—καὶ θεωρεῖτε καὶ ἀκούετε, i.e. "ye behold with your own eyes, or see for yourselves," where the Ephesians are asked to "behold" how "this Paul" has perverted almost the whole of Asia—a passage remarkably like the Johannine one, in which a similar charge is brought against Jesus. θεωρεῖτε is also indicatively used in Acts xxv. 24 and θεωρεῖς in Acts xxi. 20. "Thou seest [for thyself] brother [without words from us] how many myriads there are...." The imperative (twice) in LXX is followed by an accusative or πῶς, and nowhere by a clause with ὅτι¹. On the whole, the meaning probably is "Ye see for yourselves that ye profit nothing. Behold (ἰδε) the world hath gone after him." If so, the conclusion slightly confirms the view that ἐραυνᾶτε above (2439 (i))—which is similarly initial and without ὑμεῖς—is also indicative. Comp. Jas ii. 24 ὁρᾶτε ὅτι ἐξ ἔργων δικαιοῦται ἄνθρωπος where R.V. has "ye see" without alternative².

[2439 (iii)] Λύσατε in ii. 19 "destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up" is explained by Blass (p. 221) as "equivalent to a concessive sentence... = εἰὰν καὶ λύσητε" and illustrated by Soph. Ant. 1168 ff. and also (ib. p. 321) by "Eph. iv. 26 O.T. ὀργίσεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε, which must mean 'angry you may be, but do not sin withal.'" This last passage, however, is from Ps. iv. 4 "Stand in awe (marg. be ye angry) and sin not," and Origen, ad loc., after a long discussion of LXX ὀργίσεσθε, which, he says, may be "indicative (ὀριστικόν)" or "imperative (προστακτικόν)" decides for the former. Of course he may be wrong, but his decision makes it probable that the LXX meant the indicative and that St Paul took it so: "Ye are angry [from time to time, it needs must be so], but¹ do not let your anger become a sin."

[2439 (iv)] What might be called a "concessive" imperative occurs in Eccles. xi. 9 "Rejoice, young man, in thy youth...and walk in the ways of thine heart and in the sight of thine eyes, but (Heb. and) know that for all these things God shall bring thee into judgment²." This imperative—which might perhaps be better called "minatory," for it implies a threat, "do this if you will, but at your peril," "do this, but take the consequences"—is well instanced in Epict. iv. 9. 18, addressing those who seek other objects than virtue, "If thou seekest...continue doing as thou art doing (ποίει ὡς ποιεῖς), not even a god can any longer save thee." This "minatory" imperative is common to all languages, e.g. Is. viii. 9 "Make an uproar ...and be broken in pieces," Soph. Ant. 1168, in effect "Go on making money and it will all be a shadow" etc.

[2439 (v)] Whether ii. 19 λύσατε should be called a "concessive" or "minatory," or some other imperative is rather a matter of taste than of grammar. I should prefer to illustrate it by the imperatives in Isaiah vi. 9 "Go and tell this people, Hear ye indeed but understand not; and see ye indeed but perceive not" uttered in obedience to the command of Jehovah, "Make the heart of this people fat." So after the cleansing of the Temple by Jesus, when the Jews refuse to accept the act, Christ regards them as virtually bent on defiling and destroying the Temple, and says, in effect, "Destroy it, then, and I will raise it up." And similarly when Judas, after the washing of feet, and after receiving the "sop," adheres to his treachery and receives Satan into his heart, Christ says, "What thou art doing, do more quickly." With the condemnation of Israel by Jehovah pronounced by Isaiah it is usual to connect the phrase "judicial blindness": and perhaps we might say that John regards the verbs in ii. 19 and xiii. 27 as "judicial imperatives³."

² [2439 (iv) a] Here the LXX has "walk spotless in [thy] ways and not in the sight of thine eyes and know..." The Targum corrupts the text in the same way so as to make all the imperatives hortative. "In...thine eyes" implies self-will.

³ [2439 (v) a] On ii. 19 Origen (ad loc.) says nothing that bears on λύσατε except (Lomm. i. 348) τοῦτον τὸν ναὸν λυθῆναι δεῖ ὑπὸ τῶν ἐπιβουλεύοντων τῷ λόγῳ τοῦ θεοῦ. On xiii. 27 ποιήσον he says (ad loc.) that Christ speaks προκαλούμενος

II. IN THE INDICATIVE MOOD

(i) Aorist

(1) Aorist compared with Perfect

[2440] Commenting on Col. i. 16 "in him all things were created (ἐκτίσθη)...all things through him and to him have been created (ἐκτισται)" Lightfoot says, "The aorist is used here: the perfect below. Ἐκτίσθη describes the definite historical act of creation; ἐκτισται the continuous and present relations of creation to the Creator: comp. Joh. i. 3 χωρὶς αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο οὐδὲ ἓν with ἰβ. ὃ γέγονεν, 1 Cor. ix. 22 ἐγενόμην τοῖς ἀσθενέσιν ἀσθενής with ἰβ. τοῖς πᾶσιν γέγονα πάντα, 2 Cor. xii. 17 μή τινα ὦν ἀπέσταλκα with ver. 18 καὶ συναπέστειλα τὸν ἀδελφόν, 1 Joh. iv. 9 τὸν μονογενῆ ἀπέσταλκεν ὁ θεὸς εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἵνα ζήσωμεν δι' αὐτοῦ with ver. 10 ὅτι αὐτὸς ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς καὶ ἀπέστειλεν τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ." This comment supplies a clue to several Johannine distinctions between the aorist and the perfect¹. For example, as regards Christ's "coming into the world," or incarnation, "I came" represents the definite act, "I have come" the continuous and present relation. But other explanations are sometimes called for by Johannine use, which presents the following paradoxical characteristics².

τὸν ἀνταγωνιστὴν (i.e. Satan) ἐπὶ τὴν πάλην ἢ τὸν προδότην ἐπὶ τὸ διακονῆσαι τῇ σωτηρίῳ κόσμῳ ἐσομένη οἰκονομία, ἣν οὐκ ἔτι...μέλλειν οὐδὲ βραδύνειν ἀλλ' ὅση δύναμις ταχύνειν ἤθελεν. These last words favour the view taken elsewhere that τάχιον means, not "quickly," but "more quickly" (1918, 2554 b—e).

[2439 (v) c] In viii. 38 καὶ ὑμεῖς οὖν ἃ ἠκούσατε παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς ποιεῖτε, one of several renderings of that difficult passage takes ποιεῖτε as imperative, but reasons have been given (2194 c) for taking it as indicative.

² [2440 δ] On iv. 3 ἀπῆλθεν πάλιν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, Blass (p. 192) justly says that the aorist "is at least remarkable, since the aorist denotes the journey as completed...." On this, and on the treatment of the passage in the Diatessaron, see 2635 (i).

[2441] On the one hand John uses the aorist where English would use the perfect, e.g. x. 32 "many good works have I shewed (ἐδείξα) you," xii. 28 "I have both glorified (ἐδόξασα) it and will glorify it again," xiii. 14 "If I have washed (ἐνίψα) your feet," xiii. 18 "I know whom I have chosen (R.V. marg. chose) (ἐξελεξάμην)," xiii. 34 "As I have loved (ἡγάπησα) you," xv. 15 "I have made known (ἐγνώρισα) to you," xx. 2 "They have taken away (ἦραν)...they have laid (ἐθηκαν) him¹," xxi. 10 "Bring of the fish that ye have now caught (ἐπιάσατε)." These aorists may be explained in part because Greek does not use the perfect so frequently as in English to denote a recently completed action, but in part by the fact that the Greek perfects of these particular verbs are comparatively seldom used, and John, having no special reason for laying stress on the completion of the action, may prefer the more usual form².

[2442] On the other hand John uses the perfect where we might have expected the aorist, or the present, e.g. v. 45 "Moses, in whom

² [2441 a] The Greeks seem to have avoided several active perfects, e.g. of κτίζω, ὀρίζω, ζητέω, γνωρίζω, somewhat as we might avoid the perf. of "awake"—doubting between "have awakened" and "have awoken" (2747—53). The rarity of a suitable perfect may explain the aorist in vi. 70 (A.V.) "Have not I chosen you?," but there R.V. has "Did not I choose?" without alternative, as also in xv. 16—19, where A.V. has "Ye have not chosen me but I have chosen you... I have chosen you out of the world." I do not understand why R.V. txt adopts "have chosen" (Westc. "chose") in xiii. 18 alone ("I know whom I have chosen"). "Have," if denoting recent choice, would seem most appropriate to vi. 70.

[2441 b] The aorist of ἐκλέγομαι is applied to God or Christ in Mk xiii. 20 διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς οὓς ἐξελέξατο (Mt. xxiv. 22 om. οὓς ἐξ., Lk. diff.), Lk. vi. 13 ἐκλεξάμενος ἀπ' αὐτῶν δώδεκα (Mk-Mt. diff.). Ἐξελέξατο occurs in 1 Cor. i. 27 (ὅις), 28, Jas ii. 5, to describe God as choosing the poor and despised, and Eph. i. 4 has καθὼς ἐξελέξατο ἡμᾶς ἐν αὐτῷ πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου. In Acts, it refers to the choosing of apostles or missionaries in i. 2, 24, vi. 5, xv. 7, 22, 25 etc., and only once (xiii. 17) to God's choosing the "fathers" of Israel.

[2441 c] It seems clear that Mk xiii. 20 ἐξελέξατο means "chose," emphatically, implying final or irrevocable election or something of the kind. This is also implied in Mk xiii. 22, Mt. xxiv. 24 εἰ δυνατόν (Mt. + καὶ) τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς (which suggests that "the elect" could not possibly be led finally astray) and in Mt. xxii. 14 "many are called but few chosen." But Lk. omits all this, as well as (Mk xiii. 27, Mt. xxiv. 31) the gathering of the "elect."

[2441 d] Jn agrees with Lk. in applying ἐκλεξασθαι once to the choice of apostles, but he adds words that destroy the notion of finality, vi. 70 "Have I not [just] chosen (2254) you the twelve, and one of you is a devil?" On the other hand, later on, he appears to exclude Judas, and to imply a different, spiritual, and final election in xiii. 18 "I know whom I chose" following the words (xiii. 11) "Ye are not all clean" (comp. xv. 16, 19).

ye have hoped (ἡλπίκατε),” xv. 24 “They have seen and have hated both me and my Father,” xvi. 27 “The father loveth (φιλεῖ) you because ye have loved (πεφιλήκατε) me and have believed that...,” vi. 69 “We have believed (πεπιστεύκαμεν)...that thou art the Holy One of God.” In modern English, “I have believed in him,” if the emphasis is laid on “have,” may mean “I have believed in him, in times past, or up to the present time, but I do so no longer.” In John the context clearly implies persistent belief, and the same applies to the other instances.

[2443] How is this Johannine use to be explained? Probably as a modification of the LXX rendering of the Hebrew perfect in cases where it implies persistence. The Hebrew perfect is frequently used with verbs of “believing,” “hoping,” “hating,” and “loving,” to represent a feeling continued from the past into the present. But LXX inadequately renders this almost always by the aorist. Thus St Paul quotes the Psalms “I have believed (LXX ἐπίστευσα) therefore I spake,” and continues, “We also believe therefore also we speak,” thus applying the Hebrew perfect (LXX aorist) to himself in the present tense¹. In that Psalm, A.V. has “I believed” and R.V. txt “I believe” (marg. “I believed”); but elsewhere the two agree in the perfect (Ps. cxix. 66) “I have believed in thy commandments.” So when the Psalmist repeatedly says to God, “I have hoped (ἡλπίσα) in thee, or in thy mercy,” the meaning (however it may be rendered in English) is “I steadfastly hope,” or “my hope is fixed².” The aorist “I hated (ἐμίσησα)” occurs several times in the Psalms, variously translated by R.V. and A.V.; and always in the sense of “steadfastly hating.” In Proverbs, it is uttered by the Wisdom of God (Prov. viii. 13) “Pride and arrogancy...do I hate,” and there LXX has the perfect μεμίσηκα, but Symmachus, Theodotion, and “another,” have the aorist. The perfect also occurs in Judges xiv. 16 “only hast thou hated me (μεμίσηκας) and hast not loved me (ἡγάπησας, but A ἡγάπηκας),” where R.V. has “Thou dost but hate me and lovest me not³.” In all these cases, it is quite clear that the ² [2443 a] ἡλπίσα in the Psalms = Ps. vii. 1, xvi. 1 (R.V. and A.V.) “I do put my trust,” xiii. 5 (R.V. and A.V.) “I have trusted,” xxxi. 1, 6, 14 (R.V. and A.V.) “I do put my trust,” “trust,” “trusted” etc.

³ [2443 b] The Heb. perf., LXX aorist of μισεῖν = Ps. xxvi. 5 A.V. perf., R.V. pres., xlv. 7 A.V. pres., R.V. perf. : in Ps. v. 5, l. 17, cxix. 104, 113, 128, cxxxix. 21, R.V. and A.V. agree in having present. It is interesting to note that in Heb. i. 9,

"hate" described by the Hebrew perfect is a permanent and intense feeling; and the same statement applies to the other verbs. Nothing like this usage can be alleged from Greek literature, and the coincidence of Hebrew usage as to these particular verbs makes it a reasonable conclusion that a Hebrew origin must explain the Johannine use of them.

[2444] In another Hebraic use of the perfect the speaker regards a future action as already accomplished or, as we say, "as good as done." This is particularly common with the verb "give," e.g. in Genesis, in promises made by God, "I have given you every herb," "Unto thy seed have I given (LXX, I will give) this land," but also made by Ephron "I have given thee the field...I have given...I have given..." and by Abraham, in return, "I have given thee money," where R.V. has thrice "give" and once "will give," and LXX has διδωμι and δέδωκα or omissions¹. This Hebraic idiom may have suggested the Johannine phrase "all that thou hast given me (or, hast given him)" so frequently used (1921, 2454—5) to denote the future Church. It might also explain xvii. 18 "Even as thou didst send me into the world, so I also sent them into the world." Here the aorist is used in both cases, and "I sent" has been taken by some as quoting Ps. xlv. 7 ἡγάπησας...ἐμίσησας..., R.V.—which usually renders aorists as aorists—follows A.V. in the perfect, "thou hast loved...and [hast] hated."

[2443 c] This Hebraic "Aorist of Persistence" in LXX is quite different from (a) the Greek aorist used to describe what happened before now and will happen again, i.e. the aorist of experience or habit. It is also different from (b) the Greek use of (Jelf § 403. 1) ἐπήνεσα, παρήνεσα, ἤνεσα, ἀπέπτυσσα, ᾤμωξα, ἐδέξαμην, ἔγνων. Jelf explains these as "referring to a thought supposed to have been long and firmly conceived in the speaker's breast." But in many cases they refer simply to what is "before," and sometimes only "a moment before," or "a moment ago," as in Eurip. Med. 63—4, where, in answer to the nurse's appeal ("What dost thou mean? Do not begrudge to tell me?") the old servant replies "Nothing. I changed my mind [just this moment] about even what I had said before (Οὐδέν, μετέρων καὶ τὰ πρόσθ' εἰρημένα)." So ἀπέπτυσσα may mean "I spat at [your words as soon as they were uttered]" etc. In no instance probably do these aorists contain any notion of anything "long and firm." Goodwin (Moods and Tenses § 60) renders Aristoph. Eq. 696 Ἦσθην ἀπειλαῖς, ἐγέλασα ψολοκομταῖς, "I am amused... I cannot help laughing," but the English past would there express the sense better "I was amused...I could not but laugh," as soon as you opened your mouth. So ἦσθην in Nub. 174, 1240. And that is the meaning—though perhaps idiomatic English will hardly allow the past tense—in Soph. Electr. 668 "I welcomed (ἐδέξαμην) your [well-omened] utterance [as soon as uttered]."

referring to the previous mission of the Apostles into Palestine. But it is more consonant with the high tone and Hebraic thought of the context to suppose that the Lord, after the manner of Hebrew prophets, mentions the ordained future "sending" into the world at large (not Palestine merely) as already past.

[2445] In xv. 6 (lit.) "If a man be not abiding (μένῃ) in me—[behold] he was cast (ἐβλήθη) outside...and was withered," the reader is asked as it were to pause after the statement of the conditional "not abiding." Then he looks back and—the branch "has been cast out." This is not like the Greek instantaneous aorists above mentioned (2443 c), all of which are in the first person. Probably it springs from Hebrew literature, which regards the sweeping away of things evil as an act of Jehovah so speedy that it is past before there is time to speak of it as future or present: "A thousand years in thy sight *are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night. Thou hast carried them away as with a flood*¹." The most conspicuous instance of this is in Isaiah's prophecy (Is. xl. 6—8 LXX, (lit.)) "All flesh [is as] grass...the grass was dried up and the flower fell away...but the word of our God abideth for ever," which has been reproduced in the Epistle of St James with aorists thus, "Like the flower of the grass he shall pass away. For the sun rose up (ἀνέτειλεν) with the scorching wind and dried up (ἐξήρανε) the grass and its flower fell away and the fair show of its countenance perished (ἀπώλετο)."² In the light of these passages, and of the above-mentioned (2443) instances of Hebrew influence on Johannine tense construction, ἐβλήθη appears to be a Hebraic, not a Greek, instantaneous aorist. But see 2754—5.

[2446] According to different contexts, the aorist of the same verb may have very different meanings. For example, in xv. 8, ἐν τούτῳ ἐδοξάσθη ὁ πατήρ μου appears to mean (2393) "Herein [namely, by your abiding in me, the Vine] was my Father glorified," and the reference is perhaps to the definite fact that when one "branch," Judas, fell away from the Vine, the rest abode in it, or else it is to their whole past "abiding." But in xiii. 31 Nῦν ἐδοξάσθη ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου κ. ὁ θεὸς ἐδοξάσθη ἐν αὐτῷ, there may be a twofold meaning. The "glorifying" certainly refers to the sacrifice of the Son upon the Cross, and that is future, and the aorist, if referring solely to that, would be the Hebraic aorist of prophetic anticipation above mentioned (2444—5). But it might also refer to the "going out" of Judas, just mentioned, and to the resignation of the Son to the treachery that had (xiii. 21) "troubled" Him "in the spirit," so that He made no further attempt to hinder it. In that case the tense would refer to what has just passed, "Now at last has the Son of man been glorified," because the spiritual act had taken place. This latter seems to be the primary meaning.

[2447] In xv. 15 "all things that I heard (ἤκουσα) from my Father (R.V.) I have made known (ἐγνώρισα) unto you," the R.V. is justified—so far as grammar is concerned—in rendering the two aorists differently, because of the rarity or non-existence (2441 a) of the perfect of the latter verb, whereas forms of ἀκήκοα are frequent if we include instances in the Epistle. But the meaning of ἐγνώρισα must depend on the context, which represents Jesus as "no longer" calling the disciples "servants" because He has now revealed to them the things that He "heard from the Father." This seems to refer to the recent sign of the Washing of Feet and to the doctrine of "loving" as being the sign of discipleship. If so, the meaning may be, "That which I heard from my Father when I came into the world to do His will I made known to you just now in the Washing of Feet."

[2448] In order to distinguish between the aorist and perfect of γινώσκω it is well, in many passages of John, to render the verb "recognise," thus, xvi. 3 "These things they will do because they did not recognise (οὐκ ἔγνωσαν) the Father nor me," xvii. 7—8 "Now [at last] (νῦν, 1719 f) have they recognised (ἔγνωκαν) that all things as many as thou didst give me are from thee, because...and they recognised (ἔγνωσαν) truly that I came forth from thee." In the second passage, the perfect describes the present completed result of the previous definite recognition¹. In xvi. 3, R.V. has "they have not known": but the aorist should mean "they did not recognise" either Father or Son, when the Son announced the Father to them.

[2449] In viii. 29 "And he that sent me is with me: he did not leave me (R.V. hath not left me) (οὐκ ἀφῆκέν με) alone," the aorist (if not used as a perfect (2441) for the rare ἀφείκα) would mean that the Father when He sent (aorist) the Son into the world did not leave Him alone. R.V. has "hath not left me alone," and some have taken these words with the following ones, "because I do always the things that are pleasing to him," as though the Father's presence, throughout the life of the Son on earth, has been the spiritual reward or spiritual consequence of the Son's conduct ("The Father has been with me because I have done right"). But ὅτι means more probably (2178) "[I say this] because," introducing the ground of the statement: "The Father when He sent me hither did not deprive me of His presence. [I have a right to say this] because I do such deeds as could not be done without His presence¹."

they have received them from me and they have known truly..." and Ν has ἔγνω for ἔγνωσαν. Some MSS. support Chrys. in reading ἔγνωσαν for ἔγνωσαν, and one or two have ἐγνώκασιν. Several MSS. omit καὶ ἔγνωσαν. The textual variations of ἔγνωσαν are easily explained as resulting from an original ἐγνώκα and from a failure to perceive the shade of difference indicated by the perfect and the aorist:—"They are now at last grounded in recognition...because I have definitely given them the regenerating words of life and they [at once] received them and [at once] recognised in truth that I came forth from thee." That is to say, the present steadfastness of the disciples arises not only from the word of Christ but also from a certain affinity between that word and the disciples, which affinity caused them to receive it at once with a certain amount of recognition. Comp. i. 12 ὅσοι δὲ ἔλαβον αὐτόν, and note the immediate "reception" of Christ by Andrew and his companion and their brethren and successors.

¹ [2449 α] In xii. 40 "He hath blinded (τετύφλωκεν) their eyes and he hardened (ἐπώρωσεν) their heart," πωρώ represents Isaiah's word (vi. 10) "make fat," ἐπαχύνθη, and means not "make stiff" σκληρύνω, but "make callous." Buhl gives no other instance of Heb. "make fat" applied to "heart"; and it was very natural that St Paul in writing to the Romans (Rom. xi. 7 οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ ἐπωρώθησαν) and Corinthians (2 Cor. iii. 14 ἐπωρώθη τὰ νοήματα αὐτῶν) should use πωρώ instead of παχύνω in alluding to this famous passage—which describes the "heart" of Israel as "hardened" in the sense of "made callous" although a remnant (Is. vi. 13) was to be faithful. Πωρώ is used by Mk (vi. 52, viii. 17) alone elsewhere in N.T. Its occurrence there, and in Hermas (Mand. iv. 2. 1, xii. 4. 4), and always applied to "the heart," suggests that the rare phrase "make the heart callous" found its way into the Roman Church—and thence into the works of Mark and Hermas which have Latin characteristics—through St Paul's Epistle to the Romans. The mention of "blindness" in the context of Isaiah

(2) Aorist of special Verbs¹

[2450] Ἀκούω in the Fourth Gospel may be illustrated by ἀκούω in the Epistle, where ἀκηκόαμεν occurs thrice at the beginning to denote the sum total of the doctrine of Christ possessed by the writers, who "have heard" that which was from the beginning; and the same notion of completeness and satisfaction appears in the saying of the Samaritans, "We ourselves have heard and know that this is truly the Saviour of the world²." Ἠκούσατε occurs five times in the Epistle in connexion with the definite word "heard" by the readers at the beginning of their Christian profession ("from the beginning" being thrice inserted to define the aorist). This is the general distinction in the Epistle³.

(vi. 10) and Jn xii. 40 might lead scribes to confuse πωρώω with πηρώω "make blind" (comp. Job xvii. 7 "mine eye also is dim," Βπεπώρωνται, ΑΝ² πεπήρωνται) and Hesych. explains πεπωρωμένοι as ἐσκληρωμένοι τετυφλωμένοι, but this may mean that he took the verb to mean literally "hardened," and hence "hardened against true impressions," which seemed equivalent to "darkened," or "blind to the truth."

[2449 δ] A corrector of Codex B has altered ἐπώρωσεν in xii. 40 to πεπώρωκεν to conform it with the preceding perfect τετύφλωκεν, and this is very natural. There appears no reason for the change of tense, so far as sense is concerned. Perhaps, however, Jn may have been influenced by Pauline and other traditions, which described the act of God in visiting Israel with "callousness of heart" as a historical fact in the past. Rom. xi. 7—8 says "That which Israel seeketh after, this it obtained (aorist) not (οὐκ ἐπέτυχεν), but the election obtained (aorist); but the rest were made callous (aorist) (ἐπωρώθησαν), even as it is written, God gave (aorist) (ἔδωκεν) them a spirit of torpor, eyes that they should not see..." and LXX also has the aorist in Deut. xxix. 4 "The Lord gave not unto you a heart to know and eyes to see and ears to hear...[no, not] unto this day." As Jn xii. 40 deviates from the Heb. and from the LXX, there are special reasons for thinking that the writer may have been influenced by Christian tradition, perhaps oral, which associated the aorist with the "callousness of heart" inflicted on Israel, as by a divine decree, at the time of the Incarnation.

³ [2450 a] There is an apparent inconsistency in 1 Jn ii. 18 καθὼς ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται, iv. 3 τοῦτό ἐστιν τὸ τοῦ ἀντιχρίστου ὃ ἀκηκόατε ὅτι ἔρχεται. But the former may be rendered "Even as ye were taught at the beginning." The latter may be intended to include a reference to the former: "This is that doctrine of Antichrist as to whom ye have heard above and on many other occasions that he must needs come." Καθὼς ἠκούσατε ἀπ' ἀρχῆς occurs also in 2 Jn 6. In Jn xviii. 21 ἐρώτησον τ. ἀκηκόοντας means "ask those who have regularly heard me." But with οὐ the perfect means (Rom. xv. 21 quoting Is. lii. 15) "have not [up to this time] heard," and comp. Jn v. 37 οὐτε φωνήν αὐτοῦ πώποτε ἀκηκόατε (2764).

[2451] Ἀκούω in the Fourth Gospel is in the aorist when Christ describes Himself, or is described, as "hearing" from the Father¹; and this is the case even when "heard" is parallel to "hath seen" as in iii. 32 "That which he hath seen (ἑώρακεν) and [that which he] heard" (κ. ἤκουσεν) this he testifieth." The explanation here is complicated by the fact that (apart from forms of ὀφθῆναι, ὄψομαι etc.) the perfect of ὁρᾶν is the only part of the verb used by John. He might therefore conceivably use the perfect of ὁρᾶν, concerning spiritual vision, parallel to the aorist of another verb. But the two tenses may be explained as meaning "that which the Son hath seen [from the beginning], and that message which He heard [when He came down from the Father to save mankind]." So, whereas witnesses in Mark say concerning Jesus, "We heard him say," witnesses in the Acts say concerning Stephen, "We have heard him say." In the former, the meaning is "we heard on one occasion," or, "we heard this definite statement"; in the latter, "we have repeatedly heard him say" words to this effect, as is shewn by the context².

[2452] In xi. 41 "Father, I give thanks to thee that thou didst hear me (ἤκουσάς μου)," uttered at the grave of Lazarus, the aorist should refer to some definite prayer, and ought not to mean "thou hast always heard me." Origen and Chrysostom both emphasize the fact that no prayer has been mentioned as preceding; and the latter seems to say that there was no real prayer, "Why," he asks, "did He even assume the appearance of praying (τίνος δὲ ἕνεκεν καὶ εὐχῆς σχῆμα ἀνέλαβεν;)"³ But Origen suggests that a prayer, rising in Christ's mind and not yet uttered, was anticipated by the Father, who sent an answer, "It is fulfilled," into the heart of the Son. Some might urge—and with logic on their side—that the prayer must have been uttered some days before, when Jesus first heard "He whom thou lovest is sick" and replied (xi. 4) "This sickness is not unto death but for the glory of God, in order that the Son of God may be glorified through it." But the evangelist may intend to convey to his readers the impression that, although it was revealed to the Son from the first that the sickness would in some way prove to be "not unto death," He nevertheless waited from day to day for further revelation of the Father's will, and that the actual revivification was not effected without an effort on the part of the Son, at the time when He "wept" and "troubled Himself" on His way to the tomb. In any case John—who neither describes Jesus as using the word "pray," nor himself speaks of Him as "praying"—here teaches the lesson that prayer may be sometimes most efficacious, and perfectly definite, when not expressed in words¹.

(β) Ἀποστέλλω

[2453] Ἀποστέλλω is mostly (15 times) in the aorist, when applied to God as sending Christ, but twice in the perfect, v. 36 τὰ ἔργα ἃ δέδωκέν μοι...μαρτυρεῖ...ὅτι ὁ πατήρ με ἀπέσταλκεν, and xx. 21 καθὼς ἀπέσταλκέ με ὁ πατήρ, καὶ γὰρ πέμπω ὑμᾶς. In the former, the perfect is perhaps used for parallelism with the preceding perfect δέδωκεν. In the latter, the mission of the Son on earth, being completed or perfected, is appropriately referred to in the complete or perfect tense.

(γ) Δίδωμι

[2454] In the Epistle, δίδωμι is used in the aorist to denote the gifts or commandments given to believers at the commencement of their Christian life; in the perfect, to denote the same gifts when regarded as present possessions. Compare "from the Spirit, which he gave us," with "because he hath given us of his Spirit²." In the Gospel, a corresponding distinction is generally made between the aorist and the perfect with reference to Christ. The aorist usually describes gifts regarded as given by the Father to the Son on His coming into the world to proclaim the Gospel; the perfect describes gifts regarded as having been given to the Son and as now belonging to Him. More particularly, the future Church is frequently mentioned as "all that thou hast given me" as though the Son placed Himself in the future and looked back upon the Church as a completed gift. But from a different point of view the collection of faithful believers may be regarded as a gift made to the Son definitely at the Incarnation, and might be called "those whom (or, all that) thou gavest me."

¹ [2452 b] Origen (Huet ii. 347) quotes Is. lviii. 9 "While thou art still speaking I will say, lo, I am present," and argues that if Jehovah says this about mere men, He would say about the Lord "Before thou speakest, I will say, Lo, I am here." He does not quote Is. lxxv. 24 "And it shall come to pass that, before they cry, I will answer," where "cry" is κεκραῖναι, a word somewhat resembling the remarkable word ἐκραύγασεν in Jn xi. 43. Possibly, "they" was an obstacle.

[2455] The distinction is illustrated by xvii. 6—9 "I manifested thy name to the men that thou gavest me out of the world. Thine they were and thou gavest them to me...(9) I ask not in behalf of the world but in behalf of those whom thou hast given me." In the opening of the Last Prayer (xvii. 1—2) the Church is called "all that thou hast given him," but the aorist is used in the words "As thou gavest him authority." Towards the end of the Prayer the aorist is almost, if not entirely, superseded by the perfect, because the mind of Christ is fixed on the completion of God's gifts. But perhaps the aorist is to be read in xvii. 24 "that they may behold the glory that thou gavest me (W.H. marg. ἔδωκας, but txt δέδωκας) because thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world." The previous context says (xvii. 22) "The glory that thou hast given to me I have given to them, in order that they may be one." Scribes would, therefore, be tempted to conform xvii. 24 to xvii. 22. But xvii. 22 may mean "the glory that thou hast given me [on earth]" so as to shew forth the unity between the Father and the Son," whereas xvii. 24 may mean "the glory that thou gavest me [in the beginning]," which is explained by "*for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world*¹." On πάν ὃ δέδωκας, see 2740 foll.

¹ [2455 a] B has ἔδωκας here. Δέδωκεν and ἔδωκεν freq. occur as v.r.: see vi. 32, vii. 19, xiii. 15 (Tisch. δέδωκα, but W.H. ἔδωκα without alt.), xvii. 7, 8, 24. In vi. 32 οὐ M. ἔδωκεν (marg. δέδωκεν) ὑμῖν τὸν ἄρτον ἐκ τ. οὐρανοῦ the aorist would mean that the bread given on that historic occasion was not the real and true bread; the perfect would mean "M. has never given you." It follows a quotation (vi. 31) ἄρτον ἐκ τ. οὐρανοῦ ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς φαγεῖν, from Ps. lxxviii. 24. In vii. 19 οὐ M. ἔδωκεν (marg. δέδωκεν) ὑμῖν τὸν νόμον; the aorist would mean "Did not M. give you the Law from Mount Sinai?" the perfect, in effect, "Have you not the Law, given you by Moses?" To these and many other passages Lightfoot's explanation (2440) applies: the aorist describes a "definite act," the perfect a "continuous and present relation." With οὐ, the aorist means "not, on a single occasion"; the perfect "not, up to this time."

(δ) Εἶπον

[2456] Εἶπε generally introduces longer and more weighty utterances of Christ than those introduced by the historic present λέγει. In dialogue between Christ and a single person, εἶπε very rarely introduces His words as compared with λέγει. The former is never thus used alone (i.e. without ἀπεκρίθη καί) in dialogue, except in a few cases of momentous utterance, six of which are in narratives of miracles¹.

(ε) Ἐρχομαι and ἐξέρχομαι

[2457] Ἐρχομαι and ἐξέρχομαι are used for the most part in the aorist (1637) to describe the Son as coming (or being sent) from the Father, but in the perfect to describe His having arrived in the world. Ἐξέληλυθα never occurs in any context, but ἐλήλυθα occurs three times² with εἰς τὸν κόσμον, and once as a sequel to ἐξῆλθον thus, viii. 42 "I came forth from God and am come (ἦκω); for indeed I have not come (ἐλήλυθα) from myself, but he sent me." In all cases the aorist points to the definite "coming" of the Incarnation. On the curious contrast (viii. 14) between "whence I came" and "whence I come," see 2482, 2490.

(ζ) Μένω

[2458] Μένω, in a past tense, is used literally of persons remaining in a place in six instances, always in the aorist except x. 40 W.H. txt ἔμμενεν, marg. ἔμμεινεν. In four of the six instances (i. 39, ii. 12, iv. 40, xi. 6) the aorist is accompanied by a mention of the "days," but not in vii. 9 and x. 40. The explanation of the imperfect in x. 40 may be that the writer means "he stayed on there [i.e. stayed for some time]" and the context ("many came...and many

Εἶπε, followed by Πάτερ, is also used in xvii. 1 (the Prayer to the Father) and, without Πάτερ, in xix. 30 ("It is finished"). Δέγει on the other hand introduces words of Jesus in dialogue no less than six times in three verses in xxi. 15—17. In Lk. ix. 58—62 εἶπε occurs no less than four times in sayings of Jesus to individuals, and it is his regular word in such cases, comp. Lk. vi. 8, 10, vii. 43—50.

believed on him there") favours this view. In i. 32 "I have beheld the Spirit descending...and it abode (καὶ ἔμεινεν) upon him" (where α, β, and ε have "and abiding") the meaning is "it abode once for all."

(3) Aorist for English Pluperfect

[2459] The aorist, e.g. ἐποίησε, if preceded (a) by ἤκουσαν ὅτι, or (β) by ὡς ("when"), is sometimes rendered "he had done" ("they heard that he had done," "when he had done"). Thus (a) iv. 1 "the Lord knew how that the Pharisees had heard (ἤκουσαν)," iv. 50 "the man believed the word that Jesus (A.V.) had spoken (R.V. spoke) (εἶπεν)," ix. 35 "Jesus heard that they had cast (ἐξέβαλον) him out"; (β) ii. 9 "When the ruler of the feast (A.V.) had tasted (R.V. tasted) (ἐγεύσατο)."

[2460] Quite distinct from these is the use of the aorist to mean "he [previously] did"—equivalent to "had previously done"—introducing a mention of something that, in chronological order, should have been mentioned before, e.g. v. 13 "But he that had been healed knew not who it was: for Jesus [previously] conveyed himself away (ἐξένευσεν)," R.V. and A.V. "had conveyed himself away." This also appears to be the best rendering of ἦλθον (and perhaps of ἐποίησεν) in iv. 45 "When therefore he came to Galilee the Galilaeans received him, having seen all that he had done (ἐποίησεν) in the Feast: for they also themselves had come (ἦλθον) to the Feast"—where R.V. and A.V. have "went," but the Latin versions have the pluperfect¹.

[2461] The English pluperfect is perhaps intended in ii. 1—2 "There was a marriage in Cana...and the mother of Jesus was (ἦν) there. Now there had been invited also Jesus (ἐκλήθη δὲ καὶ ὁ Ἰ.) and his disciples to the wedding²." So, after describing the Entry into

² [2461 a] "Vocatus erat" is also read by a and f. Chrys. expressly reads twice (after ἐν Κανὰ τῆς Γ.) καὶ ἐκλήθη ὁ Ἰ. εἰς τοὺς γάμους. Ἦν δὲ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ τοῦ Ἰ. ἐκεῖ κ. οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ, or, in Cramer, ἦν δὲ ἡ μ. τοῦ Ἰ. καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ ἐκεῖ. Chrys. says that the last sentence was intended to "hint (ἡνίξατο)" that Jesus was not invited as being a "great person" but only as an acquaintance. Nonnus has Χριστὸς...Κλητὸς ἔην σύνδορκος ὁμοκλινέες τε μαθηταὶ Πάντες ἔσαν στοιχηδόν. Ἐς εἰλαπίνην δὲ καὶ αὐτὴ Παρθενικὴ Χριστοῦ θεητόκος ἔκετο μήτηρ. If ἐκλήθη is to be rendered as an aorist, the meaning may be that the mother of Jesus was staying at Cana first and that Jesus was invited thither afterwards.

Jerusalem and the cries of Hosanna, without mention (2756) of the finding of the ass, John adds, apparently as an afterthought, xii. 14 "But Jesus had found an ass and sat upon it (εὕρων δὲ...ἐκάθισεν)." It is possible then, grammatically, that xix. 39 ἦλθεν δὲ καὶ Νικόδημος might mean "Now there had come also Nicodemus." The preceding words are, "He [Joseph] came (ἦλθεν) therefore and took his [Christ's] body," and the question is whether John may mean, not that Nicodemus came after Joseph's "coming," but that "he also had come" to the tomb, and was waiting for Joseph, having procured the spices in the hope of the success of Joseph's application to Pilate. This, at all events, may be the view of Acta Pilati (B) § 11, which represents Nicodemus as saying to Joseph "I am afraid...lest Pilate should be enraged...But if thou wilt go alone, and beg the dead, and take Him, then will I also go with thee, and help thee to do everything necessary for the burial."

[2462] In xviii. 24 Ἀπέστειλεν...αὐτὸν ὁ Ἄννας δεδεμένον πρὸς Καϊάφαν, A.V. has "Now Annas had sent him bound," but the correct reading, which gives οὖν between ἀπέστειλεν and αὐτόν, makes this rendering impossible. The οὖν has been omitted by some authorities, and altered by others to δέ, in order to suggest that the previously mentioned examination was identical with the examination described by the Synoptists as occurring before Caiaphas, which is omitted in the Fourth Gospel.

(ii) Future, see Present of Prophecy 2484 foll., and οὐ μὴ 2255

(iii) Imperfect

(1) The Imperfect in general

[2463] The imperfect tense, ἐποίουν, may call attention to the beginning of an uncompleted action ("I began to do"), or to its non-completion ("I was [still] doing"), or to its repetition in an incomplete series of actions ("I kept on doing," "I was in the habit of doing"). With a negative, "I did not begin to do" may imply "I shewed no tendency to do," and with special verbs (e.g. "I shewed no tendency to help, pity, forgive") the imperfect may imply "I would not." In John, who (in striking contrast with the Synoptists) only once (1674 a) uses the verb "begin," the imperfect is frequently used in many shades of meaning not briefly expressible in English.

[2464] The following passage occurs soon after an act of healing on the sabbath. Assuming that no similar act was wrought in the interval, we cannot render ἐποίει "was wont to do these things" and the rendering must be "was beginning to do," thus, v. 16—18 "And for this cause the Jews began-to-persecute (ἐδίωκον) Jesus because he began to do (ἐποίει)¹ these things on the sabbath. But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh even until now, and I work. For this cause therefore the Jews began-to-seek (ἐζήτουν) rather (2733 a) to kill him because he was not only continuing to break (or, thereby breaking) (ἔλυνε) the sabbath, but also *beginning to say*² (ἔλεγε) [that] God [was] his own Father....." Here, at all events in the first sentence, the evangelist seems to indicate a "beginning" to persecute, dating from a special act, and perhaps "these things" means "such things as this." In xii. 10—11 "the chief priests took counsel that they might put Lazarus also to death because, for the sake of [seeing] him (1652 b), many of the Jews were going away and were believing (ὑπήγον κ. ἐπίστευον)," the meaning may be either that these things were beginning, or that they were going on under the eyes of the chief priests and would go on till they were stopped. In xiii. 28—9 οὐδείς ἔγνω...τινὲς γὰρ ἐδόκουν, the meaning is, "No one [exactly] understood...some were [at the time] under a vague impression....."³

[2464 b] The imperfect of custom is illustrated by Mk xv. 6 κατὰ δὲ ἐορτὴν ἀπέλυνεν (Mt. xxvii. 15 εἰώθει...ἀπολύειν), Lk. om., Jn xviii. 39 ἔστιν δὲ συνήθεια ὑμῖν ἵνα ἕνα ἀπολύσω ὑμῖν [ἐν] τῷ πάσχα. The comments of Origen (on Mt. xxvii. 15) and of Cyril (Cramer) make it clear that they know of no such "custom" of pardoning criminals, and that they are at a loss to explain the allusion to it: nor is there any historical evidence of its existence. This may explain Luke's omission. Συνήθεια occurs in N.T. only here and 1-Cor. viii. 7, xi. 16 where it means an "unreasonable habit." Perh. Pilate is supposed by John to mean "a practice that has sprung up through my indulgence towards you." In any case, this is an instance where Lk. omits and Jn intervenes.

[2464 c] Κατὰ δὲ ἐορτὴν (A.V. "at [that] feast," R.V. txt "at the feast" marg. "at a feast") is (like καθ' ἡμέραν) ambiguous. The best rendering is "at feast-time," which (according to context) may mean "at [the approaching] feast" or "at [any] feast." SS (in Mt.) has "at every Feast" and k (in Mk) has "singulis autem diebus festis": D reads τὴν in both. The ambiguity is removed (whether in accordance with fact or not) by Jn's insertion of "the Passover."

[2465] The imperfect of "come," after the aorist of another verb, and before the aorist "came," means "began to come," or "were coming," as follows, iv. 30—40 "They (i.e. the Samaritans) came out (ἐξῆλθον) from the city and began to come (ἤρχοντο) unto him. In the meanwhile.....When therefore the Samaritans came (ἦλθον) unto him," xi. 29—32 "She (Mary) arose (ἤγέρθη) quickly and began to come (ἤρχετο) unto him. Now Jesus was not yet...The Jews, then,... followed her...Mary therefore, when she came (ἦλθεν) where Jesus was...," xx. 3—4 "Peter therefore came forth (ἐξῆλθεν) and the other disciple, and they began to come (ἤρχοντο) to the tomb. Now the two were running together; and the other disciple...came (ἦλθεν) first." In all these cases the context mentions an interval between the "beginning to come" and the "coming¹." John often uses these imperfects as an introduction to some important action².

[2466] With a negative, the imperfect may mean "was not beginning to do," and this may often mean "had no intention of doing." In ii. 23—4 "many believed (or trusted, ἐπίστευσαν) in his name...but Jesus himself did not trust (οὐκ ἐπίστευεν) himself to them," the meaning is "did not even begin to trust to them," because He knew their character from the first. It might almost be rendered "would not trust." The same phrase, applied to non-believing Jews in xii. 37 means "they shewed no tendency to believe," "did not even make a beginning to believe," and it is followed by xii. 39, "they were not able to believe." Nearly the same meaning is in xxi. 12 "no one shewed a tendency to venture (οὐδεὶς ἐτόλμα)," or, "so much as began to venture." But, in vii. 5 οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ ἐπίστευον εἰς αὐτόν, the separation of the verb from the negative favours the rendering "not even his brethren were [at that time] believing in him."

¹ [2465 a] The imperf. is rendered thus, iv. 30 (A.V.) "came," (R.V.) "were coming"; xi. 29 (A.V.) "came," (R.V.) "went"; xx. 3 (A.V.) "came," (R.V.) "went."

² [2465 b] In xix. 3 (describing the soldiers mocking Christ), the imperfects, ἤρχοντο, ἔλεγον, and ἐδίδοσαν, mean "kept coming," "kept saying," "kept giving."

[2465 c] The imperf. ἐπυνθάνετο might be expected in Jn iv. 52 where, according to Blass (p. 191), "ἐπύθετο is incorrectly used and the correct form ἐπυνθάνετο has weak attestation (in xiii. 24 πυθέσθαι [which should strictly be πυνθάνεσθαι] is only read by AD al...)." In classical Gk, ἐπύθετο would mean "he ascertained," and ἐπυνθάνετο would be used (as in Mt. ii. 4, Lk. xv. 26 etc.) to mean "he tried to ascertain." In iv. 52 Chrys. has ἐπυνθάνετο and a, d, f have "interrogabat," but this attestation is certainly weak. It is noticeable, however, that, in what follows, ND abf have καὶ for οὐν (SS om. οὐν) so as to make the

[2466 (i)] When ὅτι ἦν is used after imperfect or aorist statements of perception ("saw that it was so"), the natural presumption, in John, is that the meaning is "saw that it had been"; for, in order to express "saw that it was," John would probably use the present, as in vi. 24 "the multitude saw that Jesus was not there (εἶδεν...ὅτι Ἰ. οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκεῖ)" i.e. saw [and said to themselves] "Jesus is not here" (comp. Mt. xviii. 25 "commanded him to be sold...and all, [said he], that he hath (ἔχει)"). With other imperfects, distinguishable from aorists, the imperfect meaning may be retained, e.g. xvi. 19 "recognised that they were and had been desiring (ἤθελον) to question him," but not with ἦν. In v. 13 οὐκ ᾔδει τίς ἐστιν, D reads ἦν: but the Pharisees have just asked "Who is it?" Τίς ἐστιν; and now it is added that the man "did not know [and could not answer this question] Who is it?" and then (v. 15) "he said to the Jews (lit.) that 'It is Jesus.'" In vi. 22 εἶδον (marg. ἰδών) ὅτι πλοιάριον ἄλλο οὐκ ἦν ἐκεῖ, the sense requires "that there had been no other boat," and (as there are v. r. εἰδων, ἰδον, εἶδεν, and e has "scirent"), Blass's (p. 192) suggestion that the orig. was εἰδώς is probably right: "the Jews knew there had been no other boat there on the previous night." In ix. 8 οἱ θεωροῦντες αὐτὸν τὸ πρότερον ὅτι προσαίτης ἦν, the present ἐστί could not have been used, because the meaning is not "Beheld [and said] He is a beggar," but "those who formerly were in the habit of beholding that he was a beggar." SS has "those by whom it had been seen that he was begging," and this conveys correctly the pluperfect meaning, that "the begging" belonged to the sphere of the "*had been*¹."

meaning, "He therefore ascertained the hour—and they said, 'Yesterday about the seventh hour...,'” i.e., in effect, "the father ascertained the hour and found it was the seventh." But as the text stands, Jn must be admitted to have used ἐπίθετο incorrectly, erring, however, with Plut. vit. Demetr. ch. 27 (1076c) τοῦ Δημητρίου πυθομένου, Τί σοι δοκεῖ; (also ib. ch. 28) and with Hesychius, who says, Πυθέσθαι· ἀκοῦσαι, ἐρωτῆσαι, γνῶσεσθαι.

[2465 d] On the other hand the v.r. xiii. 24 πυθέσθαι may be defended as meaning "to ascertain." Similarly, in LXX, πυθέσθαι, "to ascertain," in Gen. xxv. 22 and 2 Chr. xxxii. 31, is as justifiable as ἐπυνθάνετο and ἐπυνθανόμεθα, "tried to ascertain," in 2 Chr. xxxi. 9 and 1 Esdr. vi. 11; but Esth. iii. 13 πυθομένου is an error for πυνθανόμενου which is read by AN². In Ox. Pap. 533 (edd.) "sell the grass-seed and ask (πύθεσθε)...whether he wants..." I should prefer "ascertain." It would be quite correct to say that a man, "trying to ascertain something (πυνθανόμενος)" sends messengers "to ascertain it (τοῦ πυθέσθαι)."

[2467] John very frequently uses ἔλεγον to describe what "was being said" about some one subject, first by some, then by others, of a chattering multitude¹, or what people "began to say," or "said repeatedly" to some one person². But he also uses it sometimes to introduce Christ's sayings, as follows ii. 21 ἐκεῖνος δὲ ἔλεγεν περὶ τοῦ ναοῦ τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, vi. 6 τοῦτο δὲ ἔλεγεν πειράζων αὐτόν, vi. 71 ἔλεγεν δὲ τὸν Ἰουδαν, xii. 33 τοῦτο δὲ ἔλεγεν σημαίνων ποίῳ θανάτῳ ἤμελλεν ἀποθνήσκειν. In all these cases the saying is mysterious and not understood by the hearers, and ἔλεγεν means "he was saying [all the while this or that, though the hearers did not perceive it]." Once, this is expressed by the pluperfect xi. 13 εἰρήκει δὲ ὁ Ἰ. περὶ τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ. This statement of Christ's meaning follows a statement of the misunderstanding: "Lord, if he is asleep, he will recover. But Jesus had been saying [this] about his death."

[2468] In each of these instances δέ follows the verb; and δέ, and the context, indicate that the evangelist is adding something to make clear to his readers that which was not clear to the hearers at the time when Jesus was speaking³. A somewhat similar meaning may be conveyed by εἶπεν with δέ, as in vii. 39 τοῦτο δὲ εἶπεν (v. r. ἔλεγεν but not marg.) περὶ τοῦ πνεύματος, xxi. 19 τοῦτο δὲ εἶπεν σημαίνων. In both these cases more emphasis is laid upon the weight of the authoritative prediction than on its being misunderstood: and indeed, as to the latter, it is quite possible that Peter is regarded as perceiving that the prediction pointed to a death upon the cross. Λέγω, in Greek literature, must often be rendered "I mean," so that ἔλεγεν may often be rendered "he was [all the while] meaning," as in viii. 27 "They did not understand that he was [all the while] meaning the Father [in speaking] to them⁴."

προφήτην εἶναι. Mk's ἦν, with reference perh. to his recent death, means that "he had been a prophet." Acts iii. 10 ἐπεγίνωσκον...ὅτι οὗτος ἦν "began to recognise further that this man was..." is rather different. Jn perh. would have here written ἐστίν which (Alf.) is read by some authorities, including Chrys.: but the meaning may be "had been but lately sitting as a beggar." The πρότερον in Jn ix. 8 differentiates it from Acts iii. 10.

³ [2468 a] Comp. x. 6 ἐκεῖνοι δὲ οὐκ ἔγνωσαν, xi. 13 ἐκεῖνοι δὲ ἔδοξαν, where δέ introduces a statement of misunderstanding.

[2469] After ii. 21 "But he was speaking (ἐλεγεν) about the temple of his body" there arises some doubt as to the meaning in ii. 22 "When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he (R.V.) spake (A.V. had said) (ἐλεγεν) this, and they believed the Scripture and the word that Jesus (R.V. and A.V.) had said (εἶπεν)." It is but fair to assume that the writer means two slightly different things by ἐλεγεν and εἶπεν, and that ἐλεγεν in the two consecutive verses has the same meaning. Also "remembered" may be used here as in the Entry into Jerusalem, where it is said that the disciples (xii. 16) "remembered that these things were written concerning him [Jesus] and that they had done these things to him"—perhaps (2757) meaning, "remembered that Zechariah had written about the King riding on the ass, and remembered that certain similar things had happened to Jesus, and inferred that 'these things were written concerning him.'" So here, in this prediction about the Temple, "remembered" is probably a short way of saying "remembered and recognised"; and ἐλεγεν περί is but a longer form of ἐλεγεν, "he was speaking [about], or speaking [of]," thus: "But he was [all the while] speaking about the temple of his body. When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered [and recognised] that he was [all the while] speaking [of] this; and they believed the Scripture and the word that Jesus had said."

[2470] In two instances ἐλεγε appears to be used by John as in Mark to mean "began to say," or "went on to say," or "used to say"¹: vi. 64—5 "...but there are some of you that believe not.—

"What really is this?" τί ἐστὶν τοῦτο; (2) "What does he mean?" τί λέγει; (3) "What is he saying to us?" τί λέγει ἡμῖν; in v. 18 ὅτι...πατέρα ἰδίον ἔλεγε τὸν θεόν, the meaning is uncertain (2464) because of the context: but it may mean "because...he was [virtually] declaring God [to be] his own father." This differs a little from ἐκάλει. Comp. Mk xii. 37 λέγει αὐτὸν Κύριον "[virtually] declares him [to be] Lord," where the parall. Mt. xxii. 45, Lk. xx. 44 have καλεῖ, and comp. Mt. vii. 21 οὐ πᾶς ὁ λέγων μοι, Κύριε, Κύριε with parall. Lk. vi. 46 τί δέ με καλεῖτε, Κύριε, Κύριε;

¹ [2470 a] In Mark, ἐλεγεν (which is often (535 (v)) corrected by Matthew and Luke) may sometimes mean "used to say." In the Aboth the sayings of a Rabbi are introduced (a) sometimes by "was," with participle "saying," as in i. 2, 3 etc., (b) sometimes by "saying," without "was," as in i. 4, 5, 7 etc., (c) very rarely by the past tense, "said," in the case of sayings to special persons etc., ii. 7 "he saw a skull...and he said to it," ii. 12, 13 "He said to them, 'Go and see...'" Dr Taylor renders (a) by "used to say," (b) and (c) by "said." The

For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not and who it was that should betray him.—And he began to say (καὶ ἔλεγεν), For this cause I have said unto you that no man can come unto me except it be given to him from the Father...,” viii. 30—1 “While he was saying these things many believed on him. Jesus therefore began to say unto those that had believed him [those that were] Jews.” In the former, besides other variations in the text (2636) the Latin e has “et dicebat propterea quia nemo,” i.e. “And it was on this account that he said No man can come unto me¹.” This is equivalent to, “And this was what he meant when he said.” But, as the text stands, ἔλεγεν must be rendered as in Mark. These two exceptional instances as compared with the multitude of instances in Mark, make John’s ordinary deviation from Mark all the more striking.

(β) ἠΘΕΛΟΝ

[2471] Both ἠθελεν and ἠθέλησεν occur in John. The latter in i. 43 (R.V. “was minded to,” A.V. “would”) means “it was his pleasure, he resolved, to go forth to Galilee.” Also in v. 35 ἠθελήσατε (A.V. and R.V. “were willing”) there is perhaps a suggestion of a decision on the part of the rulers of the Jews to accept John the Baptist, “It was your pleasure to rejoice for a season².” The aorist

LXX often renders the Hebrew participle, when used as a tense of the indicative, by the Greek imperfect. These facts indicate that the habitual sayings of a Jewish teacher might easily be confused with his sayings on special occasions.

² [2471 a] In LXX and N.T., (apart from negative and relative clauses, in which it is very frequent in LXX) ἠθέλησα with an infinitive is rare. In Judg. xx. 5, Tobit iii. 10 (N), it is used of a desire entertained but not accomplished. In N.T. it is similarly used, of a desire frustrated, in Mt. xxiii. 37, Lk. xiii. 34 ποσάκις ἠθέλησα, and in Lk. x. 24 ἠθέλησαν ἰδεῖν (where the parall. Mt. xiii. 17 has ἐπεθύμησαν). Comp. 1 Thess. ii. 18 ἠθελήσαμεν ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐγὼ μὲν Π. κ. ἀπαξ κ. δὲ, κ. ἐνέκοψεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Σατανᾶς, which seems to mean “resolved once, yea twice.”

in LXX sometimes means "it was the pleasure" of God, or a king, where it conveys the notion of a decree¹. The meaning of deliberate resolve is also usually conveyed by the aorist when used affirmatively in classical Greek.

[2472] In John, the imperfect ἤθελον occurs (apart from a negative or relative) in vii. 44 τινὲς δὲ ἤθελον...πιάσαι, "now some would have liked to have taken him," where it is perhaps (2575) implied that their desire was frustrated because (vii. 30), His "hour was not yet come...." In xvi. 19 ἤθελον (ἔμμελλον) αὐτὸν ἐρωτᾶν the meaning is, "Jesus knew that they were wishing to ask him" so that the imperfect has its proper force. In Mark vi. 19, 48 (1735 δ), Acts x. 10, xiv. 13, xix. 33, ἤθελε refers to a desire given up, or not fulfilled, owing to something intervening. On the strength of these facts, coming to the most important of all the Johannine instances vi. 21 ἤθελον οὖν λαβεῖν, we are justified in saying that the desire must be supposed unfulfilled: "They began to wish to take him into the boat." The sequel shews that the wish was not fulfilled, for want of time: "Straightway the boat was at the land²."

² [2472 a] A.V. "they willingly received him" makes quite a different sense. R.V. "they were willing to receive him" is ambiguous, for it might mean "they were willing [as before]." Chrysostom says, "Why did He not go on board the vessel (τίνος δὲ ἔνεκεν οὐκ ἀνέβη εἰς τὸ πλοῖον;)?" So Cramer οὐκ ἐνέβη δὲ εἰς τὸ πλοῖον. On the occurrence of ἤθελον in the parall. Mk. vi. 48, see 1735 b. The 1st pers. in Gal. iv. 20, ἤθελον δὲ παρῆναι, A.V. "I desire," R.V. "I could wish," Lightf. "I would I had been," is equivalent to our curious expression "I could have wished," the literal meaning being "I began to wish but gave it up as the thing was impossible." But the 1st pers. usage is not a safe guide as to the general meaning because it is often used to express modestly a wish that the speaker has not given up, as in Hermas Mand. v. 7 ἤθελον γυνῶναι.

[2472 b] Comp. Lk. xxiv. 21 ἡμεῖς δὲ ἠλπίζομεν ὅτι αὐτὸς ἐστὶν ὁ μέλλων λυτροῦσθαι τὸν Ἰσραήλ. R.V. has "But we hoped that it was he which should redeem Israel." Apart from the context, "we hoped" might mean "we hoped that it was—and it proved to be so," and R.V. is not the English of any particular century. A.V. is good seventeenth century English (except for the "which"): "But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed"; and it brings out the non-fulfilment of the "trust," though it does not directly attempt to render the imperfect. The meaning is, "We were hoping [almost up till to-day and saying] that 'This is he that is destined to redeem Israel.'" (B has ἠλπίζαμεν, and, in the context γενάμεναι and ἦλθαν (an interesting cluster of forms in -a.) The tense of ἠλπίζομεν, like that of ἤθελον in some of the above-mentioned instances, implies frustration. On ἤθελον implying unfulfilled desire, see 2716—7.

(iv) Perfect

(1) As the result of Johannine style

[2473] It has been pointed out above (2442—3) that, in part, the Johannine perfect corresponds to the LXX aorist representing the Hebrew perfect “I have loved,” “I have hated” meaning “I have always loved,” “I have always hated,” with the implication “I continue to love and hate.” We know from Epictetus and Pliny that Roman gentlemen borrowed the Greek κέκρικα to express what the French call chose jugée, “I have decided [once for all]”.¹ John takes advantage of the Greek distinction—non-existent in Hebrew and Latin—between the aorist and the perfect so as to represent Pilate as saying (xix. 22) ὁ γέγραφα γέγραφα, i.e. “What I have written, I have written [and shall not rewrite].” This is the usual meaning of the Johannine perfect—permanence. For example, μεμαρτύρηκα (i. 34) might mean “my testimony is completed,” as though the Baptist were thinking of himself as released from a completed task. But it probably means “I have witnessed [and abide as a witness].” So in i. 32 “I have beheld (A.V. I saw) (τεθέαμαι) the Spirit descending,” the meaning might be “I have [just] beheld”; but—in view of 1 Jn iv. 14 “we have beheld (τεθέαμεθα) and testify”—it more probably denotes the present and permanent result of the vision, such as Luke (ii. 30) expresses by the Hebraic εἶδον, “mine eyes have seen [once for all] (εἶδον) thy salvation”.²

[2474] The most interesting uses of “the perfect of permanence” are ἡλπικα and πεπίστευκα. As to the former which occurs in v. 45 (R.V.) “Moses, on (εἰς) whom ye have set your hope (ἡλπίκατε) (A.V. in whom ye trust),” there can be no doubt that the perfect in N.T. corresponds to the LXX aorist ἡλπισα above described (2443) and it is fairly frequent in N.T.³ It may be contrasted with the imperfect

¹ [2473 a] Epictetus ii. 15. 5 calls on a friend, who has decided to starve himself to death: “I called on him and began to ask him what had happened [to cause this]. ‘I have decided [κέκρικα],’ he replied.” Comp. Plin. Epist. i. 12. 10 “Dixerat sane medico, admoventi cibum, κέκρικα.”

[2473 b] In xx. 23 ἂν τινων κρατῇτε κεκράτηνται, the meaning of κρατέω is doubtful, but the perfect appears to imply instantaneousness, see 2517—20.

² Comp. i. 34 ἐώρακα A.V. “I saw,” R.V. “I have seen.”

³ [2474 a] 1 Cor. xv. 19 ἐν Χρ. ἡλπικότες ἐσμέν, R.V. “we have hoped in Christ,” A.V. “we have hope in Christ”; 2 Cor. i. 10 εἰς ὃν ἡλπίκαμεν, R.V. “on whom we have set our hope,” A.V. “in whom we trust”; 1 Tim. iv. 10 ἡλπίκαμεν ἐπὶ θεῷ ζῶντι, R.V. “we have our hope set on the living God,” A.V. “we trust in the living God,” and sim. in 1 Tim. v. 5, vi. 17.

ἡλπίζομεν describing, in Luke, the disappointed hopes of the disciples a few moments before the manifestation of the risen Saviour (2472 b).

[2475] Πεπιστεύκαμεν occurs in the Epistle 1 Jn iv. 16 "We have a perfect knowledge and we have a perfect belief," and in the Gospel vi. 69 "We have a perfect belief and we have a perfect knowledge," which have been explained above (1629). In the latter passage Peter speaks, and, in another, Martha, xi. 27 "I perfectly believe (πεπίστευκα) that thou art the Christ." Peter's belief fails for a time in the hour of trial, and Martha's faith does not enable her to enter into the Lord's purpose; but these facts do not preclude "I have believed" from meaning, on the lips of the two speakers, perfect conviction. And, although the disciples had not attained a perfect belief in Christ, they may have "believed perfectly" that He "came forth from God." This might explain an apparent inconsistency where Jesus says (xvi. 31—2), "Ye believe for the moment" and predicts that the disciples will "be scattered," and yet He has previously said (xvi. 27) "ye have a perfect belief (πεπιστεύκατε) that I came forth from the Father." Even in the reproof to Thomas in xx. 29, the perfect may retain the meaning of completeness, the reproof being based not on the incompleteness, but on the cause, of the belief¹. This use of the perfect extends even to the expression of "a perfect hatred" in xv. 24, where—in spite of the saying "No man hath seen God at any time"—Jesus says of the Jews "They have both seen and have hated (καὶ ἐωράκασιν καὶ μεμισήκασιν) me and my Father," meaning that so far as their vision goes, they are perfect haters of the Light.

(2) As the result of Johannine thought

[2476] In contrast with πεπίστευκα, ἡλπίκα, and μεμίσηκα, the form ἡγάπηκα is not found either in the Gospel or in the Epistle (not at least without a negative to deny the existence of such a "love")². But the perfect of φιλέω occurs once thus, xvi. 27 "For the Father himself loveth you because ye have loved (πεφιλήκατε) me." It has been maintained elsewhere (1716 e, f, 1728 m—p, 2584 c) that John always uses φιλέω to denote love of a lower kind than that expressed by ἀγαπάω. Using the higher term, St Paul says "Owe no man anything save to love one another¹"; and perhaps the evangelist thought that "loving," in the higher sense, is the one spiritual action that must never be spoken of as completed. Desiring to describe the disciples as having attained—even before the Resurrection and before the gift of the Holy Spirit—to a complete love of their Master in the lower sense of the word, he uses πεφίληκα.

² [2476 a] If W.H. txt is correct, the perfect occurs in 1 Jn iv. 10 οὐχ ὅτι ἡμεῖς

[2477] If this is the correct explanation of the use of πεφίληκα and the non-use of ἡγάπηκα, it follows that we must be prepared in other instances for similar explanations—that is to say, explanations not based on Greek style like γέγραφα, nor on attempts to render the Hebrew "perfect of permanence," but on Johannine thought. In the first century, when Christian evangelists were comparing or contrasting prophecy with the Gospel, one might say "The prophets prophesied," another, "They have prophesied." Thus, Matthew and Luke have "All the prophets and the Law prophesied until John" and "From that time the kingdom of God is being preached."² John has "Other men have laboured and ye have entered into their labours³." John often prefers the latter aspect, viewing the present as a completed result of the past. Sometimes the perfect may include the notion of instantaneousness—the thought being that one has not time to say "God is doing" but must say "God hath done." Thus the Epistle to the Hebrews says "In saying 'new covenant,' he has [by the mere word, at once] made antiquated the first [covenant]⁴." So, when the Lord has washed the feet of the disciples, and when He has for the first time called them "friends," the evangelist may perhaps indicate the sudden introduction of that which is new in the words, "Understand (2243) what I have done unto you" and "But you I have called friends⁵." And when He speaks of the inevitable ἡγαπήκαμεν τὸν θεὸν ἀλλ' ὅτι αὐτὸς ἡγάπησεν ἡμᾶς, "not that we have loved God, but that He loved us." Here the actual redeeming love of God for man is expressed in the aorist, and the statement in the perfect, "we have loved God," is stated only to be denied. But W.H. marg. has ἡγαπήσαμεν.

sequence of divine judgment and reward, He says that the unbeliever "hath been condemned already," and that the believer "hath passed from death into life¹." Similarly, placing Himself where He sees future glory and victory as already achieved, He says "I have been glorified in them," "I have conquered the world²." The Johannine perfect is never "used for the aorist" (2747—55).

(3) . Second Perfects

[2479] Κέκραγε in i. 15 Ἰωάννης μαρτυρεῖ περὶ αὐτοῦ κ. κέκραγεν is rendered by R.V. "John beareth witness of him and crieth," A.V.

² [2477 ε] xvii. 10 δεδοξασμαι ἐν αὐτοῖς, xvi. 33 ἐγὼ νενίκηκα τὸν κόσμον. It would be impossible to say how far these perfects are proleptic, how far regarded as actually expressing completion (in the eyes of God).

³ [2478 α] Mt. i. 22, xxi. 4, xxvi. 56 R.V. "is come to pass," which seems contrary to English idiom (A.V. "was done"). In i K. x. 20 (R.V.) "there was not the like made in any kingdom," οὐ γέγονεν is parall. to 2 Chr. ix. 19 οὐκ ἐγενήθη.

⁴ [2478 δ] Jn i. 15, 30, v. 14, xii. 30, xiv. 22. In 1 Cor. xiii. 11, A.V. "But when I became (γέγονα) a man," is rightly corrected by R.V. to "now that I am become." Γέγονα (Steph. ii. 623) = "natus sum" in such phrases as "I am ten years old," γέγονα ἔτη δέκα, comp. Rom. xvi. 7 "my seniors in Christ (πρὸ ἐμοῦ γέγοναν ἐν Χριστῷ)." Alford and Thayer quote no instance of γέγονα meaning "I am come," or "I came": ND and the Latin and Syriac vss. substitute in Jn vi. 25 some form of the verb "come." The aorist in Jn vi. 21 εὐθέως ἐγένετο τὸ πλοῖον ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, seems to imply supernatural and instantaneous arrival. Is that the meaning in Jn vi. 25 γέγονας "suddenly come"? See 2758.

"bare witness...and cried." Κέκραγα, "cry aloud," is connected by Origen¹ with the effort of voice needed to make the deaf hear, and is distinguished by him from "cry," βοάω, the word used in the LXX of Isaiah (quoted by the Synoptists) "the voice of one crying in the wilderness." John probably associates it with the "crying aloud" of Wisdom in the Book of Proverbs "Ye fools, be of an understanding heart." But why does he use the Second Perfect instead of ἔκραξεν? Partly, perhaps, for the purpose of differentiating the cry of the Baptist, whose whole mission was "crying" and "crying aloud," from the "crying aloud" of our Lord Himself, which took place on three special occasions of public teaching or warning, vii. 28, 37, xii. 44, always ἔκραξεν². But partly also the reason may be that he wishes to make the verb of "crying" parallel to the verb of "bearing witness," μαρτυρεῖ—his first use of the historic present (2482) so frequent later on in this Gospel. It is as though the Prologue of the drama had almost concluded, bringing us down from the Word in heaven to the Word on earth ("In the beginning was the Word... and the Word became flesh...full of grace and truth"). Now, before the curtain rises on the terrestrial scene, the dramatist inserts, as it were, a stage direction, "John is discovered testifying (Ἰ. μαρτυρεῖ) and crying aloud (κ. κέκραγεν)."

(v) Pluperfect

[2480] The pluperfect is perhaps more frequent in John than in any of the Synoptists, and his use of it (like his use of the perfect) shews a disposition to represent distinctions not capable of being represented in Hebrew (which has no pluperfect). It often expresses a parenthesis, or a statement out of its chronological place, of the nature of an after-thought: iii. 23—4 “Now there-was John also baptizing in Aenon—for not yet had John been cast (οὐπω γὰρ ἦν βεβλημένος) into prison” (which corrects a misapprehension likely to arise in readers of the Synoptic Gospels¹): iv. 8 “for his disciples [I should have said before] had gone away”: ix. 22 “These things said his parents because they were afraid of the Jews. For [I should have said that] some time ago (ἤδη) the Jews had agreed together...”: xi. 17—19 “Jesus therefore, having come [thither], found him [Lazarus] already four days in the grave. Now (δέ) Bethany was near Jerusalem...Now (δέ) many of the Jews had come to Martha,” where the writer goes back from “having come and found” to the circumstances that preceded the “coming” and the “finding”: xi. 30 “Now (δέ) Jesus had not yet come into the village”: xi. 57 “Now (δέ) the chief priests and the Pharisees had given commandments... that they might take him.”

[2481] This tense takes the reader, as it were, behind the scenes—after some mention of deeds or words—to tell him what really had been the cause of the result, or what had been the motive or meaning of the words. Thus the non-arrest of Jesus is twice explained, vii. 30, viii. 20, “because his hour had not yet come.” The disciples say about Lazarus “Lord, if he is asleep, he will recover,” but the explanation comes, xi. 13 “But Jesus had said [it] (εἰρήκει, i.e. had said “is asleep”) concerning his death.” In i. 19—24, terminating with the words κ. ἀπεσταλμένοι ἦσαν ἐκ τῶν Φαρισαίων, the reader may naturally ask why these “Pharisees” had not been mentioned in i. 19 along with “priests and Levites.” The explanation is, that the deputation is first described from one point of view, as having ecclesiastical status and as baffled in the attempt to extract from the Baptist an answer satisfactory to themselves. Then the Pharisees, who have the status of teachers of the Law, are on the point of stepping in to ask by what right he baptizes, and at this point the evangelist breaks the course of events to tell us that Pharisees “had been” (2214) included in the deputation².

¹ [2480 a] Luke (iii. 19—20) narrates the imprisonment of John the Baptist, and then proceeds (iii. 21) “Now it came to pass when all the people were (or, had been) baptized and when Jesus was (or, had been) baptized....” This, if connected with what precedes, might easily give the impression that the imprisonment of the Baptist immediately followed the baptism of Jesus.

² [2481 a] The pluperf. pass. also occurs in xix. 11 εἰ μὴ ἦν δεδομένον, and xix. 41 ἐν ᾧ οὐδέπω οὐδὲς ἦν τεθειμένος.

(vi) Present

(1) Historic Present

[2482] The historic present, which is much more frequent in Mark than in the other Synoptists¹, is also a striking characteristic of John. But Mark and John differ in their use of it. For example, before the historic present of ἔρχεσθαι, Mark makes a rule of prefixing *καί*², and uses it rather monotonously. John frequently uses it in asyndeton, often at the beginning of a sentence, and in such a way as to give life and vividness to the narrative, sometimes perhaps also (when applied to the "coming" of our Lord) suggesting that the Messiah is "he that cometh" to deliver (1632—6)³. John also, alone of the evangelists, uses βλέπει and—with one Synoptic exception—εὕρισκει as historic presents⁴. When the risen Saviour came for the first time to the Disciples it is said that He "came (ἦλθεν)": but when, after Thomas had refused to believe, He comes to help

Thomas and other doubters, it is said that He "cometh (ἐρχεται)¹." The former, like the coming into the world at the incarnation (2457), is described as a matter of past history; the latter as the action of ὁ ἐρχόμενος.

[2483] There is difficulty in xxi. 12—13 "Jesus saith unto them, [Come] hither, break your fast. None of the disciples would be so bold as (ἐτόλμα (2466)) to question him, Who art thou?—knowing [all of them] that it was the Lord. Jesus cometh (ἐρχεται 'I.) and taketh the bread and giveth to them, and the fish likewise." If the disciples are commanded to come "hither" by their Master, how is it that He is described as "coming" to them? One suggested explanation is that they "hang back²." But Peter had previously leaped into the water, uninvited, to hasten towards the Lord. Would he now "hang back"? Even if he had done so, would the beloved disciple "hang back"? Again, the evangelist comments on the mere silence of the disciples ("none of them durst question him"). If there had also been a "hanging back," would not the writer have commented on this also (e.g. "But when they were afraid and did not draw near, He Himself came unto them")? It is more in accordance with the tone of this Gospel to suppose that the writer assumed obedience. The Apostles come, as commanded, and recline, as for a meal, around the bread and the fish: then "cometh Jesus," i.e. to the disciples assembled round the food³. In the Washing of Feet it had been said "He cometh therefore to Simon Peter." Now He "cometh" to them all, severally. Then He washed their feet for the journey of an evangelist; now He gives them food to prepare them for it. Both are the acts of "*Him that cometh*⁴."

³ [2483 a] This somewhat resembles Luke's account of Christ's appearing to the disciples and partaking of fish in their presence (Lk. xxiv. 36—42): and it suggests that there may have been various traditions combining a literal and a symbolical meaning (1) about the catching of fish, (2) about a Eucharistic meal (after the Resurrection) in which fish formed a part. In that case, ἐρχεται might be variously interpreted as "cometh to help," "cometh suddenly," or "cometh into the assembly of the disciples."

⁴ [2483 b] It is worth noting that, in describing the Eucharist, ἐρχεται is used by Mk xiv. 17 ἐρχεται μετὰ τῶν δώδεκα, where the parall. Mt. xxvi. 20 has ἀνέκευτο, and Lk. xxii. 14 ἀνέπεσεν.

(2) Present of Prophecy and Present of Law

[2484] "Whoever stirs dies" contains a prophetic present; but "Whoever is convicted of murder dies," and "If a stone is dropped it falls," contain ordinary presents, describing what is the law (either conventional or natural). The latter might be called the Present of Law. "The present of law" and "the present of prophecy" are not always easily distinguished, especially in an author prone to contemplate in the present a future—a future when a Law now invisibly at work will be visibly fulfilled. John is such an author, and in his Gospel it is best to take the present (wherever the sense permits) as the present of law, or as the literal present, and not as the present of prophecy. The present in x. 15 "I lay down my life for the sheep" is certainly intended to include a reference to the Crucifixion. But it might refer also to the whole of Christ's work as being a "laying down of life," in so far as it realises the ideal of the Good Shepherd, of whom it is said, not that he will, if need be, do this, but that he does it: x. 11 "The good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep." In iii. 18 "He that believeth in him is not judged," the meaning is, "does not, now or ever, come under the operation of judgment." That the present is not prophetic is made almost certain by the context, "He that believeth not hath been judged already (ἤδη κρίνεται)"—which indicates that "judgment" has been in operation in time past, up to the present moment. If a law in present operation is contemplated in the latter clause, it must be contemplated also in the former.

[2485] This notion of a law in present operation occurs also in xii. 25 "he that loveth his life loseth (A.V. shall lose) (ἀπολλύει) it, and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep (φυλάξει) it to life eternal." It seems to mean "is destroying," rather than "loseth" or "shall lose," and the writer desires to suggest the present operation of the corrupting influence of self-love when it takes the form of selfishness. He might have said "shall lose" in strict antithesis with "shall keep," but he is glad to break the antithesis in order to emphasize the fact that "*he is already losing*¹."

[2486] (1) The present in x. 32 "For which of those works are ye stoning me?" and in xiii. 6 "Thou (emph.) washest my feet!" is interrogative or exclamatory, and refers to actions of which the beginnings have been described—as it does also in xiii. 27 "What thou art doing (ποιεῖς), do more quickly." In xxi. 3 "I am going (ὑπάγω) fishing," the phrase "I am going" is so suggestive of the future that it may be almost called a form of the future in Greek, as it certainly is in English. This also applies to "I am coming," which may be combined with "soon" or other temporal adverbs so as to denote a speedy future. Hence xiv. 3 "If I go...I come back (πάλιν ἔρχομαι) (2649 (ii)) and will receive you unto myself," "I come" or "am coming" may combine the notion of speed with that of prophetic certainty. The present in xxi. 23 "that disciple is not to die (οὐκ ἀποθνήσκει)" and "he said not, 'He is not to die,'" may perhaps be explained by the Greek usage of that particular word (2530), as in 1 S. xx. 32 "wherefore should he be put to death? (Heb. why shall he die?)," LXX, "Why dieth he?" ἵνα τί ἀποθνήσκει;

[2487] (2) In xii. 26 "...let him follow me, and where I am (ὅπου εἰμι ἐγώ) there shall my minister also be," a suggestion is probably intended that the Son, even while on earth, is in heaven, or with the Father; and the writer wishes to turn the reader's mind to something more than a local heaven. Εἰμι ἐγώ is repeated in xiv. 3, xvii. 24, and always precedes the antecedent clause ("that where I am ye also may be," "that where I am they also may be with me"). It is distinguished by the order of the words from ΕΓΩ ΕΙΜΙ (2226—8). So, too, is the simple εἰμί in xvi. 32 "ye shall leave me alone, and yet I am not alone because the Father is with me." Yet even there, "I am" is not prophetic present, but expresses the real, and existing, though invisible fact¹.

time when worship is to be (iv. 23) "in spirit and truth." The former is used to predict (v. 28) the resurrection of those "in the tombs"; the latter to predict (v. 25) the proclamation of the Gospel to those who are "dead [in sins]." In xvi. 2, 25, the shorter form is used to predict the persecutions and revelations that await the disciples after Christ's death; in xvi. 32, a version of the longer form, "the hour is coming and hath come," predicts the "scattering" of the disciples on that same night, and, perhaps literally, in that same "hour."

[2488] The following passage is noteworthy because it represents Jesus as varying His own words by converting a future into a present : xvi. 14—15 “He [the Holy Spirit] will glorify me : because he will take (λήμψεται) from what is mine and will announce [it] to you. All things as many as the Father hath are mine. For this cause said I that (ὅτι) ‘He taketh (λαμβάνει) from what is mine and will announce [it] to you.’” The change is perhaps best explained, not as though our Lord meant “[Yea, already] he taketh”—for in that case He would have hardly added “I said”—but as a transition of thought from what the Spirit will do to what the Spirit does in accordance with eternal Law. After a mention, in the future, of what the Spirit will do (“will glorify me...will take...will announce”) the Law is stated in the present (“All things that the Father hath are mine”) which leads to a re-statement of the Lord’s words about the action of the Spirit as though He had said “the Spirit taketh.” But the future is immediately resumed in the phrase “will announce [it] to you.”

[2489] The present is apparently used as a future in xx. 17 “Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended to the Father : but go unto my brethren and say to them, *I ascend*¹ (ἀναβαίνω) unto my Father and your Father...” In vii. 33—4 Jesus says to the Jews “a little time I am with you,” and, in the same sentence, “Where I am ye cannot come.” Here He says “I have not yet ascended” and, in the same sentence, “I ascend.” In some authors this present might mean simply “I am on the point of ascending.” But this is unusual in John—at least as the sole meaning of the present. More probably the words are intended to suggest the thought of a spiritual ascending, already begun, “I have not yet ascended...I am ascending.” The mysterious words “Touch me not for I have not yet ascended” seem to mean that when the Lord had ascended Jews “Where I am ye cannot come” immediately after saying “I am with you”—the object being to indicate that “I am,” in the Saviour’s mouth, often has a spiritual meaning, especially when it follows such a phrase as “I go to the Father.” The two sayings, then, represent the same fact from two points of view, heaven being regarded first as a state in which one is and then as a place to which one goes—“Where I am [i.e. with the Father] ye cannot come. [Do ye not understand this? Then] where I go, there ye cannot come.” The difficulty of “am” has caused some authorities (2190 a) to take εἰμι as εἶμι “I go.” So Nonnus, δδεύσω.

His disciples would be able to "touch" Him (perhaps as being the Bread of Life). The Ascension may be regarded in two ways, 1st, as an uplifting from the material earth up to and beyond the material clouds and out of sight, 2nd, as an uplifting of the Messiah in the invisible world, and simultaneously in the hearts of the disciples, to the throne of God. Luke describes the former in the Acts. John may be thinking of the latter here, and, if so, ἀναβαίνω may mean, not "I shall ascend" but "I am ascending," i.e. the Father is preparing the moment when the Son shall be exalted to heaven in the sight of angels above and in the hearts of believers below¹.

[2490] In viii. 14 "I know whence I came (ἦλθον) and where I go...ye know not whence I come (ἔρχομαι) or where I go," a contrast seems to be implied between the particular place from which a traveller may "have come," and the quarter or direction from which a man met in the street may "be coming." Πόθεν ἦλθες would be the more definite, serious, and important question. Πόθεν ἔρχει (almost equivalent to "What have you been recently doing?" "What have you been about?") might be asked out of mere curiosity. The distinction seems intended to express that the Jews have not even an indefinite notion of the origin and mission of the Son².

[2491] In xiv. 7 εἰ ἐγνώκειτέ με, καὶ τὸν πατέρα μου ἂν ᾗδετε· ἀπ' ἄρτι γινώσκετε αὐτὸν καὶ ἐωράκατε (marg. + αὐτόν), the reading is uncertain (2760—6)³. If γινώσκετε is correct, it seems to mean "ye are recognising" or "ye begin to recognise." If so, what is the meaning of the addition "and ye have seen"? How can a person begin to "recognise" unless he "has seen" previously? The passage must be compared with that in the Epistle "Every one that sinneth hath not seen him [i.e. the Son], *nor even known him*¹." In both, according to the general Johannine usage, "hath seen" must be regarded as indicating not material but spiritual vision, and "seeing" is higher than mere "recognition" or "coming to know." In ordinary Greek, and indeed in ordinary language of any nation, "knowing" a person would be taken as a later and higher stage than "seeing" him; and Chrysostom (in his comment "those whom we see we may simultaneously see and yet not know") appears to have been misled by ordinary usage into adopting the corrupt "ye shall know (γνώσεσθε)," as though that were the goal to be reached after "having seen (ἐώρακάτε)." But John seems to mean, in the Epistle, "hath not seen nor even recognised," and, in the Gospel, "Ye are beginning to recognise, [yea] and [what is more] *ye have seen*²." One may "recognise,"

² [2490 α] Chrys. says nothing about this distinction. Origen (Huet ii. 262 c) omits from ποῦ ὑπάγω το ποῦ ὑπάγω (homoeotel., 2549 α). On Nonnus see 2759.

III. 13. 2 "amodo cognovistis eum et vidistis eum," and IV. 7. 3 "Si cognovissetis me et Patrem meum cognovissetis et amodo cognovistis eum et vidistis eum"; a "Si me cognovistis et Patrem meum cognovistis: jam ex hoc nostis illum et vidistis illum," b and ff "Si cognovistis me et Patrem meum cognovistis: et amodo nostis eum et vidistis eum," f "Si cognoscetis me utique et Patrem meum cognoscetis et amodo cognoscetis eum et videtis eum"; e, alone of the latt. vss., has the present tense of γινώσκω, but in the wrong place as follows, "Si cognovistis me et Patrem meum cognoscitis et amodo nostis illum et videtis eum."

[2491 δ] Chrys. is printed by Migne as commenting thus: Πῶς δὲ εἰπὼν, "Ὅπου ὑπάγω οἴδατε, καὶ τὴν ὁδὸν οἴδατε, ἐπήγαγεν· Εἰ ἐμὲ ἐγνώκειτε, καὶ τὸν Πατέρα μου ἐγνώκειτε αὐτὸν, καὶ ἀπάρτι γινώσεσθε αὐτόν, καὶ ἐώρακατε αὐτόν; Οὐχὶ ἐναντιολογῶν· ἥδεσαν μὲν γὰρ αὐτόν, οὐχ οὕτω δὲ ὡς ἐχρῆν. Θεὸν μὲν γὰρ ἥδεσαν, Πατέρα δὲ οὐδέπω· ὕστερον γὰρ τὸ Πνεῦμα ἐπελθὼν, πᾶσαν ἐν αὐτοῖς κατεσκεύασε τὴν γνῶσιν. Οὐ δὲ λέγει, τοιοῦτόν ἐστιν· Εἰ ἥδειτε τὴν ἐμὴν οὐσίαν καὶ τὴν ἀξίαν, καὶ τὴν τοῦ Πατρὸς ἥδειτε. Καὶ ἀπάρτι γινώσεσθε αὐτόν, καὶ ἐώρακατε αὐτόν (τὸ μὲν μέλλοντος, τὸ δὲ παρόντος)· τοῦτέστιν, δι' ἐμοῦ. "Ὅψιν δὲ λέγει τὴν κατὰ διάνοιαν γνῶσιν. Τοὺς μὲν γὰρ ὀρωμένους δυνάμεθα καὶ ὁρᾶν καὶ ἀγνοεῖν· τοὺς δὲ γινωσκομένους οὐ δυνάμεθα γινώσκειν καὶ ἀγνοεῖν. Διὰ τοῦτο φησι· Καὶ ἐώρακατε αὐτόν· ὥσπερ φησιν, "Ὡφθη καὶ ἀγγέλους (1 Tim. iii. 16). Perhaps ἐγνώκειτε and ἥδειτε have been confused here in the text or in the comment. But it may be taken as certain that he read γνώσεσθε for γινώσκετε, so that he is able to say, in effect, "the 'knowing' is future, the 'seeing' is present." On Nonnus, see 2760.

about "knowing." And, if γινώσκω and ὁράω are used by John in a spiritual sense, the usage of Demosthenes may be misleading as a guide to Johannine meaning. In John, when a person is described as "being known," the present, γινώσκω, always implies sympathetic or moral knowledge, insight, understanding, as in i. 48 "Whence knowest thou me?"—that is "that I am an Israelite indeed without guile"; ii. 24 "Because of his knowing (γινώσκειν) all men" (comp. ii. 25 "he knew (ἐγινώσκειν) what was in man"), x. 14 "I know my own and my own know me," x. 15 "Even as the Father knoweth me," x. 15 "I know the Father," x. 27 "I know the sheep," xiv. 17 "doth not know it—but ye know it (i.e. the Spirit)." Comp. xvii. 3 "that they may know (γινώσκωσιν, Tisch. γινώσκουσιν) thee the only true God," and 1 Jn v. 20 "in order that (ὅνα) we may know (γινώσκομεν) the true [one]." In almost all these cases sympathy—and in many of them mutual sympathy—understanding, or insight, is implied.

[2491 d] In ii. 24 above, the knowledge or understanding had for its object the weakness or imperfection of human nature: and, still more distinctly the Epistle uses the present, γινώσκω, concerning moral understanding or knowledge of evil, as well as of good, repelling disciples of Christ antipathetically from the evil, and attracting them sympathetically to the good, 1 Jn iv. 2—8 "Herein ye understand (γινώσχετε) the Spirit of God...he that understandeth God hearkeneth to us... From this we understand the spirit of truth and the spirit that deceives and leads astray (τὸ π. τῆς πλάνης). Beloved, let us love one another, because the love [of the brethren] is from God, and everyone that loveth [his brother] is born of God and understandeth God."

[2491 e] Whence did John derive his use of the present, γινώσκω, to mean personal knowledge and sympathetic insight into character? Probably not from the LXX. The very first use of γινώσκω in LXX (Gen. ii. 17, iii. 5. 22) refers indeed to the "understanding" of good and evil, but this is expressly distinguished from "life," and it brings upon itself the curse of death. Γινώσκω is occasionally applied (2 Chr. vi. 30, Ps. xlv. 21) to God's knowledge of the human heart, in Gen. xxix. 5, and Tobit (passim) to "knowing" a person in one's town or village so as to be able to direct a stranger to him. But the style of Genesis and Tobit is not like the style or styles of most of the books of LXX, in which, as a whole, the pres., γινώσκω, signifying knowledge of a person, is very rare. Nor does it appear to be common in the Greek translators of the first century. For example, in Jer. xii. 3 σύ, κύριε, γινώσκεις με, Aq. and Sym. have ἐγnows.

[2491 f] More probably John derived his use of the present, γινώσκω, from Greek literature. In Homer and the tragedians it is often used of "distinguishing," or "recognising" persons, and friends, and also of recognising one's own nature and the nature or purpose of others, e.g. in Aesch. Prom. 309 γίνωσκε σαυτὸν, "recognise thy weakness," Soph. Phil. 1388 "Thou wilt destroy me, I see through thee (γινώσκω σε) with these words of thine," comp. Eurip. Her. 639, Hel. 567, El. 768. The Eudemian Ethics of Aristotle (vii. 4) speaks of mothers of children out at nurse as preferring "to recognise rather than be recognised (γινώσκειν ἢ γινώσκεισθαι)." In the Sibylline Oracles (i. 74 γνωστοὺς δ' οὐκ ἐγίνωσκον) the imperfect means "recognise [as having the claims of kindred]." The use of "know" in the sense of "recognising," or "acknowledging," or "appreciating" persons (Gesen. 394 a) is fairly common in Hebrew, and is not absent from St Paul (1 Thess. v. 12 εἰδέναι, 1 Cor. xvi. 18 ἐπιγινώσχετε) and from Ignatius (Smyrn. 9 καλῶς ἔχει θεὸν κ. ἐπίσκοπον εἰδέναι). But these passages do not contain the pres. γινώσκω. Perhaps John's principal debt is to Plato (2763 a—b).

to some extent, God's being and attributes long before one has "seen" Him, in the Johannine sense, as revealed in the Son.

[2492] No one has satisfactorily explained the extraordinary statement attributed to the Pharisees in vii. 52 "Out of Galilee ariseth no prophet (ἐκ τῆς Γ. προφήτης οὐκ ἐγείρεται)." On this, Westcott remarks, "Jonah, Hoshea, Nahum, and perhaps Elijah, Elisha, and Amos were of Galilee." How then could the Pharisees first say to Nicodemus, "Search and see," that is, in effect, "Look at the Scriptures [for you know nothing about them]" and then make such an astounding statement, inviting from Nicodemus an obvious refutation, "Search ye the Scriptures—and ye will learn that prophets do 'arise from Galilee'?" The only approach to an explanation is that the present "arises" means "arises as a rule." But this—besides being forced—would expose the Pharisees to the charge of impiety, "Would you lay down 'a rule' for God and assert that He cannot do anything but what you say He does 'as a rule'?" As it stands, the text seems inexplicable. And there is no variation of the text sufficient to afford a solid ground for emendation¹. Otherwise the conjecture would be obvious that, after the final c in "Galilee," o has dropped out. The result of this would be to convert "the prophet" (mentioned just before in vii. 40) to "prophet." Concerning "the prophet," the Pharisees might have traditions identifying His birth-place with that of the Messiah so that they might say "the prophet ariseth not from Galilee." In that case the present would be prophetic—"is not to arise."

[2493] In xi. 47 τί ποιοῦμεν, Wetstein simply refers to Acts iv. 16 τί ποιήσωμεν; as though the meaning were "What ought we to do?"

But there, as in Lk. iii. 10, 12, 14, Acts ii. 37, the aorist subjunctive is used. Also the subjunctive in Jn vi. 28 (τί ποιῶμεν) (2512) indicates that John would have used that mood here if he had meant "What is to be our course of action?" If τί ποιοῦμεν; could be used like τί ποιεῖς; "what folly art thou committing?" (Epict. ii. 15. 7, iii. 5. 15, Aristoph. Nub. 723, Vesp. 1443) it might mean here "How foolishly are we acting in doing nothing!" Such exclamations in the first person are existent in τί φημί; and τί πάσχω; but they are not given in the Thesaurus under ποιῶ.

[2494] Philo i. 205 says that τί ἐποίησας is ἴσον τῷ οὐδὲν ἐποίησας or οὐδὲν ἤνυσας, and this meaning,—i.e. non-accomplishment—is very suitable here, "What are we accomplishing?" i.e. "We are accomplishing nothing." This also brings out more clearly the play upon Christ's "doing" mentioned in the context, saying in effect, "We are doing nothing while this man is doing miracle after miracle." Moreover it prepares the way for the utterance of Caiaphas, who tells them what to "do" ("it is expedient that one man should die"). It is on the same line of thought as xii. 19 "Ye behold that ye are doing no good (ὠφελεῖτε οὐδέν). See, the world is going after him!" Up to the time when they exclaim, "what are we doing?" they had been "doing" nothing: it was (xi. 53) "from that day," that they "took counsel to put him to death." The note of interrogation should follow ποιοῦμεν, and ὅτι, as frequently in John (2178), should be taken as an initial "for," thus, "What are we doing [apart from talking]? For this man is doing signs daily. If we let him continue, he will be our ruin¹."

¹ [2494 a] Blass says (p. 210) "The pres. indic. is used very rarely in a deliberative sense in place of the fut. ind. (§ 56, 8): Jo. xi. 47 (Herm. Sim. ix. 9. 1) τί ποιοῦμεν; for which there are parallels in colloquial Latin." But he alleges no parallel from Gk and he adds "Plato Symp. 214 A πῶς ποιοῦμεν is not quite a similar case; it is not deliberative like τί ποιῶμεν ibid. B, but the present"—i.e. the present indicative—"contains a gentle rebuke." This appears to me to apply to τί ποιοῦμεν in John, which also "contains a rebuke" and is distinct from τί ποιῶμεν; For τί ποιοῦμεν; in Epictetus, distinct from τί ποιήσωμεν; see 2766 (i).

III. IN THE INFINITIVE MOOD

(i) Infinitive compared with ἵνα and Subjunctive

[2495] The accusative and infinitive as the object of θέλω in affirmations is rare in the Gospels¹. In xxi. 22—3 (bis) εἰς αὐτὸν θέλω μένειν, the context is somewhat parallel to that in xvii. 24 θέλω ἵνα ὅπου εἰμι ἐγὼ κακεῖνοι ᾤσιν μετ' ἐμοῦ. The comparison suggests that ἵνα conveys some notion of spiritual effort and purpose (2093—2104), which is not implied in the accusative and infinitive ("if I desire his abiding").

(ii) Aorist and Present

[2496] The difference between the aorist and the present infinitive, in John, may be illustrated by his use of both after δύναμαι. Where, for example, the infinitive represents what one can habitually "do," or "not do," in accordance with the law of one's nature, ποιεῖν is used². And, as John deals principally with this aspect of "doing," he never uses ποιῆσαι, except in xi. 37, "Was not this man [i.e. Jesus], who opened the eyes of the blind man, able (lit.) [so] to do (ποιῆσαι) that this man also [i.e. Lazarus] should not have died (ἵνα καὶ οὗτος μὴ ἀποθάνῃ)?"—where the aorist is used because the reference is not to a course of action, but to a particular act. Hence ἐλθεῖν regularly follows οὐ δύναμαι or οὐδεὶς δύναται, denoting the definite act of entering into the Kingdom of God, or of going with Christ on the path of the Cross³. Hence, too, a distinction is to be drawn between v. 44 πῶς δύνασθε ὑμεῖς πιστεῦσαι, which may be paraphrased as, "How is it possible for you (emph.) so much as to reach the threshold of belief?" and the ordinary course of action contemplated in xii. 39 "For this cause they were not able to believe (οὐκ ἠδύναντο

¹ [2495 a] With negative, it occurs in Mk vii. 24 οὐδένα ἤθελεν (Tisch. ἠθέλησεν) γινῶναι (contrast Mk ix. 30 οὐκ ἤθελεν ἵνα τις γινῶι), Lk. xix. 14, 27; without negative in Lk. i. 62 τὸ τί αὐν θέλοι καλεῖσθαι αὐτό. In the Epistles it is more freq., Rom. i. 13, xi. 25, xvi. 19, 1 Cor. vii. 7 etc.

² [2496 a] For ποιεῖν with δύναμαι, see v. 19, 30, ix. 16, 33 etc.

[2496 b] There is great difficulty in x. 29 οὐδεὶς δύναται ἀρπάξαι. The Greek MSS. present no variation. But SS, Origen, and perh. Chrys., seem to have read οὐδεὶς ἀρπάξει, and this is prob. right (2767).

πιστεύειν)¹." In iii. 27 οὐ δύναται ἄνθρωπος λαμβάνειν, the Baptist is enunciating a general law, that no man can from time to time "receive" except what is given him; but xiv. 17, ὁ κόσμος οὐ δύναται λαβεῖν, perhaps refers to the preceding definite promise "He will give you the Spirit of truth," and means "cannot receive when you receive it." It may however mean "the world cannot even reach the state of reception."

[2498] With θέλω and οὐ θέλω the present infinitive means "go on doing," as in vii. 1 "he did not wish to continue teaching (περιπατεῖν) (2342 e—f) in Judæa," vii. 17 "If any one be willing to continue doing (ποιεῖν) his will" (comp. viii. 44), ix. 27 "Why do ye desire to be hearing [it] (ἀκούειν) [all over] again (πάλιν)?" xxi. 22—3 (bis) "If I desire him to remain permanently (μένειν)." There is an interesting difference between vi. 21 ἤθελον οὖν λαβεῖν and vii. 44 τινὲς δὲ ἤθελον... πιάσαι, contrasted with xvi. 19 ἤθελον αὐτὸν ἐρωτᾶν. All three refer to particular actions; but perhaps ἐρωτᾶν, "to be asking," means "to ask all about" the mysterious saying, and not merely to put a definite question. Or possibly, as in the Acts, the present may denote an action almost begun but stopped because Jesus anticipated the question, "they wished [and were almost beginning] to ask²."

² [2498 a] Comp. ἤθελε foll. by Acts xiv. 13 θύειν, xix. 33 ἀπολογεῖσθαι, where the actions are stopped severally, by the Apostles and by the multitude, and see 2472 and 2716—7. Ἠρώτησα suggests "cross-examine" in i. 21 (comp. 19), 25, xviii. 19; but not in ix. 2 ἠρώτησαν αὐτὸν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ λέγοντες, Ῥαββί, τίς ἡμαρτεν...; Hence it does not seem likely that John would avoid the aorist infin. from a feeling that it suggested disrespect.

IV. IN PARTICIPLES

(i) Aorist

[2499] The aorist participle with the article is comparatively rare in John except in the phrase "he that sent me" or "the Father that sent me¹." In some instances it occurs in reference to future time, where we might have expected the future participle. But the meaning is "those that [shall] have," as in the Synoptic Tradition, "But he that shall have endured (ὁ δὲ ὑπομείνας) to the end, he shall be saved²." So in John v. 25—9 "The hour cometh, and now is, when the dead shall hear...and they that shall have heard (οἱ ἀκούσαντες, i.e. really heard, or hearkened, or obeyed) shall live...they that shall have done (οἱ ποιήσαντες) good.....they that shall have practised (οἱ πράξαντες) evil..." ; vii. 39 "Now he spake concerning the Spirit, which they (lit.) were destined to receive that should [hereafter] have believed on him (οὗ ἔμελλον λαμβάνειν οἱ πιστεύσαντες (al. πιστεύοντες) εἰς αὐτόν)," xvi. 2 "the hour cometh that every one that shall have killed you (πᾶς ὁ ἀποκτείνας ὑμᾶς) shall think....." ; xx. 29 "Blessed [are] they that [hereafter (1554)] shall not have seen and shall [yet] have believed (μ. οἱ μὴ ἰδόντες καὶ πιστεύσαντες)³."

[2500] In xvii. 20, "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that (R.V.) believe (A.V. shall believe) (πιστευόντων) on me through their word⁴," the R.V. might give the impression that "them that believe" denoted the converts already made by the Twelve

² Mk xiii. 13, Mt. x. 22, xxiv. 13.

³ [2499 b] In view of the freq. use of μὴ with participles where οὐ might be logically expected, some may urge that οἱ μὴ ἰ. καὶ π. may refer to those who, in the course of the last seven days, had believed in the Resurrection of the Saviour, not having seen it themselves, but having accepted the testimony of the disciples that had seen it. But, if so, would not the Evangelist have stated, however briefly, that certain persons did thus believe? And does it seem likely that he would suppose the Saviour to have thus limited His benediction? Moreover, if that had been the writer's meaning, he could have made it clear by using οὐ as in 1 Pet. ii. 10 and Rom. ix. 25 (from the LXX). In Mt. v. 11 (sim. Lk. vi. 22) (R.V.) "blessed are ye (μακάριοι ἐστε) when [men] shall reproach you (ὅταν ὀνειδίσωσιν ὑμᾶς)," the reference is to future time, although the blessing is indicated (by the insertion of "are") as present. Much more might the reference include future time when "are" is not inserted (see 1554—5).

when previously sent out by Jesus to preach the Gospel. On the other hand, A.V. ("shall believe") has probably followed the inaccurate authorities that have altered the difficult present into an easy future. But οἱ πιστεύοντες may be regarded as a noun, "believers" or "converts"; and, without regarding the present participle as "prophetic," we may say that the prayer "for the converts through their word" includes future converts (as well as present) made through the preaching of the apostles and their successors.

[2501] The aorist participle presents difficulty in iii. 32—3, "No one receiveth his testimony. He that received (ὁ λαβών) his testimony set his seal [to the statement] (ἐσφράγισεν) that God is true." The words are (Preface, p. ix) part of an evangelistic comment immediately following the Baptist's last words, "He must increase but I must decrease." The "testimony" is that of Christ, and the question arises, What person or persons does ὁ λαβών indicate? It is probably John the Baptist, who was the first to "receive" that "testimony" to the Messianic character of Jesus of Nazareth which was conveyed to the prophet by Christ's inherent grace, truth, and power. This view is confirmed by other passages. If the writer had meant "he that hath at any time received," we should expect, in accordance with Johannine style, either (i. 12) "as many as received (οἱ δὲ ἔλαβον)," or (as in vi. 45, πᾶς ὁ ἀκούσας...μαθὼν and comp. xvi. 2) "every one that hath received," or the plural participle, "those that [shall] have received" (comp. v. 25, 29 οἱ ἀκούσαντες, οἱ τὰ ἀγαθὰ ποιήσαντες)¹.

[2502] The usage of the Gospel, then, suggests a definite person. And the usage of the Epistle tends in the same direction. For there, the aorist participle with ὁ (nom.) in one of the two instances in which it occurs probably refers to Christ, and in the other certainly does so². On the whole, both context and idiomatic usage indicate that the words are a part, so to speak, of the Baptist's epitaph, declaring that he sealed an attestation to the truth of God. This accords with the Johannine account of the Baptist. The Fourth Gospel is the only one that represents the Baptist as declaring that God had said to him, i. 33 "On whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending and abiding on him, he it is that baptizeth in the Holy Spirit." And the next words describe the Prophet as attesting the truth of this message from God: "And I have seen and have borne witness that this is the Elect (815—6) of God¹."

[2503] The aorist and the present participle are used in two different contexts to describe the "descending" of the Son of man, or of the Bread of Life. The first is as follows: "No one hath ascended into heaven but he that descended out of heaven², the Son of man." In the next passage, addressed by Christ to the multitude³ after the Feeding of the Five Thousand, ὁ may mean either "the [bread] that," or "the [man] that": "The bread of God is the [one] that (ὁ) descendeth from heaven and giveth life to the world⁴." The multitude obviously take "the [one] that" to mean "the bread that"; for, without shewing any surprise, they reply "Give us evermore this bread." Then Jesus answers "I am the bread of life," and "I have descended (καταβέβηκα) from heaven."

[2504] At this point, "the Jews" are introduced. We are not to suppose that the scene is shifted to Judæa, for we are subsequently told, "these things he said, teaching, in synagogue, in Capernaum⁵." Here, as elsewhere, "the Jews" mean the Pharisees, and more particularly Pharisees of eminence in Capernaum, who had apparently heard of Christ's doctrine to the "multitude." The

[2502 c] Matthew, in a tradition peculiar to his Gospel, indicates the effect that might naturally be expected to be produced upon the Baptist by the personality of Jesus of Nazareth, (606—9) (Mt. iii. 14) "I have need to be baptized by thee"—even before the culminating revelation.

² iii. 13 ὁ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καταβάς. This is either an utterance of Christ to Nicodemus, or an evangelistic comment on Christ's utterance to Nicodemus (which, in that case, terminates with the words "how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?").

narrative—which seems to imply an interval after the address to “the multitude,” but does not say how long it was—proceeds thus: “The Jews therefore began to murmur concerning him because he said I am the bread that descended (ὁ ἄpros ὁ καταβάs) from heaven¹.” Jesus is not recorded to have said this as yet, but it appears to be their inference from Christ’s words “I am the bread” and “I have descended.” In replying to them Jesus says, “I am the bread of life. Your fathers ate the manna in the wilderness and died. This is the bread that descendeth (ὁ ἄ. ὁ καταβαίνων) from heaven that anyone (τις) may eat of it and not die².” But when He repeats the phrase in the first person, the aorist is used, “I am the living bread that descended (ὁ ἄ. ὁ καταβάs) from heaven³.” The aorist is also repeated in the last sentence of the discourse, “As the living Father sent me and I live on account of the Father, so he that eateth me he also shall live on account of me. This is the bread that descended (ὁ ἄ. ὁ καταβάs) out of heaven...⁴.”

[2505] Reviewing all the passages about “the descending bread” we are led to the conclusion that besides the contrast between the bread from heaven and the bread from earth, some distinction is intended between (1) the Bread that is, and has been from the beginning, descending to man from God through the ordinary influences of animate and inanimate Nature⁵, and (2) the definite and supreme gift of that Bread in the Incarnation. The former is expressed by the present, the latter by the aorist.

(ii) Perfect

[2506] In viii. 31 “Jesus therefore said to those Jews (R.V.) which had believed him (A.V. which believed on him), If ye abide in my word...,” the words τοὺς πεπιστευκότας αὐτῷ mean (as R.V.) simply “had believed,” without conveying any such suggestion of completeness as often attaches itself to the Johannine perfect indicative. For here the context excludes the notion of completeness.

As there is no pluperfect active participle, John, like other authors, employs the perfect participle as an equivalent. The preceding verse says, "As he spake these things many believed on him (ἐἰς αὐτόν)." The perfect participle seems to refer to this recent "believing," and to mean "those that *had just entered on belief*¹." But in any case there is no intention to imply perfect belief. On the contrary, the subtle change in passing from "believed on him" to "believed him," indicates an inferior belief in the latter case (1522—3). The context, too, indicates that these believers soon fall away and pass into the bitterest enmity. For such an issue the order of the words is perhaps intended to prepare us: "Jesus therefore said to those that had [just] believed him [being] Jews"—a term that in this Gospel almost always means that part of the nation which identified itself with the Pharisees and was systematically hostile to Jesus.

(iii) Present

[2507] The present participle, with the article, is regularly used by John (as in the LXX "he that curseth (ὁ κακολογῶν) father or mother²") in stating a general law so as to include future as well as present, and sometimes referring mainly to the future: xiii. 20 "He that receiveth (ὁ λαμβάνων) whomsoever I send (ἄν τινα πέμψω) receiveth me," vi. 35 "he that cometh unto me shall not hunger," vi. 37 "him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." In the above quoted instances a class, not an individual, is denoted. But the context shews that an individual, not a class, is denoted in i. 15 (W.H. marg.) "John testifieth concerning him, and crieth aloud, saying, (lit.) This was he that I said, He that cometh after me is become before me...." Here ὁ ὀπίσω μου ἐρχόμενος, according to Johannine usage, would naturally mean "whosoever cometh after me": but the preceding words, "This was he that I said," shew that a special person is intended, and make the meaning clear. W.H.'s text "This was he that said" would not make the meaning clear, or rather would make the meaning different from what is intended. For this and other reasons the marginal reading is preferable¹.

¹ [2506 a] The perfect participle often refers to quite recent events in John, e.g. ii. 9 "the water just made (γεγενημένον) wine...those that had just drawn (ἡντληκότες) the water," v. 10, vi. 13 etc.

[2506 b] It has been shewn (1703 a) that John uses the perf. of ὁρᾶν much more freq. than the Synoptists do. But it may be added that he is also far more prone than the Synoptists to the general use of perf. participles.

[2508] The present participle without the article is variously interpreted in i. 9 "The true light, which lighteth every human being (πάντα ἄνθρωπον)², coming (ἐρχόμενον) into the [whole] world." A.V. "every man that cometh" is not in accordance with the usage of John, who would probably have written πάντα τὸν ἐρχόμενον if that had been his meaning. R.V. marg. "as he cometh" is liable to the objection that it introduces an inappropriate metaphysical suggestion as to the precise moment when the Light shines on the soul; and it is not supported by the Hebrew phrase "all that come into the world" (which favours A.V. rather than R.V.)³. The context, and the tone of the Fourth Gospel, favour the connexion of "coming" with "light." Like the distinction above (2505) between καταβαίνων and καταβάς, there appears a distinction here between ἐρχόμενον and ἦλθεν, and the passage says, first, that the Light was "continually coming" to all mankind (more especially to the prophets and saints) and then that it definitely "came" in the Incarnation⁴.

² [2508 a] See Lightf. on Col. i. 28 where he says that "every man" is "three times repeated for the sake of emphasizing the universality of the Gospel."

⁴ [2508 c] Comp. i. 9—II ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν κόσμον...εἰς τὰ ἴδια ἦλθεν, "coming continually into the world...into his own house he came [once for all]." Alford says that Origen, Chrysostom and most of the Greek commentators take ἐρχόμενον with ἄνθρωπον. It is true that the Latin translations of Chrys. and Origen have "venientem," but the argument of Chrys. suggests (though it does not prove) that he followed Origen in regarding the metaphor as that of the sun "coming to," and shedding its light on, "the world." Moreover Cramer's version of Chrysostom has πάντας ἦλθε φωτίσαι, and Theodorus says (Cramer) εἰπών τὸν ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν [2509] Exact instances of the prophetic present participle in John are very rare. Strictly speaking, if the Holy Spirit must be described as "not yet" being (vii. 39) till Jesus was "glorified," then i. 33 "This is he that baptizeth in the Holy Spirit" is prophetic present, and the same must hold good about i. 29 ὁ ἄμνος...ὁ αἴρων "the Lamb...that taketh away the sin of the world," unless the Lamb of God may be regarded as already beginning to do its work. Both these instances are in words of the Baptist, and perhaps the evangelist deliberately assigns to the last of the prophets the prophetic present. Elsewhere xxi. 20 "Who is it that delivereth thee up?" is a repetition of the question xiii. 25 "Who is it?" which follows xiii. 21 "One of you shall deliver me up," so that it meant "Who is the man that shall deliver thee up?" Possibly, then, xxi. 20 is a case of prophetic present. But it must be remembered that xiii. 2 has previously described the intention of "delivering up" as having been put into the heart of Judas, and the Synoptists tell us that the treacherous compact had already been made.

[2510] At an earlier point in the Gospel the future participle is used in connexion with the treachery of Judas, vi. 64 "He knew... and who it was that should deliver him up (ὁ παραδώσων αὐτόν)"—the only instance given by Bruder of a Johannine future participle with the article¹. Comparing this with xiii. 11 "for he knew him that was delivering him up (τὸν παραδιδόντα αὐτόν)" we can hardly κόσμον περὶ τοῦ δεσπότην Χριστοῦ. Origen Cels. vi. 5 quotes Is. lx. 1 "Thy light hath come" to illustrate the "coming" of the light "into the world," which he describes as τὸν ἀληθινὸν καὶ νοητὸν apparently meaning "the hearts and minds of men." So in his Comm. on Jn (Huet ii. 25) Origen says that, as the material sun is the light of the material world, so the Saviour shines on the reason (τοῖς λογικοῖς καὶ ἡγεμονικοῖς). Comp. Orig. (on Jer. xi. 1—10, Hom. ix.) quoting Jn i. 9—11 with the preface ἡ ἐπιδημία [i.e. τοῦ Χρ.]...ἐπιλάμψασα ὅλῳ τῷ κόσμῳ. In the Latin Hom. on Ex. xxxv. 5, when Origen quotes Lk. xii. 49 "I have come to send fire" with Jn i. 9, "iste ignis (πῦρ) quem venit mittere Jesus illuminat quidem omnem hominem venientem (? veniens, ἐρχόμενον)" it is probable that Orig. meant πῦρ ἐρχόμενον to be taken together. See also his Comm. on Judg. ii. 7 (Lomm. xi. 218) "Si enim intelligamus 'lumen verum quod illuminat omnem hominem venientem (? error for "veniens") in hunc mundum' et praebeamus ei ad illuminandum animas nostras, aut si oriatur nobis sol justitiae, et mundum animae nostrae habemus hospitium," where men are apparently said to "have as it were the world of their soul as the abiding-place of the Light." Similarly later on (Lomm. xi. 222) the argument would be improved by substituting "veniens" for "venientem." But Nonnus has ἀνδρῶν ἔρχομένων ἐπὶ γαίαν.

think it an improbable hypothesis that ὁ παραδιδούς means "engaged in the work of delivering up" and is not a prophetic present.

V. IN THE SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD

(i) Aorist and Present

[2511] That John, more than many Greek authors, utilises the shades of difference between the aorist and the present subjunctive, may be inferred from a single passage x. 38 "in order that ye may recognise (γινῶτε) and go on recognising (γινώσκητε) that the Father is in me¹." His usage will be conveniently considered for the most part under the headings of (a) Deliberative Subjunctive, (β—ε) εἰάν (or ἄν), (ζ—η) ἵνα, (θ) ὅταν—with which conjunctions the subjunctive most often occurs.

(a) In Deliberative Subjunctive

[2512] The deliberative subjunctive in vi. 28 τί ποιῶμεν, "what must we habitually do?" (with v.r. ποιήσωμεν, -ήσομεν, -οῦμεν) differs from τί ποιήσωμεν in Luke², in that the former indicates a course of action, the latter a special action at a certain crisis. In vi. 5, John agrees with Mark vi. 37 ἀγοράσωμεν "are we to buy [in this emergency]?"—where Matthew and Luke differ from Mark, and John, though agreeing in the deliberative, differs as to the speaker³. John's use (though rare) of the deliberative subjunctive bears on xi. 47 τί ποιούμεν; shewing that it must not be rendered "what must we do?" since this would have been expressed by him in the usual way, by the subjunctive⁴.

¹ [2511 a] Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 12 "For the moment (ἄρτι) I am [merely] recognising (γινώσκω) in part, but then I shall further recognise (ἐπιγινώσκειν)." Applied to spiritual truth, γινώσκω = "I recognise," ἐγνων = "I recognised at a certain point of time," ἐγνοκα = "I have recognised and possess the recognition," ἐπιγινώσκω = "I have a further recognition," i.e. an advanced spiritual knowledge. The Johannine and the Pauline aspects differ. In 1 Cor. xiii. 12 "recognition" is regarded as present and partial when contrasted with the future. In Jn x. 38 it is present and progressive, as contrasted with the past when the believer first recognised (γινῶτε).

⁴ [2512 b] See 2493—4. In xii. 27, τί εἰπω; if it means "what should I say?" is deliberative subjunctive. If it meant (933 foll., a view now retracted) "Why should I say?" i.e. "Surely I ought not to say," it would not be what is commonly

(β) With εἰ (or εἴ), "if"

[2513] In the Synoptists, εἰ, "if," apart from μή, very rarely occurs—if we except clauses with ἔχω or θέλω—without the aorist subjunctive or some equivalent. There are only two passages of Mark that contain exceptions to this rule¹. In the two instances called deliberative subjunctive, but a negative interrogative. I cannot, however, find an instance of τί εἶπω; "why should I say?" Ps. lxxix. 10 "Wherefore should the heathen say?" is in LXX μήποτε εἰπωσιν; (al. εἰς τί λέγει, or ἐρεῖ;). Πῶς εἶπω; "how could I say?" might be illustrated by Ps. cxxxvii. 4 πῶς ᾄσωμεν "how could we sing?" But τί εἶπω (like τί φῶ; comp. Aristoph. Nub. 1378 τί σ' εἶπω;) seems to require the rendering "what ought I to say?" It is quite true that (939) "what ought I to say?" savours rather of Greek tragedy than of Hebrew literature, and does not at first seem appropriate to the Johannine conception of Christ. But it may be explained by xii. 49 ἐντολὴν δέδωκεν τί εἶπω, "the Father hath given me commandment what I should say." The Son, listening for the Father's voice, says, "what should I say? [Should I say] Save me?"—and then recognises at once that this should not be said and utters the prayer that should be said.

[2512 c] Irenaeus i. 8. 2 says that the Valentinians, along with "My soul is exceeding sorrowful," and "If it be possible let this cup pass from me," quoted the words καὶ τί εἶπω οὐκ οἶδα, "and what ought I to say? I know not"—as a manifestation of ἀπορία. This at all events proves that in very early times τί was rendered "what?" Chrys. paraphrases thus, Ἄλλ' οὐκ ἔχω τί εἶπω, φησὶν, ἀπαλλαγὴν αἰτούμενος, διὰ γὰρ τοῦτο ἦλθον εἰς τὴν ὥραν ταύτην, "I do not know what I should say petitioning for release." For contextual variations, see 2768—70.

¹ [2513 a] One of these is Mk xiv. 31 εἰ ἂν δέη, "if it be necessary [i.e. the present decree of God]." The other is Mk ix. 43—7 "And if thy hand offend thee...(45) and if thy foot offend thee...(47) and if thine eye offend thee," in which the following variations deserve note:

ix. 43	ix. 45	ix. 47
B κ. εἰ...-ιση	κ. εἰ...-ίση	κ. εἰ...-ίση

[2513 b] These three sayings about "hand," "foot," and "eye" are given in full by Mk alone. Mt. condenses two of them ("hand or foot") into one. Lk. omits them all. Mk places before them a saying about "a mill-stone" and "whosoever (ὅς ἂν) shall cause to stumble (σκανδαλίσῃ)," Mt. agrees, Lk. varies (ἢ ἵνα σκανδαλίσῃ) but retains "the mill-stone." There, D has, in Mk ix. 42 σκανδαλίσῃ, in Mt. xviii. 6 σκανδαλίσῃ, in Lk. xvii. 2 σκανδαλίσῃ. The hypothesis suggests itself that Mk reflects the influence of oral tradition, and of sayings addressed to converts or to possible converts in different forms on different where it occurs with the present subjunctive in Matthew, the clause means "If so-and-so be just happening," or, "If so-and-so be going on, [what will be the immediate consequence]?"¹ In Luke there are two instances of ἐάν with present subjunctive, and there the force of the present is not so clear².

[2514] In John, ἐάν with the present subjunctive is much more frequent than in the Synoptists, and it is not always easy to perceive the difference of meaning. For example, the aorist is used in viii. 31 "If ye abide in my word," viii. 51—2 (bis) "If any one keep my word," xv. 7 "If ye abide in me," xv. 10 "If ye keep my commandments." In viii. 31 the apodosis is present, "ye are my disciples": does not this seem to shew that "if ye abide" means "if ye are abiding"? In xv. 7 the apodosis is an imperative "ask": and this, too, seems to imply the condition of a present "abiding," on the strength of which the disciples are encouraged to "ask" at once³. The fact is that, owing to the disuse of some of the old classical Greek conditional forms, a great burden is thrown on this particular form, ἐάν with aorist, just as, in English, a great burden is thrown on such a form as "if he comes," which, in spoken English, often does occasions:—at one time, "If thy right hand should offend thee (σκανδαλίσῃ)"; at another, "If thy right hand be [now] offending thee, cut it off [and come to the Lord Jesus Christ]." I believe it would be found that the misspellings of uncial mss. are more numerous and striking in Mk than in Mt. and Lk., and that these misspellings—though in part attributable to other causes—may be partially explained by the fact that the author of Mk was comparatively illiterate, and that it was largely based on oral tradition. The same statement would apply, in the Double Tradition, to Mt. as compared with the better spelt version of Lk.

duty for "if he come" (which may now be regarded as pedantical), "if he should come," "if he is coming," and "if he *is about to come*¹." John accepts, with the Synoptists, the loose aorist with ἐάν, which, though mostly referring to the future, may include the present: but he differs from the Synoptists in that he uses the present with ἐάν, much more frequently than they do, to express something that may be at the present time going on, and to introduce the consequence that must be (conditionally) going on at the same time, e.g. xi. 9 "If any one be walking in the day, he is not stumbling."

[2514 (i)] John's free use of ἐάν with present subjunctive allows him to make distinctions not so clearly recognisable in the Synoptists between such phrases as (1) *εἰ ταῦτα ποιεῖτε*², "if, as ye say, or if, as I assume, ye are doing this³," (2) ἐὰν ταῦτα ποιῇτε, "on the supposition that ye are doing this" or "put the case that ye are doing this," (3) ἐὰν ταῦτα ποιήσητε, "should ye do this⁴." In xiii. 17 εἰ ταῦτα οἴδατε,

² [2514 (i) a] Εἰ conditional with the fut. is non-existent in Jn. In N.T. it is very rare except in Hebraic interrog., e.g. Mk viii. 12 εἰ δοθήσεται; and indirect interrog. The fut. occurs (1) after εἰ καὶ in Mk xiv. 29 (D καὶ ἐάν and subjunct., and par. Mt. xxvi. 33 om. καὶ) and Lk xi. 8 (D om. εἰ καὶ):—where the meaning is "I grant that." Elsewhere εἰ and fut. are perh. restricted to phrases about an appointed time of harvest, trial, judgment etc. (1 Cor. ix. 11 μέγα εἰ θερίσομεν, iii. 14 εἴ τις τὸ ἔργον μενεῖ, iii. 15 εἴ τις τὸ ἔργον κατακαήσεται). In 2 Tim. ii. 12 εἰ ἀρνησόμεθα, 1 Pet. ii. 20 (bis) εἰ ὑπομενεῖτε the futures are prepared for by present verbs, and the fut. means "if [in the hour of trial]."

μακάριοι ἔστε ἐὰν ποιῇτε αὐτά, the meaning is, perhaps, "If ye know this [as ye suppose ye do, though one of you, Judas, knoweth it not] blessed are ye—on the supposition that ye are giving effect to your knowledge by action." In v. 31 ἐὰν ἐγὼ μαρτυρῶ περὶ ἑμαντοῦ ἢ μαρτυρία μου οὐκ ἔστιν ἀληθής, "put the case that I (emph.) am bearing witness about myself; [then] my witness is not true," the meaning seems to be that the Son is not really bearing witness about Himself because, though His lips may utter the words of testimony, the Father is speaking through the Son. This must be compared with viii. 14 "Even though I (emph.) be bearing witness (καὶ ἐγὼ μαρτυρῶ) about myself, my witness is true"¹.

¹ [2514 (i) e] Comp. Eurip. Ion 532 μαρτυρεῖς στανῶ. Chrys. ad loc. maintains that the meaning is, "If I bear witness about myself, my witness—according to what you say, you Jews—is not true." The Jews have said nothing of the kind as yet. But they say it afterwards (viii. 13) and Chrys. maintains that Jesus was here "anticipating (προλαβὼν) the charge that the Jews are going to make." But the context (v. 30 "I am not able to do anything from myself") indicates that Jn has in view the unity of the Son with the Father (as suggested in Is. xi. 3) and that "I" means "I apart from the Father." Subsequently the statement is verbally and superficially contradicted in viii. 14 "Even though I [the Son] be bearing witness about myself, my witness is true"—because the Father is bearing witness through the Son.

[2515 b] The future is exceptionally found in the apodosis in xii. 26 b "If any one be ministering (διακονῇ) to me, him will my Father honour," xiii. 35 "Hereby shall men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have (ἐχῆτε) love one to another" (where, however, not much stress can be laid on the pres. ἐχῆτε, as the aorist subjunctive is rare and does not occur in the Gospel, though found in the Epistle). As to xii. 26 b comp. Lk. xii. 37 on the honour that will be paid by the Master to those servants whom "he shall find watching": perhaps the meaning is "If any one be [found in the day of visitation] ministering to me." This suggests a similar rendering in xiii. 35 "If ye be [found] having love." But, as to this and xiv. 15 ἐὰν ἀγαπᾷτε με...τηρήσετε, xiv. 23 ἐάν τις ἀγαπᾷ με...τηρήσει..., it must be noted that the aorist of ἀγαπάω sometimes means (1744 (iv) foll.) "manifest love by action," and might be unsuitable where the writer desires to say "if ye be really loving me in your heart ye will keep my commandments."

In vi. 62 ἐὰν οὖν θεωρήτε... Chrysostom reads the aorist ἴδητε while Nonnus paraphrases as ἀθρήσητε—and an aorist in the protasis would of course affect the character of the implied apodosis¹. The difference between viii. 51—2 ἐάν τις τηρήσῃ (comp. xv. 10 ἐὰν τηρήσῃτε) and 1 Jn ii. 3 ἐὰν...τηρώμεν, is that the Gospel declares a future consequence of a future act or state while the Epistle declares the present consequence of a present act or state: “And herein we recognise that we [have recognised and] know him if we be keeping his commandments².” In xii. 26, what is the difference intended by the variation of order, ἐὰν ἐμοὶ τις διακονῇ...ἐάν τις ἐμοὶ διακονῇ? In the former, ἐμοὶ seems (2553) more emphatic than in the latter: “If a man be servant of mine let him follow me on the path of the cross: if a man be [found in the act of] serving me, him will my Father honour.” The context shews that διακονῇ in the first clause means “be servant in name and in profession,” which may be compared with the tradition in Mark and Matthew “If any one (lit.) willeth (εἴ τις θέλει) to come after me...let him take up his cross and follow me,” where Luke has “If any one willeth to be [daily] coming (ἔρχεσθαι)... let him take up his cross daily (καθ’ ἡμέραν) and follow me³.”

[2515 (i)] Ἐάν with indicative does not occur in John; but it occurs once in the Epistle (1 Jn v. 15) καὶ ἐὰν οἶδαμεν, and it is supported by Blass (p. 214) from 1 Thess. iii. 7 ἐὰν ὑμεῖς στήκετε (-ητε N*DE)—also Job xxii. 3 ἐὰν σὺ ᾔσθῃ—and he says “the only irregularity is that this present indicative is occasionally preceded by ἐάν instead of εἰ.” The facts alleged hardly justify the phrase “occasionally preceded.” For οἶδαμεν is not exactly a present,

² [2515 d] 1 Jn ii. 3 Καὶ ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκωμεν ὅτι ἐγγνώκαμεν αὐτόν. See 2491 and 2760—6 on γινώσκω and ἐγγνώκα. Here γινώσκωμεν appears to mean, not, “we recognise for the first time” or “begin to recognise,” but “we spiritually recognise that we have a complete spiritual recognition.”

³ [2515 e] Mk viii. 34, Mt. xvi. 24, Lk. ix. 23. In 1 Jn xii. 26, Chrys. twice reads, in the first clause, ὁ ἐμοὶ διακονῶν, and illustrates it by the Synoptic tradition about “taking up the cross.” Cramer has ἐάν τις ἐμοὶ διακονεῖ, but this is in the second clause, “If any one be [found] ministering to me, him will my Father honour.”

so that the inference is drawn from a single instance in N.T. Moreover in the LXX, so far as concerns several books at all events, there appear to be no instances of ἐάν with pres. indic. except as various readings¹. Ἐάν with ἦσθα may be explained by peculiarities connected with ἦσθα, not with *ἐάν*². So, too, in all probability, may ἐάν with *στήκετε*³. In 1 Jn v. 15 and in the preceding words, there are several variations; NA omit the words in question (prob. through homoeotel.); in 1 Jn ii. 29, ἐάν εἰδῇτε is corrupted by several

² [2515 (i) b] Phrynichus says, “Ἡς ἐν ἀγορῇ, σόλοικον. λέγε οὖν “ἦσθα.” Ὁρθότερον δὲ χρῶτο (?) ἂν ὁ λέγων, ἐάν ἦς ἐν ἀγορῇ.” This apparent “uncertainty about ἦς and ἦσθα” is justly called by Dr Rutherford (p. 240—1) “surprising.” But prob. Phrynichus wrote χω|τω|ι i.e. “use the iota subscript” (2772—5). In LXX, ἦς occurs (Oxf. Conc.) 5 times (only 2 without v.r.). Comparing Job xxxviii. 4 ἦς (A ἦσθα) with Job xxii. 3 ἐάν σὺ ἦσθα (A ἦς) we may infer that LXX here confused ἦς and ἦσθα together—not a difficult matter in view of the general confusion of the forms of the imperfect of εἰμί. Comp. Ex. xxi. 23 ἐάν δὲ ἦν (3rd pers.) AF ῆ, Lev. xxi. 17 ἐάν ῆ (A ἦν). In Numb. xxvii. 8 ἄνθρ. ἐὰν ἀποθάνῃ... καὶ υἱὸς μὴ ἦν (AF ῆ) αὐτῷ the distance of ἦν from ἐάν may have caused the ῆν clause to be taken parenthetically. As regards ἦν and ῆ or ῆ, the insertion or omission of ν may be explained in the usual way (360 a). The Editor of certain Berlin Papyri (27 B.C.—250 A.D.) would read ἐάν ῆ for ἐάν ἦν in some cases where Deissmann (p. 201) would retain the latter; and Deissmann states that “ἐάν with the subjunctive is found three times in the same papyrus” that contains the indicative. See 2771.

[2515 (i) d] The conclusion is that particular phrases with οἶδα, εἰμί, and στήκω, do not form a solid basis for inferences about the general usage of ἐάν and ὅταν. Very often word-usage might override grammatical usage. In London, “We have drank” was (at all events between 1865 and 1889) frequently used for authorities to εὖν ἰδῆτε¹, and if 1 Jn v. 15 originally had εἰδομεν, a spelling of εἰδωμεν, the former might easily be taken as an error for οἰδαμεν. On the whole, however, οἰδαμεν is probably correct. But, if so, it seems used, not to emphasize the indicative, but because the writer avoids the subjunctive εἰδῶ, familiar indeed (2729 a) in the phrase ἰν' εἰδῆς, -ῆτε, but (perhaps on that very account) almost restricted to that phrase—as “hanged,” in English, has come to be almost restricted to judicial executions.

(γ) With ἄν and Relative

[2516] Whereas the Gospel has (xiv. 13, xv. 16, xvi. 23) ὁ τι ἄν (or ἄν τι) αἰτήσητε referring to the future, the Epistle has (1 Jn iii. 22) ὁ ἄν αἰτῶμεν (and 1 Jn ii. 5) ὁς δ' ἄν τηρῇ referring to the present². In Jn v. 19 “The Son can do nothing of himself but (R.V.) what he seeth the Father doing (ἄν μὴ τι βλέπῃ τὸν πατέρα ποιοῦντα),” a closer rendering would be “The Son can do nothing of himself—[nothing] unless he be [at the moment] seeing the Father doing something,” and the reference is to the preceding words, “The Father loveth the Son and is [always] shewing him all things that he himself is doing.” The exact rendering is of little importance provided that the reader understands that the whole passage (including the statement that “the Son quickeneth whom he will”) is not in a prophetic present referring to the future. It regards the incarnate Son as continually “seeing” on earth what the Father is doing in heaven, and as Himself doing the same thing (1607)³.

“we have drunk,” for seemliness. So (1) the familiar imperative στήκετε might replace the rare ἐστήκητε or στήκητε, (2) εἰδῶμεν, being ambiguous as well as rare, might be replaced by οἰδαμεν, and (3) the two indicative forms ἦσθα and ἦς might be confused with the subjunctive ᾗς.

² [2516 a] 1 Jn iii. 17 ὁς δ' ἄν ἔχῃ τ. βίον τ. κόσμου κ. θεωρῇ...κ. κλείσῃ, may be compared with Mt. v. 23 quoted above (2513 c); the man “is staring” stolidly at his distressed brother and then, by a definite act, suddenly shuts up his heart against him. Bruder (1888) prints xv. 7 as the only instance in the Fourth Gospel of εἰδῶν used for ἄν with relative and subjunct., on which see 2660 b. Bruder (Moulton) prints also xxi. 25, perh. by misprint, see 2414—6.

³ [2516 b] Another instance of ἄν with pres. subjunct. is ii. 5 ὁ τι ἄν λέγῃ ὑμῖν ποιήσατε, not important, but interesting in view of the freq. use of εἶπω and εἴπωμεν in the Gospel and Epistle, and of the non-occurrence of the subjunctive λέγω, in either, elsewhere. (1) Λέγω is not so formal as εἶπω. (2) Mary probably

(δ) ἌΝ ΤΙΝΩΝ ΚΡΑΤῆΤΕ (xx. 23)

[2517] In xx. 23 ἄν τινων (marg. τινος) ἀφῆτε τὰς ἀμαρτίας ἀφείωνται (marg. ἀφίονται) αὐτοῖς, ἄν τινων (marg. τινος) κρατῆτε (D κρατήσητε) κεκράτηνται, the aorist (ἀφῆτε) may imply a definite act "if ye let go," the present (κρατῆτε) a keeping of things as they are, "if ye go on retaining." But the use of κρατέω creates difficulty. It may mean "I hold," "take [hold of]," or, "retain." But does it ever mean "I retain a burden in its position on someone else"? There anticipated some immediate action or utterance from her Son; and hence the meaning seems to be "Whatever he may be shortly saying to you, obey it [at once]," suggesting that the attendants are to catch up any word that may fall in the next few moments from Jesus. In v. 19 ἄν μὴ τι, the separation of τι from ἄν seems to differentiate it from ἐάν τις, i.e. ὅστις ἄν.

[2517 c] Κρατέομαι (passive), in N.T., occurs elsewhere only in Lk. xxiv. 16 "but their eyes were holden (ἐκρατοῦντο)," i.e. supernaturally bandaged or bound, and Acts ii. 24 οὐκ ἦν δυνατόν κρατεῖσθαι αὐτὸν ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, which, coming after the expression "loosed (λύσας) the pangs of death," indicates that κρατεῖσθαι means "to be held fast," "to remain in bonds," or "to remain shut up in Hades."

[2517 d] SS (Burk.) has, in Jn xx. 23, "and whom ye shall shut [your door] against—it is shut," as in Ps. lxix. 15 (quoted by Mr Burkitt ad loc.) "Let not the pit shut its mouth upon (or, against) me," which suggests that the translator took τινων as governed by κρατῆτε, and understood the meaning to be "whomsoever ye shut up in prison." Mark and Matthew never use κρατεῖν τινος thus. But they use κρατεῖν τινα as follows:

Mk vi. 17

ἐκράτησεν τὸν Ἰ. κ.
ἔδραμεν αὐτὸν ἐν φυλακῇ.

Mt. xiv. 3

κρατήσας τὸν Ἰ. ἔδραμεν
κ. ἐν φυλακῇ ἀπέθετο.

Lk. iii. 20

κατέκλεισεν τὸν Ἰ. ἐν

is some reason for believing that John is restating, in a new form, a tradition like those peculiar to Matthew (xvi. 19, xviii. 18) about "binding and loosing." Matthew's traditions have in both clauses an aorist subjunctive in the protasis followed by a perfect participle of permanence in the apodosis, "Whatsoever ye bind (δῆσητε)...shall be once for all bound (ἔσται δεδεμένον)...whatsoever ye loose (λύσητε)...shall be once for all loosed (ἔσται λελυμένον)¹."

[2518] If John was writing with allusion to Matthew's tradition, he might naturally wish to differentiate the Christian "loosing" and "binding" from the Jewish "binding and loosing" of which, says Horae Hebraicae (on Mt. xvi. 19), "one might produce thousands of examples," and in which "bind" meant "pronounce sinful, or unclean" (and hence "forbid," e.g. of actions on the sabbath) in allusion to which our Lord said that the Pharisees bound heavy burdens on their brethren. Hence, whereas the usual Jewish order (and the order in Matthew) is "bind and loose," John might give prominence to the "loosing" by putting it first, and he describes the "loosing" as a forgiveness of sins.

[2519] The inference is fairly probable that John is writing with some allusion to Matthew's tradition about "binding" and "loosing." Beyond this, it is difficult to advance. The exact meaning is doubtful. The antithesis favours the supposition that (as in R.V.) "sins" must be supplied as the object of κρατῆτε and as the subject of κεκράτηνται. Yet κρατεῖν, in the sense of "hold fast," though most appropriate to "holding fast hope, tradition, teaching" etc., seems quite inappropriate to "sins." The interpretation suggested by SS of "keeping in prison," cannot be paralleled from N.T., nor from Greek

Here Luke substitutes "shut up" for the Synoptic "arrested and bound." And it should be noted that Luke never follows Mark in any of the numerous passages where Mark uses κρατεῖν to mean "take," "arrest." Also, in a metaphorical passage, dealing with remission of sins, where Mark describes the "strong [man]" as being "bound" (Mk iii. 27, Mt. xii. 29 "unless he first bind (δῆσῃ) the strong [man]") Luke (xi. 22) has "conquer (νικήσῃ)."

[2517 e] There are two passages about "binding" and "loosing" (both in the aorist) peculiar to Matthew. One is addressed to Peter, one to the disciples, Mt. xvi. 19 δ ἐὰν δῆσῃς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἔσται δεδεμένον ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, κ. δ ἐὰν λύσῃς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἔσται λελυμένον ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, Mt. xviii. 18 sim. with οσα ἐὰν δῆσῃτε and ἐν οὐρανῳ. In the latter, the context is connected with forgiveness of sins.

literature generally except so far as κρατεῖν with the genitive means "keep in control." Moreover, it interferes with the antithesis.

[2520] But it is worth noting that the author of Horae Hebraicae sees in the passage some allusion to the phrase "delivering over to Satan," and that this sort of "delivering over" in Deuteronomy (xxxii. 30) is rendered by Aquila "shutting up [in prison]" συνέκλεισεν. Moreover the Double Tradition has a passage describing how a persistence in injuring one's brethren, followed by a refusal to be reconciled, brings with it a "delivering over" and a "casting into prison," where the offender is to remain till the last farthing is paid¹. Chrysostom also, in his brief comment on the Johannine passage, illustrates it by a mention of "a king, who sends rulers with power to cast into prison and to let loose from prison²." Thus, a number of early Christian and Jewish traditions point to the conclusion, although it cannot be proved, that John may here be referring to "binding" or "imprisoning," and that the tradition meant something to the effect, metaphorically, that whomsoever the disciples from time to time "arrested"—these were "at once and permanently arrested."

(ε) With ἔάν μὴ

[2521] Ἐάν μὴ with present subjunctive is very rare in N.T. It occurs however thrice in xv. 4—6 "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it be abiding in the vine, so neither can ye except ye be abiding in me...Except a man be abiding in me he is [straightway] cast (ἐβλήθη) (2445) out." The only other instance in the Gospels is Lk. xiii. 3 "except ye be repenting (ἐάν μὴ μετανοήτε) ye shall all likewise perish," where there is a threat of retribution, as also in the

It was the part of a disciple of Christ (Is. lviii. 6) λύσαι πάντα σύνδεσμον ἀδικίας, but Peter is forced to say to Simon Magus (Acts viii. 23) εἰς σύνδεσμον ἀδικίας ὧρῶ σε ὄντα. The Apostle did not cast Simon Magus into the prison of sin, but was forced to leave him there and to tell him he was there, at the same time warning him to repent. The word seems to have been used by the disciples of Simon Magus (as quoted by Hippol. vi. 19 οὐ γὰρ μὴ κρατεῖσθαι αὐτοὺς ἐπὶ τινι νομιζομένῳ κακῷ, λελύτρωνται γάρ) to mean that "they were not under bondage for any supposed evil [deed]," and it is opposed to being "ransomed." In Fayûm Pap. 109 (1st cent.) "whenever you...want to borrow anything from me, (edd.) I at once give in to you," εὐθύς σε οὐ κρατῶ, might not the meaning be, "I do not restrict you"? Comp. last clause of the Johannine passage. It would make good sense, in both, to supply "found"—with a reference to the Day of Retribution—"except a man be [found] abiding," "except ye be [found] repenting." In Luke there follows the usual aorist, xiii. 5 (W.H. txt) "except ye repent (ἐὰν μὴ μετανοήσητε) ye shall all likewise perish," but W.H. marg., following B, repeats the present subjunctive¹.

[2522] In Luke xiii. 3 it would have made good sense to render "Except ye be beginning to repent," but that would not have suited the Johannine passage well. Nor would it suit what is the only real instance of ἐὰν μὴ with present in the Epistles, Rom. xi. 23 "And they also, except they be persisting (ἐὰν μὴ ἐπιμένωσι) in their unbelief, shall be grafted in²." This agrees with the two passages from the Gospels in expressing or implying a warning. The Gospels express a warning of the evil that will follow unless a certain state of things shall be found existing in the Day of Judgment. The Pauline Epistle implies a warning that there will be no change for the better ("grafting in") if a present state of things is persisted in. The only point peculiar to the Johannine passage is that on the repetition of the warning, the writer throws the consequence of the neglect of that warning into the form of an aorist to express instantaneous consequence "he was [then and there] cast out³."

[2523] Comparing the Johannine ἐὰν μὴ μένητε with the Johannine ἐὰν μείνητε above discussed, we infer that the former means "If ye be not [found] abiding when the crisis comes there follows instantaneous judgment," while the latter means, simply, "If ye abide, there will be blessing," without any reference to impending retribution¹.

(ζ) With ἵνα

[2524] Most Greek writers observe the distinction between the aorist and present subjunctive, as Englishmen observe that between "shall" and "will," unconsciously and without any appearance of deliberately emphasizing the difference. But we have seen above (2511) that John employs the two forms with an unusual deliberateness, even in the same sentence, to distinguish between the beginning of "knowing" and the development of it. A similarly deliberate discrimination is apparent in his references to the beginning and the permanent developments of "believing (πιστεύω)," as to which it should be noted that *in every case D alters the present into the aorist*².

[2525] ἵνα with aorist of πιστεύω: i. 7 (The evangelist, concerning the Baptist) "[John]...came for witness...that all might [or, may] believe...," vi. 30 (The multitude, after the Feeding of the Five Thousand) "What, then, doest thou for a sign, that we may see and believe thee?" ix. 36 (The blind man, after being healed) "And who is he, Lord, that I may believe on him?" xi. 15 (Jesus to the disciples, before the raising of Lazarus) "I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe," xi. 42 (Jesus to the Father, before the raising of Lazarus) "Because of the multitude I said it...that they may believe that thou didst send me," xiv. 27—9 (Jesus, to the disciples, when their heart is troubled) "Let not your heart be troubled...I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe."

¹ [2523, α] The hypothesis that ἐὰν μή with pres. subjunct. means "if one be not found in a certain state when the hour of trial arrives" is favoured by the frequency of this notion of "finding" in N.T., in connexion with a crisis or day of trial, even when not expressed with these conjunctions. Comp. 2 Cor. v. 3 "if at least...we shall be found not naked (εἴ γε...οὐ γυμνοὶ εὐρεθῶμεθα)," ix. 4 ἐὰν...εἰρωσιν ὑμᾶς ἀπαρασκευάστους etc., Rev. ii. 2 εἶδες αὐτοὺς ψευδεῖς, iii. 2 οὐ γὰρ εἰρηκὰ σου ἔργα πεπληρωμένα. This last passage suggests that Jas ii. 14 ἐὰν πλῆστιν λέγει τις ἔχειν ἔργα δὲ μὴ ἔχει may, in the mind of a Jewish writer, suggest the thought of one who, in the midst of his talking about faith, "is found,"—when the Judgment arrives—"having no works to shew." And perhaps this may be also latent in 1 Jn iii. 21 ἐὰν ἡ καρδία μὴ καταγινώσκη, "if our heart be not found condemning us" (although there a special preceding context may influence the meaning of the words).

[2526] ἵνα with present of πιστεύω: vi. 29 (Jesus to the multitude, after the Feeding of the Five Thousand) "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent," xiii. 19 (Jesus to the disciples, on the night before the Passion) "I tell you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I AM," xvii. 21 (Jesus to the Father, in the Last Prayer) "That they also may be in us, that the world may believe that thou didst send me," xix. 35 (The evangelist) "And he knoweth that he saith true, that ye also may believe," xx. 31 (The evangelist) "These [things] are written that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God."

[2527] From a comparison of these passages it appears that on the first occasion when our Lord uses the phrase, the present (vi. 29) is employed; it is "the work of God that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." But the multitude, in their reply, speak of an inferior kind of belief, "believing" not "believing on," and in the aorist (vi. 30), "that we may see and believe thee." Again Jesus, when speaking of what takes place for the sake of the disciples or for the sake of the multitude that their faith may be strengthened (xi. 15, 42, xiv. 29) uses the aorist, but when He speaks similarly to His disciples with the addition of the words "that I AM" (xiii. 19), apparently indicating a higher faith, He uses the present, which is also used in the only instance (xvii. 21) where the phrase occurs in Christ's Last Prayer. Moreover the evangelist himself, though he uses the aorist in mentioning belief as the object of the labours of John the Baptist, resorts to the present when he attests (xix. 35) the mysterious blood and water from Christ's side, and when he closes what appears to have been the first draught of his Gospel (2431—2) with the declaration that it is written "that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God."

[2528] The conclusion is that the author prefers the present subjunctive of πιστεύω to denote a continuous faith—that kind of faith for which the Son of God prays and His evangelists labour. The aorist may of course represent a genuine belief, but it is belief in its entrance or first formation, as when the man born blind says, "And who is he, Lord, that I may [at once] believe on him?" This conclusion may throw light on the disputed reading in the Epistle, "And this is his commandment that we should believe (ἵνα πιστεύσωμεν)

the name of his Son Jesus Christ and love (ἀγαπῶμεν) one another¹." If the aorist is genuine, as it probably is, it seems intended to denote initial faith, the faith that is connected with baptism and with entrance into the Church², and the meaning is, "that we should [first] believe the name³...and [then habitually] love one another."

[2529] The meaning attached by John to the present subjunctive (not only of πιστεύω but of other verbs such as "know," "love," "remember") and the emphasis that he lays on this grammatical distinction, are illustrated by the fact that it occurs (in connexion with ἵνα) in the Discourse and Prayer on the night before the Passion more often than in all the words of Christ up to that time. That is because the Saviour is represented as so frequently expressing His care for the permanent future of the Church—that they "may be doing" as He has done, that they "may be remembering," "may be growing in knowledge," "may be beholding" the glory of the Son with the Father, and, above all, "may be loving one another"⁴."

² [2528 b] Similarly, in the Epistle, the aorist subjunctive is connected with purification, taking away sins, and being called the children of God (1 Jn i. 9, iii. 1, 5), but the present with the duty of loving, keeping commandments and walking therein (1 Jn iii. 11, iv. 21, v. 3, also 2 Jn 5 and 6 (dis)). In 1 Jn ii. 28 ἵνα ἐὰν φανερωθῇ σχῶμεν παρρησίαν κ. μὴ αἰσχυνοθῶμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ, there is reference to a definite moment and to a definite action—"coming forward boldly" as distinct from "shrinking back ashamed": 1 Jn iv. 17 ἵνα παρρησίαν ἔχωμεν ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς κρίσεως implies a state of mind (not a definite action) "that we may be found possessing boldness."

⁴ [2529 a] It may be urged that in xv. 12, 17, the words "that ye may be loving one another" occur as a precept, not as a prayer. But they recur, in effect, as a prayer in xvii. 26 ἵνα ἡ ἀγάπη ἣν ἡγάπησάς με ἐν αὐτοῖς ἧ καὶ γὰρ ἐν αὐτοῖς. The greater part of the requests of Jesus for the disciples are expressed with the phrase ἵνα ᾤσιν which occurs in xvii. 11, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, seven times, perhaps meaning that the Church, becoming one with the I AM, may BE, i.e. may be essentially and eternally existent. Other requests, for them or for the world, are expressed by xvii. 3 γινώσκωσι, 13 ἔχωσιν, 21 πιστεύῃ, 23 γινώσκῃ, 24 θεωρῶσιν. On the other hand the action requested from the Father is expressed by ἵνα with the aorist subjunct. xvii. 15 τηρήσῃς.

(η) ἸΝΑ ΜΗ ΑΠΟΘΗΝΗΣΚΗ (vi. 50, in Codex B)

[2530] In vi. 50 (W.H. txt) "This is the bread that is coming down from heaven that a man may eat thereof and not die (μη ἀποθάνη)," W.H. marg. has ἀποθνήσκη. Codex B is the only ms. that has this reading. But ἀποθάνη is suspiciously easy, ἀποθνήσκη labours under no such suspicion. There is nothing on the surface of the context, and nothing in Greek usage generally, that would cause a scribe to correct the aorist to the present. Moreover, B is almost the sole authority for some of the present subjunctives that are undoubtedly a genuine characteristic of John¹. If B is right, the meaning is "may eat thereof and may not be [any longer] under sentence of death." Later on, Christ quotes a Psalm that contains a similar expression, "I said, Ye are gods and all sons of the Highest: but ye are under sentence of death as [mortal] men (ὕμεις δὲ δὴ ὡς ἄνθρωποι ἀποθνήσκετε)²"—where the meaning might be "destined to death," but the notion of a "sentence" is favoured by Deuteronomy xvii. 6 "He that is under sentence of death (ὁ ἀποθνήσκων) shall be put to death (ἀποθανεῖται) on the evidence of two or three witnesses." A "sentence" seems also implied by Ben Sira, "From a woman is the beginning of sin, and on account of her we are all under sentence of death (ἀποθνήσκομεν)" and perhaps by St Paul, "As in Adam all are under sentence of death (ἀποθνήσκουσι) so in Christ shall all be made alive³." These facts indicate that W.H. were justified in giving to ἀποθνήσκη a place (at least) in their margin: and but little more evidence would be needed to entitle it to a place in the text⁴.

² Comp. x. 34 ἐγὼ εἶπα θεοὶ ἐστέ quoting Ps. lxxxii. 7.

³ [2530 b] Sir. xxv. 24, 1 Cor. xv. 22. 'Αποθνήσκω, in Gk, would often mean, not what we should express in English by "I am on the point of dying," but "I am on the point of being put to death" or "on the point of being executed," as in 1 S. xx. 32 "wherefore should he be put to death (ἵνα τί ἀποθνήσκει)?" and Susann. (Theod.) 43 ἀποθνήσκω μὴ ποιήσασα μηδὲν ὧν οὗτοι ἐπονηρεύσαντο κατ' ἐμοῦ.

[2530 d] In accordance with the use of ἀποθνήσκει above-mentioned, "he is under sentence of death," the phrase might be applied to an apostle on the point of martyrdom (comp. 2 Cor. i. 9 "we have had the answer (marg. sentence)

(θ) With ὅταν

[2531] It is somewhat misleading to say that in N.T. ὅταν with present subjunctive—which is very rare as compared with the aorist —“usually indicates an action of frequent recurrence not limited to any particular time¹.” No doubt, this construction is used sometimes with actions of frequent recurrence, such as “eating,” “praying” etc.: but ὅταν with the present does not lay stress on, or imply, frequency. It refers to coincidence of time (“during the time when this or that is going on,” or “at the moment when this is beginning”). This is seen clearly in cases where the action is not of frequent recurrence, as in Rev. xviii. 9, “they shall weep and mourn...when they are watching (ὅταν βλέπωσιν) the smoke of her burning, standing afar off,” 1 Thess. v. 2—3 “The day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For [in the moment] when they are saying (ὅταν λέγωσιν) ‘Peace and safety,’ then sudden destruction cometh upon them,” 1 Cor. xv. 24 “Then [cometh] the end [the hour of consummation] when he [Christ] is delivering up (ὅταν παραδιδῶ) the kingdom².” This applies to one of the three³ Johannine instances of ὅταν with present subjunctive, vii. 27 (lit.) “The Christ—when he is in the act of coming (ὅταν ἔρχεται)—no one is [to be found, in that crisis] understanding (οὐδεὶς γινώσκει) whence he is coming⁴.”

(ἀπόκριμα) of death in ourselves,” and 1 Cor. iv. 9 “the apostles last, as men appointed to death”). On the other hand οὐκ ἀποθνήσκει might be said of a martyr “not appointed to death,” or of one whose sentence was remitted. Thus the saying about the beloved disciple of whom it was reported among the brethren (Jn xxi. 23) “he is not to die (οὐκ ἀποθνήσκει)” (in apparent antithesis to Peter, who was to be crucified) might be connected in some way with various traditions relating how the disciple was actually subjected to punishment that would have been naturally fatal, and how he was miraculously delivered from it.

[2532] Ὅταν ἄγωνιν ὑμᾶς παραδιδόντες in Mk xiii. 11 is parallel to ὅταν δὲ εἰσφέρουσιν ὑμᾶς in Lk. xii. 11 (where the parallel Mt. x. 19 παραδῶσιν has the aorist) and is better interpreted "In the hour of trial when men are leading you," than "whenever, as may often happen." Elsewhere ὅταν, in connexion with other verbs, may mean "in the moment when" ye are beginning to "pray," "fast" etc., and so in Mt. xv. 2 "They do not wash their hands just when they are beginning to eat (ὅταν ἄρτον ἐσθίωσιν)¹."

Day of the Lord, as to which the prophetic present indicative might naturally be used in the principal verb, and this would favour the sympathetic use of the present subjunctive in subordinate verbs.

[2532 b] In Mk xiv. 25 (Mt. xxvi. 29) "until that day when I am drinking (ὅταν πίνω) it new with you," D reads πίνω in Mt. but not in Mk. It seems to be of the nature of a prophetic present after ὅταν, used in connexion with the Day of the Lord, as in 1 Cor. xv. 24 quoted above. The only possible instance of ὅταν with indicative in Lk. is Lk. xiii. 28 marg. ὅταν ὀψέσθῃ, in connexion with the Day of Judgment.

[2532 c] Lk. xi. 36 εἰ οὖν τὸ σῶμά σου ὅλον φωτινόν, μὴ ἔχον μέρος τι σκοτινόν, ἔσται φωτινόν ὅλον ὡς ὅταν ὁ λύχνος (marg. + ἐν) τῇ ἀστραπῇ φωτίξῃ σε is so difficult that (Burk. vol. ii. p. 295) "the best western mss. (D a b e f f i r) simply substitute Mt. vi. 23^b for Lk. xi. 35—6," and SS has "Thy body also, therefore, what time there is in it no lamp that shineth, cometh darkened; so what time thy lamp cometh bright, it shineth for thee." The difficulty may be removed by recognising (1) that φωτίζω almost always means "begin to light up," "bring to light," "dawn on" (not "shine on" or "steadily enlighten") and that it is especially applied to the light that dawned on Christians in baptism. The present passage warns those who have been (Heb. vi. 4) "once illuminated (φωτισθέντας)" against quenching their light. (2) Ἀστραπή does not mean "the steady light of a lamp" in any alleged Gk passage, and certainly not in Aesch. fragm. 372 λαμπραῖσι ἀστραπαῖσι λαμπάδων σθένει where it is applied to the blazing or flashing torches in the Eleusinian mysteries. In Lk. it is applied to a lamp newly brought into a dark room. (3) In Lk. the context speaks of "kindling (ἄψας)," in Mk of a lamp "coming (ἐρχεται)" into a room; and ἀστραπή refers to the first "flash" of the light on those who are in the dark room. (4) Ὅταν with pres. subjunct. may mean "just at the moment when." Then the sense will be that, if the believer, after receiving the light, keeps it unquenched, he will be "entirely

[2533] Ὅταν θέλητε in Mk xiv. 7 may mean "whenever ye will" i.e. as often as you like. But it would also make good sense to understand the passage as meaning, in effect, "The poor ye have always with you and ye need not wait long to do them kindnesses, ye are able to do them good in the very moment in which ye form the wish to do it: but me ye have not always." In Lk. xi. 21 ὅταν... φυλάσῃ, the meaning is not, "Whenever the strong man guards," but "During the time when the strong man is guarding his court his possessions are in peace," and this is contrasted with the aorist ("but when (ἐπὶ δέ) the stronger man comes and conquers (νικήσῃ) him") which describes a single act¹.

[2534] In the Pauline Epistles, it makes very good sense to suppose that the Apostle meant to say to the Corinthians "[In the very hour] when I am weak (ὅταν γὰρ ἀσθενῶ) then am I strong," and "we rejoice [in the very hour] when we are weak²." So, too, 1 Cor. iii. 4 ὅταν γὰρ λέγῃ τις does not mean "As often as a man says," but "In the very moment of saying," and the meaning is that a man stamps himself as "carnal" in the very moment when he says "I am of Paul" or "I am of Apollos³." In Rom. ii. 14, the light, even as at the moment when the lamp enlightens him with the flash [of its first coming]." W.H. marg. ἐν, the reading of B, is probably correct, being a literal rendering of the Semitic original, as in Job xxxiii. 30 "to be enlightened with the light of the living," A and Theod. τοῦ φωτίσαι αὐτῷ ἐν φωτὶ ζώντων (LXX diff. but ἐν φωτὶ).

[2532 d] Comp. Epict. iii. 17. 1 ὅταν τι τῇ Προνοίᾳ ἐγκαλῆς, ἐπιστράφηται..., i.e., not, "Whenever you accuse," but "When, at any moment, you are in the act of accusing Providence, turn and reflect and you will recognise that things have happened according to Reason."

[2533 b] In Ex. xxi. 7, Lev. v. 15, where the Heb. has "when," LXX has ἐάν (with aorist subjunct.), but Aq. ὅταν. There is sometimes little difference, in a legal enactment, between (lit.) "When a soul shall have sinned" and "if a soul shall have sinned."

² [2534 a] 2 Cor. xii. 10, xiii. 9. It is the simultaneousness, not the frequency, that is insisted on—the perfection of "strength," or the "rejoicing," along with weakness (2 Cor. xii. 9 "made perfect in weakness," i.e. in the midst of physical weakness, not by driving it away).

meaning is "At the moment when (ὅταν) Gentiles...are doing (ποιῶσιν) by force of nature the works of the Law, these though nominally without Law are really Law to themselves." The foregoing remarks include all the non-Johannine instances of ὅταν with present subjunctive in N.T.; and they indicate that (having quite a different meaning from ὡςάκις ἑάν, "as often as," or "whenever¹") it emphasizes, not frequency, but simultaneousness.

[2535] Of the Johannine instances, vii. 27 ὁ δὲ χριστὸς ὅταν ἔρχεται has been explained above (2531) as meaning "[in the Day of Deliverance] when the Christ is in the act of coming." In xvi. 21 ἡ γυνὴ ὅταν τίκῃ...ὅταν δὲ γεννήσῃ, the contrast between the two tenses indicates that the meaning is "[in the critical hour] when she is giving birth to a child she hath sorrow—but when she hath given birth to the child she remembereth no more the sorrow." The only other instance in the Fourth Gospel is viii. 44 ὅταν λαλῇ τὸ ψεῦδος ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων λαλεῖ. This is exactly parallel to the Pauline warning to the Corinthians quoted above (2534) "In the very act of saying so and so, do ye not prove yourselves to be carnal?" So here, the meaning is "in the very act of speaking that which is false he speaketh out of his own (2728)," proving himself a liar. There is one instance in the Epistle, 1 Jn v. 2 "Herein do we understand that we are loving the children of God—[I mean, in the moment] when (ὅταν) we are loving God and [when we] are doing his commandments," where the writer is insisting on the necessary simultaneousness of the fulfilment of the First Commandment and of the Second².

² [2535 a] Bruder gives 17 as the total number of instances of ὅταν in Jn. Of these, 13 are followed by the aorist subjunctive, 3 (as above) by the present. One is (ix. 5) ὅταν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ᾧ. There is only one in the Epistle (as above). The suggestion of a Day of Judgment or hour of crisis, apparently conveyed by ὅταν with pres. subjunct., accords with the similar association of the pres. subjunct., with ἑάν μή (2521—3). In Philo i. 96 Διὸ καὶ Ἀαρὼν ὅταν τελευτᾷ (τούτέστιν ὅταν τελειωθῇ) εἰς Ὡρ, ὃ ἐστὶ φῶς, ἀνέρχεται, if the bracketed words are not a gloss, the meaning may be "when he is in the act of attaining the end through death (that is, has been perfected)."

(i) Middle

(a) Αἰτοῦμαι

[2536] Αἰτοῦμαι in N.T. generally means "ask for myself," "ask a favour," and can almost always be thus rendered in the Synoptists¹. In LXX, the usage varies in different books², and also in different mss.³ On the whole, the active is used colloquially and for ordinary asking of "food," "money" etc.⁴, but the middle in petitions for blessings from God, or for favours from a king, or in elevated style⁵. Variations can generally be explained as in Isaiah, when the prophet says "Ask as a favour for thyself (αἰτησαι σεαυτῷ) a sign," and Ahaz replies "I will surely not ask (οὐ μὴ αἰτήσω)." The prophet emphasizes "as a favour for thyself," the king emphasizes the negative, "I will not ask," i.e. not ask in any way⁶. From meaning "ask a favour," the middle came to mean "ask specially," "ask earnestly," as in Ps. xxvii. 4 "One thing have I earnestly asked (ἤτησάμην) from the Lord," and Prov. xxx. 7 "Two things do I earnestly ask (αἰτοῦμαι) from thee." The Epistle of St James implies that Christians

Mt. xxi. 22 (which somewhat differs) has αἰτήσητε ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ. Αἰτοῦμαι in Acts is often in a bad sense "asking a favour" that ought not to be granted as also in Mk vi. 25 (the asking for the head of John the Baptist). Αἰτοῦμαι does not occur in the Pauline Epistles, exc. Eph. iii. 13, 20, Col. i. 9 (and αἰτέω only in 1 Cor. i. 22).

² [2536 b] Comp. 1 K. iii. 11 ἤτήσω...οὐκ ἤτήσω (3 times)...ἀλλ' ἤτήσω with the parall. 2 Chr. i. 11 οὐκ ἤτήσω (twice)...καὶ ἤτησας σεαυτῷ.

⁴ [2536 d] Ex. iii. 22, xi. 2, xii. 35, xxii. 14, Judg. i. 14 ἀγρόν (but contrast Josh. xv. 18), v. 25 ὕδωρ, viii. 26 ἐνώτια, 2 K. iv. 3 σκεύη etc. So Ps. lxxviii. 18, cv. 40 of asking food, 2 S. xii. 20, Lam. iv. 4 ἄρτον (but, in the elevated style, Wisd. xix. 11 ἤτησαντο ἐδέσματα τρυφῆς).

fulfilled formally the Lord's command "Ask (αἰτεῖτε) and ye shall receive," but that they did not obtain because they did not "ask earnestly" (οὐκ ἔχετε διὰ τὸ μὴ αἰτεῖσθαι ὑμᾶς) or rather they "asked earnestly but wickedly" (κακῶς αἰτεῖσθε)¹. It was natural that distinctions between the middle and the active should be made by Christians in the first century. For, whereas Mark and Matthew contain a precept about "asking earnestly," αἰτοῦμαι, the result being conditional on "believing," Luke omits this precept altogether and merely agrees with Matthew in the unconditional precept "Ask (αἰτεῖτε), and it shall be given to you³."

[2536 (i)] In the Last Discourse and in the Epistle, John, as will appear below⁴, adheres (thrice) to Matthew's and Luke's active,

² [2536 h] Mk xi. 24 πάντα ὅσα προσεύχεσθε καὶ αἰτεῖσθε, πιστεύετε ὅτι ἐλάβετε, καὶ ἔσται ὑμῖν, Mt. xxi. 22 πάντα ὅσα ἂν αἰτήσητε ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ πιστεύοντες λήψετε, after the withering of the fig-tree. Lk. omits both the miracle and this comment.

³ Mt. vii. 7 (in the Sermon on the Mount), Lk. xi. 9 αἰτεῖτε καὶ δοθήσεται ὑμῖν.

⁴ [2536 (i) a] Apart from xi. 22 ὅσα ἂν αἰτήση τὸν θεὸν addressed by Martha to Jesus, and from the Samaritan dialogue (iv. 9—10 παρ' ἐμοῦ πείν αἰτεῖς...σὺ ἂν ἤτησας αὐτόν) the two voices occur as follows in Jn and 1 Jn:

Active	Middle
xiv. 12—14 ὁ πιστεύων...ποιήσει... κ. ὅτι ἂν αἰτήσητε (marg. αἰτήτε) ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου τοῦτο ποιήσω ἵνα δοξασθῇ ὁ πατήρ ἐν τῷ υἱῷ. ἐάν τι αἰτήσητέ [με] ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου 'τοῦτο' (marg. ἐγώ) ποιήσω.	xv. 7 ἐὰν μένῃτε ἐν ἐμοὶ κ. τὰ ῥήματά μου ἐν ὑμῖν μένῃ, ὁ ἐὰν θέλῃτε αἰτήσασθε κ. γενήσεται ὑμῖν.
xv. 16 κ. ἔθῃκα ὑμᾶς ἵνα...κ. ὁ καρπὸς ὑμῶν μένῃ, ἵνα ὅτι ἂν αἰτήσητε (marg. αἰτήτε) τὸν πατέρα ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου δῶ ὑμῖν.

"ask," when he connects "asking" with "receiving" or with "having." But whenever (five times) Christ is represented as using the active, "in my name" is added in the context, thus excluding selfish or arbitrary asking. When John for the first time uses the middle, he seems, for the moment, to countenance the most reckless asking of favours—"ask for yourselves whatsoever ye will" (ὁ ἐὰν θέλητε αἰτήσασθε): but this is preceded by "if ye abide in me and my words abide in you." And how can the words of the disciples ask recklessly or selfishly "if" Christ's own "words" abide in their hearts and on their lips? This is John's way of saying "If ye steadfastly believe." Only it is not subjective ("believe") but objective: "If ye stand fast in me and I stand fast in you." As regards this "asking of favours" or "asking what ye will," he does not say "ye shall receive," but "it shall be done for you," resembling Mark's tradition (2536 h) as distinct from Matthew's. In the Epistle, this "asking of favours" is to be "according to the will of God," and the result is, not, "it shall be done," but "He heareth us."

(β) Ἀποκρίνασθαι

[2537] Ἀποκρίνομαι is twice used by John in the first aorist middle (instead of the much more frequent aorist passive) in the passage that describes the first attempt of the Jews to "persecute"

xvi. 23—4 ἄν τι αἰτήσητε τὸν πατέρα δώσει ὑμῖν ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου· ἕως ἄρτι οὐκ ἠτήσατε οὐδὲν ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου· αἰτεῖτε καὶ λήψεσθε.

[2536 (i) δ] 1 Jn iii. 21—22 ἐὰν ἡ καρδιά μὴ καταγινώσκῃ παρρησίαν ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν θεόν, κ. δ' ἂν αἰτῶμεν λαμβάνομεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ.

1 Jn v. 15 (b) [after οἶδαμεν ὅτι] ἔχομεν τὰ αἰτήματα ἃ ἠτήκαμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ.

1 Jn v. 16 ἐὰν τις ἴδῃ...αἰτήσῃ, κ. δώσει αὐτῷ ζωήν.

[2536 (i) c] In xi. 22 ὅσα ἂν αἰτήσῃ τὸν θεὸν δώσει σοι ὁ θεός, Martha is probably described as applying to Christ, from her own point of view, a word never applied to Him by the evangelist; and the middle "ask for thyself," or "ask earnestly," or "ask as a favour," emphasizes her error. Similarly (1728 p) she uses the word φιλέω to describe Christ's love of Lazarus, whereas John uses ἀγαπάω. Whenever Jn connects "ask" and "give" elsewhere in his own language or in that of Christ, he uses the active, iv. 10, xv. 16, xvi. 23, 1 Jn v. 16, and this accords with the Matthew-Luke Tradition (Mt. vii. 7, Lk. xi. 9).

xvi. 26 ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου αἰτήσεσθε, καὶ οὐ λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι ἐγὼ ἐρωτήσω τὸν πατέρα περὶ ὑμῶν· αὐτὸς γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ φιλεῖ ὑμᾶς ὅτι...

1 Jn v. 14 κ. αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ παρρησία ἣν ἔχομεν πρὸς αὐτόν, ὅτι ἐὰν τι αἰτῶμεθα κατὰ τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ ἀκούει ἡμῶν.

1 Jn v. 15 (a) κ. ἐὰν οἶδαμεν ὅτι ἀκούει ἡμῶν ὁ ἐὰν αἰτῶμεθα, οἶδαμεν ὅτι...

(v. 16 διὰ τοῦτο ἐδίωκον) Jesus. It was for an act of healing on the Sabbath. Jesus (v. 17) "made answer (ἀπεκρίνατο) to them...." It is then said, "On this account therefore did the Jews seek rather to kill him," and again (v. 19) "Jesus therefore made answer (ἀπεκρίνατο)." Ἀπεκρίθη occurs in John more than 50 times, but ἀπεκρίνατο only here. It must be rendered according to its frequent use in Greek, "made answer to the charge," "made his defence." Ὁ διώκων, as a legal term, regularly means "the pursuer," in the Scotch sense, i.e. the prosecutor; and the verb often means "prosecute." No doubt, John means "persecute" here; yet he means persecuting with charges of blasphemy implying threats of "prosecution," so that "made his defence" is particularly appropriate to the context, where a charge is being brought against Jesus for the first time in this Gospel. Ἀπεκρίνατο is used only once in the Acts (iii. 12), and there it introduces a speech of Peter "to all the people," not directly of the nature of a defence, but rather an attack upon the Jews for killing Christ. Yet indirectly it is of the nature of a defence or apologia. In Mark and Matthew it is used only negatively, describing the refusal of Christ to "make a formal defence" on the day of His trial. Luke has a parallel use of it in somewhat similar circumstances¹. But Luke also uses the aorist middle once more concerning the public answer given by John the Baptist "to all [men]²."

¹ [2537 a] Mk xiv. 61 οὐκ ἀπεκρίνατο οὐδέν (of the silence before the Sanhedrin) (Mt.-Lk. diff.); Mt. xxvii. 12 οὐδὲν ἀπεκρίνατο (of the silence before Pilate) (Mk.-Lk. different); Lk. xxiii. 9 (of the silence before Herod). These facts must be contrasted with the frequency of the aorist passive form ἀποκριθεῖς in all the Synoptists.

² [2537 c] Lk. iii. 10 ἀπεκρίνατο λέγων πᾶσιν. In the account of the trial, Jn does not use ἀπεκρίνατο. But he represents Jesus as freely conversing (ἀπεκρίθη etc.) with Pilate up to the moment when Pilate asked Him "Whence art thou?" Then [2537 (i)] Under this head it is convenient to consider the middle or intransitive sense of the active form καθίζω in xix. 13 ὁ οὖν Πειλᾶτος...ἤγαγεν ἔξω τὸν Ἰησοῦν, καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐπὶ βήματος, concerning which it has been suggested in modern times that the verb may be transitive, as in 1 Cor. vi. 4 τούτους καθίζετε, Eph. i. 20 (W.H.) ἐγείρας αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν καὶ καθίσας ἐν δεξιᾷ αὐτοῦ. Add Hermas Vis. iii. 2. 4 ἐγείρει με καὶ καθίζει, “makes me sit on the bench to the left,” followed by “and she herself, too, sat (ἐκαθέζετο) on the right.” But in all these the transitive meaning of the verb is made clear by the context (although in Eph. i. 20 some scribes make it clearer by adding αὐτόν). In xix. 13, αὐτόν might certainly be supplied after ἐκάθισεν¹ if the sense demanded it; but the transitive use of καθίζω would be unique in John²; and the phrase καθίσας ἐπὶ τοῦ βήματος, which occurs thrice in the Acts about a judge “taking his seat on the tribunal³,” would here be employed to describe the judge as causing the accused to sit on the tribunal! It is needless to dwell on the antecedent improbability that a Roman Governor—even such a one as Pilate—would place an alleged criminal upon the Governor’s own seat. No ancient authority is alleged for the interpretation “caused to sit.” The Acta Pilati (A and B) takes the word intransitively; so do the Latin translators, the Syriac, and Nonnus; and Chryit is said (xix. 9) “Jesus gave him no answer (ἀπόκρισιν)” —a word meaning an answer to a definite question or questions (as in i. 22). It is clear that there were different traditions about Christ’s “not making answer” at the trial. By avoiding the traditional phrase οὐκ ἀπεκρίνατο, Jn avoids committing himself to, or against, any one of the three Synoptic accounts.

[2537 d] Some mss. and versions read ἀπεκρίνατο in xii. 23 (W.H.) ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἀποκρίνεται αὐτοῖς λέγων, preceding the solemn words, “The hour hath come that the Son of man should be glorified.” It is the occasion of the arrival of the Greeks and an oracular solemnity is appropriate to the verb of speech. This might be suggested by the unusual present middle, though not so clearly as by the aorist middle. The present is probably the correct reading. Ἀποκρίνεται (pres.) is also used to introduce Christ’s indication (xiii. 26) of Judas Iscariot as the traitor, and (xiii. 38) His prediction of Peter’s denial.

Conversely in xi. 44 λύσατε αὐτόν κ. ἄφετε αὐτόν ὑπάγειν, some auth. om. 2nd. αὐτόν.

² [2537 (i) b] Apart from the spurious viii. 2 καθίσας, Jn has xii. 14 ἐκάθισεν, on which see 2537 (ii). He also has (4) καθῆσθαι and (3) καθέζεσθαι.

sostom expressly says that "καθίσαι makes it clear" that Pilate professed an intention to "investigate the matter" as a judge¹.

[2537 (ii)] The suggestion of a transitive meaning in xix. 13 would not have been worth discussing except for its possible bearing on Mk xi. 7 ἐκάθισεν (D καθίζει, d sedebat), Mt. xxi. 7 ἐπεκάθισεν (D εκαθητο), Lk. xix. 35 ἐπεβίβασαν. Here Lk. has a transitive meaning, but John not only supports Mt.-Mk in xii. 14 εὐρὼν δὲ ὁ Ἰ. ὄνᾱριον ἐκάθισεν ἐπ' αὐτό, but also alters the prophecy of Zech. ix. 9 "riding on an ass," LXX ἐπιβεβηκώς, to (xii. 15) "seated (καθήμενος)" which accords more exactly with ἐκάθισεν. There was nothing arbitrary in John's action, for the Hebrew word meaning "ride" in Zechariah is also rendered "sit" three or four times in LXX, and indeed the Syriac—in which the Hebrew word exists and is used in the Syriac version of Mk-Mt. here—is rendered by Mr Burkitt "ride" in Mk xi. 7, Mt. xxi. 7. There can be little doubt that John, in the Entry into Jerusalem, is writing with allusion to two traditions, possibly arising from variations of ἐκάθισαν (trans.) and ἐκάθισεν (intr.): and, while Lk. adopted the former, "made to sit," John supported Mk and Mt. in adopting the latter, "sat." Perhaps some tradition followed by Lk. made the same mistake as the LXX made in 2 K. xi. 19 "and he sat," LXX καὶ ἐκάθισαν αὐτόν, A ἐκάθισεν. The spurious Gospel of Peter and Justin Martyr have wild traditions telling how the Jews place Christ on a tribunal or place of judgment². Perhaps Nicod. merely "tunc jussit Pilatus velum solvi"). The Lat. vss have "sed," SS is missing, but Walton gives all versions (including Syriac) as having "sed," or "insedit." Nonnus has ἀρτιδόμῳ δ' ἐκάθητο λιθοστρώτῳ παρὰ χώρῳ, Chrys. ἐξέρχεται μὲν ὡς ἐξετάζων τὸ πρᾶγμα (τὸ γὰρ καθίσαι τοῦτο ἐδήλου). οὐδεμίαν δὲ ποιησάμενος ἐξέτασιν παραδίδωσιν αὐτὸν νομίζων δυσωπήσειν αὐτούς.

² [2537 (ii) a] Justin Martyr, after quoting from Is. lviii. 2 (LXX) "They ask me now for judgment," adds (Apol. 35) "For indeed, as the prophet said, dragging Him along they made Him sit upon a seat of judgment (διασύροντες αὐτὸν ἐκάθισαν ἐπὶ βήματος) and said Judge for us." The Gospel of Peter has (§ 3) "Let us (?) drag (ευρωμεν corrected into σύρωμεν) the Son of God...and they made Him sit on a chair of judgment (ἐκάθισαν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ καθέδραν κρίσεως), saying Judge justly, O king of Israel."

[2537 (ii) b] At the same time Jn may also be correcting (1745) a misunderstanding arising from Mt. xxvii. 19 καθημένου δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ βήματος. According to Jn, the βῆμα was not "the tribunal" but "a tribunal," set up specially in Gabbatha (comp. Joseph. Bell. ii. 14. 8) outside the Praetorium. If the sentence was to be pronounced publicly, it could not be done from "the tribunal" inside the Praetorium, as the Jews (xviii. 28) would not enter it.

some of these were already in the air at the time of the publication of the Fourth Gospel, and the author may have desired, while tacitly refuting them, to use the very phrase that originated them—thus destroying the error by explaining it.

(ii) Passive

(a) Ἐκρύβη

[2538] In viii. 59 "They therefore took up stones to cast at him, but Jesus was hidden and went out of the temple," xii. 36 "As ye have the light believe in the light that ye may become sons of light. These things spake Jesus and went away and was hidden from them," the second aorist passive ἐκρύβη is twice rendered as a middle in R.V. txt and A.V., but as a passive in R.V. marg. In favour of "hid himself" may be alleged the usage of LXX. But in LXX ἐκρύβη means "hide oneself in fear," "crouch," "cower," like Adam and Eve in Paradise¹. Such usage appears inapplicable here.

[2539] In N.T. the 2nd aorist passive of κρύπτω is applied to persons in Heb. xi. 23 "Moses was hidden three months," and to things in Mt. v. 14 "a city on a hill cannot be hid (κρυβῆναι)," Lk. xix. 42 "but now are they hid (ἐκρύβη) from thine eyes," 1 Tim. v. 25 "cannot be hid (κρυβῆναι)." Almost all the instances of middle meaning alleged by L. S. may be explained passively, or else they do not affect the usage of the 2nd aorist².

[2540] On the side of the middle interpretation, however, we must place Chrysostom, who, though he does not quote ἐκρύβη in the first passage, says "Then He flees back again after the manner of man and (?) hides Himself (κρύπτεται)¹,” where the parallel “flees” makes it probable that he uses κρύπτεται as a middle. Theodorus expressly explains ἐκρύβη thus, “How ἐκρύβη? Not by coiling himself up in a corner of the Temple in a cupboard...nor yet by twisting round behind a wall or pillar, but making Himself invisible by divine authority (ἐξουσία θεϊκῇ) to those that were plotting against Him².” In the second passage, Chrysostom twice quotes ἐκρύβη and twice explains it as κρύπτεται. Possibly vernacular Greek usage, as well as that of LXX, may have caused Chrysostom to prefer a form less associated with “slinking away³”: but in any case both these interpreters take ἐκρύβη as middle.

² [2539 a] Κεκρύφεται Hes. Op. 384 of stars, means "they remain hidden," as Steph. "absconditae sunt, Ionice pro κεκρυμμέναι εἰσι." Eurip. Hel. 606 οὐρανῷ δὲ κρύπτεται is much more probably passive as is shewn by the context, ἀρθεῖς ἀφαντος, οὐρανῷ δὲ κρύπτεται "lifted out of sight and hid in heaven [by the will of Zeus]": Cycl. 615 κρύπτεται ἐς σποδιὰν δρυὸς ἀσπετον ἔρνος, however punctuated, almost certainly means that the stake is "being hidden" in the embers. The only remaining instance is an imperfect middle Babr. 5. 4 ἐκρύπτετ' οἴκου γωνίην, rendered by L.S. "ran to hide himself in a corner."

[2541] Some light may be shed on these two passages by another in which Jesus is described as retiring: v. 13 “For Jesus conveyed himself away (ἐξένευσεν, ND ἐνευσεν), a multitude being in the place.” Here Chrysostom, in quoting, substitutes ἐξέκλινεν, and explains it as ἐκρυψεν ἑαυτόν and ἀναχωρήσας. Now ἐκνεύω is thrice substituted by A for LXX ἐκκλίνω in Judges iv. 18. And (2538 a) the LXX has been shewn to use ἀποστρέφω for κρύπτω concerning the “hiding” of God’s “face.” Thus it appears that “hiding” and “turning aside” are expressions that might be interchanged in this sense. And, practically, this passage (v. 13) describes a “hiding,” or “retiring,” as Chrysostom calls it.

[2542] In viii. 59 several mss. add that Jesus “passed through the midst of them (διελθὼν διὰ μέσου αὐτῶν)” and that He “passed away just as he was (παρήγεν οὕτως).” The first of these clauses is identical with one in Lk. iv. 30 describing Christ’s “passing through” the multitude of Nazareth, when they were attempting to cast Him down a precipice. That escape is generally regarded as miraculous, and the addition of such a clause in Jn viii. 59 indicates that the scribes adding it regarded Christ's escape from stoning as miraculous. If so, they must have taken ἐκρύβη as "miraculously concealed himself" or "was miraculously concealed." In any case, this scribal addition indicates a desire to explain the meaning of ἐκρύβη.

² [2540 b] Cramer ad loc. Origen (on Lk. Hom. 19, Lomm. v. 156) “...sed quomodo in Joannis evangelio scriptum est quoniam insidiabantur ei Judaei et elapsus est de medio eorum et non apparuit,” where the context indicates that he regarded the event as supernatural.

³ [2540 c] Phrynichus warns people against spelling κρύβεται with a β, and Hesychius gives κρυβόμενος and ὑποπίπτων “cringing,” as paraphrases of πτήσσων, “cowering down.”

[2543] Summing up the evidence, we find the usage of LXX and three Greek commentators favouring the middle "hid himself," but the usage of N.T. favouring the passive, "was hidden." The latter ought to count for more than the former¹. And the passive is also favoured by the context in the last of the three Johannine passages; for it says that the Jews "did not believe" because God had (xii. 40) "blinded their eyes." But some explanation is needed of the motives that induced John to use so ambiguous a phrase. We know from Origen's treatise against Celsus that charges of cowardice were brought by unbelievers against our Lord's character: and if some of these were based on variously expressed traditions that He on certain occasions "hid himself," one way of meeting these charges would be to report the tradition in such a way as to shew how it might be misunderstood. Luke had described Christ as "passing through" the Nazarenes, but had not explained how this was effected². John suggests that it was literal and miraculous, but also that it was typical of a spiritual blinding whereby Christ "was hidden" from those who rejected Him³.

² [2543 b] Cyril (Cramer, on Lk. iv. 29—30) says of the Nazarenes "Fie on their folly!...they have eyes and do not see...and then goes on to say, 'He passed through the midst of them.'" He does not state that they were literally "blinded," or that Jesus was thus miraculously "hidden" from the Nazarenes. But the juxtaposition of the two traditions shews how the former might originate the latter.

³ [2543 c] If Chrysostom is right in calling Christ's "conveying himself away" (from the pool of Bethzatha) an act of "hiding," then there are three such acts in John, each followed by an expression of unbelief or hostility on the part of the Jews, or by some evangelistic statement about unbelief (1) "He conveyed himself away," (2) "He was hidden and went out of the Temple," (3) "He went away and was hidden from them." The last seems intended as a climax, implying the final departure of the Light so that it was "hidden from" the Jews.

BOOK II

ARRANGEMENT, VARIATION, AND REPETITION OF WORDS

CHAPTER I

ARRANGEMENT AND VARIATION

§ 1. Variation in repetition or quotation

[2544] It has been shewn in Johannine Vocabulary that John uses words with extraordinary discrimination and with subtle shades of meaning. The First Book of Johannine Grammar has shewn that the same subtle discrimination pervades his use of grammatical forms and constructions. We have now to consider whether the same characteristics may be traced in his arrangement and variation of words and expressions. Finally we must consider his habit of repetition—a subject that would find no place in a Shakespearian or Euripidean Grammar, but one that will claim a good deal of comment in the following pages. As regards arrangement, John will sometimes be found to combine with parallelism what is commonly called Chiasmus, i.e. an order in which the extremes and means of a sentence are alike¹: and this is so frequent that it will receive a separate section. But the first place must be given to Johannine variation—that is, the habit of repeating the same thing (or representing his various characters as repeating the same thing) in slightly dissimilar words and with slight dissimilarities of order.

[2545] In the list of variations given below, the reader's particular attention is called to the passages, marked †, where an utterance of our Lord is repeated after "I said," "He said" etc. but not with exact accuracy. It is impossible to believe that the evangelist misquoted Jesus or represented Him as misquoting Himself. Our conclusion must therefore be that he wished to compel his readers to perceive that they have not before them Christ's exact words, and that they must think of their spirit rather than of the letter. On at least one occasion Christ is represented as appealing to words that had been previously uttered by Him, but have not been recorded in this Gospel, xi. 40 "Said I not unto thee that, if thou believedst, thou shouldst see the glory of God?" This cannot be identified with any previous utterance of Christ's to Martha¹. On other occasions (e.g. vi. 26—36, and 44—65), the reference is doubtful. Even where Christ is certainly repeating His own words they are never repeated exactly except once (2190 a). In that single instance, Jesus says to His disciples xiii. 33 "Even as I said to the Jews, 'Where I go ye cannot come,' so to you also I say it for the present." He had uttered these exact words (viii. 21) to the Jews. But is it not clear that they are now uttered to the disciples in a meaning made widely different by different circumstances? Probably it is something more than a coincidence that this is the only saying of Jesus quoted by Jesus Himself ("I said"), with exact accuracy². It seems as though the writer wished to bring home to us the truth of Christ's warning, "The spirit it is that giveth life; the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I have spoken to you are [truly] spirit and are [truly] life³."

² [2545 b] This is all the more extraordinary because the Jews on at least two occasions (vii. 36, viii. 22) quote the words of Jesus at some length and with exact accuracy (2190 a).

³ [2545 c] vi. 63. Comp. Orig. Huet ii. 405 D εἶπερ δὲ ἃ ἐλάλει ῥήματα ὁ Ἰησοῦς πνεῦμά ἐστι καὶ οὐ γράμμα, where as elsewhere he indicates that it is

The "letter" of words may be described as their "flesh," and the spirit of the words of Christ passes away from us unless we are one with the Person that uttered them, placing ourselves, as far as we can, in His circumstances and receiving from Him His thoughts.

¹ [2549 a] The txt is doubtful. Origen omits ὑμεῖς δὲ...ὑπάγω. So do (Alf.) Cyr., Aug., and several mss. Alf. explains the om. by homoeotel.—a hypothesis well illustrated by N where γ, in the first and in the second γΜΕΙΣ, twice ends a line so that the eye might glance from the first γ to the second ΜΕΙΣ. This however would not explain Chrys. ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ οἶδατε, which omits only πόθεν ἐ. ἡ π. ὕ. SS has “ye know not neither from whence...nor whither...,” which would be excellent Gk: α, β, ε have “et,” f has “aut.” On the whole, W.H. is probably correct, and the omission and variations have proceeded from two causes, 1st, very early omission through homoeotel., 2nd, a tendency to regard ἡ as corrupt (the η in D is of an unusual shape and d has “et”). If the text is correct, why does Jn use οὐ...ἡ instead of his usual οὐ...οὐδέ (i. 13, 25, vi. 24, xi. 50, xiii. 16, xiv. 17, xvi. 3)? “H is intelligible after negation in iv. 27 “No one however said ‘What seekest thou?’ or ‘Why speakest thou with her?’”—where οὐδέ would have differentiated the two clauses too strongly. Is ἡ used here for the same reason? That Jn could have used οὐ...καὶ in a quotation is shewn by Gal. iii. 28 οὐκ ἔνι Ἰουδαῖος οὐδέ Ἕλληνα, οὐκ ἔνι δοῦλος οὐδέ ἐλεύθερος, οὐκ ἔνι ἄρσεν καὶ θῆλυ (where α. κ. θῆλυ is a phrase from Gen. i. 27). Perhaps ὑμεῖς...ὑπάγω means “ye know not whence I come or [which is the same thing] whither I go,” suggesting that Christ is really speaking of one and the same region—“the bosom of the Father (2759 a—f).” “H, “or,” is very much rarer in Jn than in any Synoptist.

⁶ [2552 a] vi. 38, 42. But perhaps we ought to take vi. 41—2, the whole saying of the Jews, together, "The Jews...murmured because he said, I am the except he that is from God, *this [man] hath seen the Father*¹"; "and on the sabbath ye circumcise a man: if circumcision is received by (λαμβάνει) *a man on the sabbath*²"; "Can it be that from Galilee the Christ cometh?...Did not the Scripture say that from...*cometh the Christ*³?" "in your sin ye shall die...I said therefore [that] *Ye shall die in your sins*⁴"; "my life I lay down for the sheep...because *I lay down my life*⁵"; "I thank thee that thou heardest me, but I (emph.) knew that at all times *me thou hearest*⁶"; "he will give him life eternal, and this is *the eternal life*⁷"; "*they are not from the world...from the world they are not*⁸"; "*follow me...do thou me follow*⁹."

[2553] It is very natural that what has been last said should sometimes be uppermost in our minds and foremost on our lips when we repeat the substance of a saying. In Greek this alteration of order is far more often possible than in idiomatic English, as the last paragraph shews; but where the Greek order can be followed in English, something is gained in the appreciation of emphasis. Still more is gained by realising that Johannine variations, where they are not deliberately introduced to serve some mystical purpose, spring from the instinct of a dramatist in sympathy with life and living speech. Wherever a word is placed out of its usual order, or out of the order in which it has previously occurred, then—unless a change bread that came down from the heaven, and they kept saying.... How now saith he From the heaven I have come down," so that the Jews repeat the phrase at first in Christ's order "come down from the heaven" and then reverse the order, "from the heaven come down." Subsequently Christ takes up the words as the Jews have left them, placing "from the heaven" first, and emphasizing it as indicating the source of the living bread (vi. 50, 51, 58).

[2553 β] In viii. 47 ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ οὐκ ἐστé, both the beginning and the end (but especially the end) are emphatic (“From God ye are essentially not”) as compared with the ordinary and unemphatic order in x. 26 “ye are not from my sheep.” In ii. 13 καὶ ἀνέβη εἰς Ἱερ. ὁ Ἰησοῦς the order is to be contrasted with that in v. 1 καὶ ἀνέβη Ἰησοῦς εἰς Ἱερ. and in vii. 14 ἥδη δέ... ἀνέβη Ἰ. εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν κ. ἐδίδασκεν. In ii. 13, the position of Ἰησοῦς at the end of the sentence, as well as its separation from ἀνέβη, and a previous mention of (ii. 12) “his mother and brethren,” seem intended to emphasize “Jesus,” as going up to Jerusalem, apart from His family, no longer as a common pilgrim, but by Himself, for the first time, in His character of Saviour (Jesus). This emphasis would be out of place in v. 1, vii. 14.

[2553 γ] Ταῦτα τὰ ῥήματα etc., at the beginning of a sentence, in viii. 20, x. 21, means “these words just mentioned” (comp. x. 6, 18, xi. 4, xix. 20). If it is desired to emphasize “these,” “this” etc. in contrast with something else, it is usual to write τὰ ῥήματα ταῦτα. Consequently, in N.T., “this [present] age” is always ὁ αἰὼν οὗτος—except where Mt. xii. 32 inserts the antithetical clause οὐτε ἐν τούτῳ τῷ αἰῶνι οὐτε ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι (but several authorities correct the unusual phrase). So “this [present] world” in N.T. is always ὁ κόσμος οὗτος except in Jn viii. 23 ὑμεῖς ἐκ τούτου τοῦ κόσμου ἐστέ, ἐγὼ οὐκ εἰμι ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου τούτου. Here again so many authorities have substituted the usual ἐκ τ. κόσμ. τούτ. that Tisch. has adopted it; but the evangelist may use the unemphatic form in the first clause in order to prepare for the emphatic form in the second. In the Samaritan Dialogue, the influence of such phrases as ὁ αἰὼν οὗτος and ὁ κόσμος οὗτος is apparent in iv. 13 πᾶς ὁ πίνων ἐκ τ. ὕδατος τούτου, which means literally the water of this well, but suggests spiritually “the water of this world.” The woman replies, without any sense of emphasis, δός μοι τοῦτο τὸ ὕδωρ “give me this water [you speak of].” The emphatic form comes naturally from the Jews at the end of the sentence in vi. 34 πάντοτε δὸς ἡμῖν τ. ἄρτον τούτον. Christ uses the unemphatic form in the middle of sentences in vi. 51, 58, but there antithesis is implied in the context so that the emphatic form is not necessary.

[2553 δ] What is the difference between the participial clause in vi. 14

ὁ προφήτης ὁ ἐρχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον and in xi. 27 ὁ χρ. ὁ υἱὸς τ. θεοῦ ὁ εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἐρχόμενος? In the former, the multitude emphasize the popular phrase about the Deliverer (1632 foll.) "He that is to come," and subordinate "the world"; but Martha, having already used the phrases "Christ" and "Son of God," now subordinates the "coming" to the thought of "the world," which the Son is to deliver. In xviii. 38 ἐγὼ οὐδεμίαν εὐρίσκω ἐν αὐτῷ αἰτίαν, xix. 4 οὐδεμίαν αἰτ. εὐρ. ἐν αὐτῷ, xix. 6 ἐγὼ γὰρ οὐχ εὐρ. ἐν αὐτῷ αἰτίαν, Pilate begins and ends by emphasizing his own personal opinion instead of merging it in the official decision of a judge: (1) "I for my part find nothing whatever in him of guilt [but still instead of acquitting him I ask you whether you would like me to release him as a favour to you]"; (2) "I bring him forth to you outside the palace that ye may recognise that I find nothing whatever of guilt in him" followed by an appeal to pity or contempt, "Behold, the man!"; (3) "Take him yourselves and crucify him, for I for my part do not find in him guilt." On the third occasion, the phrase "not...guilt" is a little weaker than "no guilt whatever" (οὐδεμίαν αἰτίαν) on the first and second, the emphasis being reserved for the earlier part of the sentence, which is, in effect, "Kill him, for I, the judge, pronounce him guiltless."

[2553 ε] In discussing (1949) vi. 58, οὐ καθὼς ἔφαγον οἱ πατέρες no mention was made of the fact that SS, D, and other authorities, add ὑμῶν, and some add τὸ μάννα. These additions would be naturally suggested (1) by vi. 49, οἱ πατέρες ὑμῶν ἔφαγον...τὸ μάννα, (2) by the fact that οἱ πατέρες in N.T. almost always means the Patriarchs, represented by Abraham, as being receivers of the promises on the basis of which they became fathers of the Chosen People. Fritzsche, on Rom. ix. 5 αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι...οἱ πατέρες, censures Theodoret for supposing that οἱ πατέρες includes those who received promises "through the prophets." Heb. i. 1, however, appears exceptionally to use it thus, when contrasting τοῖς πατράσιν and ἡμῖν. But Jn vi. 58—where there is no such contrast—"the fathers ate...and died," if applied to the rebellious fathers of Israel in the wilderness, is unique in its application. It has been suggested above (1949) that what Christ taught to Jews in the second person John is summarising for Greeks in the third person. In the former shape, it was: "Your fathers ate in the wilderness the manna and died." In the latter it is, "The fathers ate and died." By omitting "the manna," and "in the wilderness," John perhaps suggests an application that extends beyond the period of forty years: "From the time of Abraham onwards the fathers of Israel ate [of 'every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God'] and yet died."

[2553 f] Origen, discussing God's revelations to man before the Incarnation, repeatedly protests against the view that the Apostles were superior in knowledge to "the Fathers and the Prophets." In "the Fathers" he appears to give the most prominent place to Abraham, then (Huet ii. 96 D) he mentions Moses and Joshua, before passing to Isaiah and Ezekiel. Afterwards he says (ib. 98 C) "Consequently, not even the Apostles are to be deemed wiser than the Fathers, or Moses, and the Prophets." He complains that "many" vainly imagine that "the Apostles are wiser than the Fathers and the Prophets" and says that "they cancel the gift bestowed on the Fathers and the Prophets by God through Christ (through whom all things were made)." These expressions suggest that Origen—whom I have not been able to find quoting Heb. i. 1 "spake to the Fathers in the Prophets"—would have preferred to say that "God spake in times past in the Fathers and the Prophets."

[2554] Many of the instances in 2546—51 are of the nature of chiasmus (2544 a). This is a natural arrangement when the writer wishes to combine parallelism with climax, or with the argument a fortiori. For the change of order in the second clause (sometimes taking the reader by surprise) emphasizes both the terms in that clause: “If the things of earth I said unto you and ye believe not, how [is it possible that] if I say unto you the things of heaven, ye will believe¹?”; “Ye do not receive me...him ye will receive²”; “Thou art disciple to him, but we to Moses are disciples³.” In viii. 13—14, the two halves of an accusation correspond to the two halves of the reply, in chiasmus, thus, (1) “Thou about thyself testifiest” to “Even if I testify about myself,” and (2) “Thy testimony is not true” to “True is my testimony.” In “Thou lovedst them, even as me thou lovedst,” emphasis is laid upon the infinity of the Father’s love⁴. So,

[2554 b] In xi. 29—31 ἡγέρθη ταχύ καὶ ἦρχετο πρὸς αὐτόν...ιδόντες τὴν Μαριάμ ὅτι ταχέως ἀνέστη καὶ ἐξῆλθεν, the adverb ταχέως—by the repetition of “quickly” in a different form (“[thus] quickly [as I have said]”)—seems intended to draw attention to the manner and haste of Mary’s “arising.” But ταχύ, by its position between ἡγέρθη and ἦρχετο (so that the reader has no time to dwell on the adverb) is subordinated to its verb ἡγέρθη, which is something more than “rising up” and suggests “roused from torpor,” “awakened from the lethargy of sorrow.” There is no emphasis on ταχύ, for the emphasis is on the “starting up...and going to him [i.e. Jesus].” Similarly, in LXX, emphasis is laid, not on the “quickness” but on the “falling away” of Israel in Ex. xxxii. 8, Deut. ix. 12, 16 (A), Judg. ii. 17, with ταχύ after various verbs. But the rapidity of the falling away of the fickle Galatians is emphasized by ταχέως before the verb in Gal. i. 6 θαυμάζω ὅτι οὕτως ταχέως μετατίθεσθε. The Jews know nothing of the coming of the Teacher, or of the consequent “rousing” of Mary. All they perceive is the haste with which she “arose and went out.” In N.T., as in LXX, some writers use ταχύ not ταχέως, others ταχέως not ταχύ. It is characteristic of Jn that he uses both with slightly different shades of meaning. For these and other reasons, the conclusion of Blass about ταχέως in xi. 31 (p. 308 “certainly an interpolation”) appears to me erroneous.

[2554 c] The Egyptian Papyri have Oxyr. 743 (B.C. 2) καλῶς δὲ γέγονεν τὸ ταχύ αὐτὸν ἐλθεῖν (no great emphasis), 531 (2nd cent.) εἰς τὸν γὰρ θεοὶ θέλωσι τάχιον πρὸς σὲ ἢ μετὰ τὸν Μεχείρ μήνα ἐπεὶ ἐν χειρὶν ἔχω ἐπέξιμα ἔργα, i.e. [“I cannot come at once but] I will come sooner [than might be expected under the circumstances] at the conclusion of Christ's last prayer (xvii. 21—3) when He turns for a while from praying for the disciples to pray for the world, the words may be paraphrased, "in order that the world may grow in belief (ἵνα ὁ κόσμος πιστεύῃ)...in order that knowledge may dawn on the world (ἵνα γινώσκῃ ὁ κόσμος)" so as to indicate that, for the moment, "the world" stands prominent in the thoughts of the Saviour.

after Mecheir is over," Fayum 126 ἀνελθε οὖν ταχέως ὅτι ἐπίγει (sic), where the words "for it is pressing" indicate that ταχέως is emphatic.

[2554 d] On Heb. xiii. 23 ἐὰν τάχειον ἐρῇται, Westcott says, "The comparative suggests the occurrence of hindrances which the apostle could not distinctly foresee. Compare v. 19"—apparently rendering τάχειον in both verses "more quickly [than might be expected in view of the obstacles]." Τάχειον is read by N as well as other inferior mss. in 1 Tim. iii. 14 (W.H.) ἐλπίζων ἐλθεῖν [πρὸς σέ] ἐν τάχει, ἐὰν δὲ βραδύνω. There Chrys. reads ταχέως: but he also paraphrases thus Heb. xiii. 19 as ὥστε με ταχέως ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς (though he quotes that text with τάχειον) and some scribes might avoid τάχειον owing to the condemnation of it by Lucian (iii. 573) and by Phrynichus. Moreover, if the text was προσεταχειόεαν, an erroneous interpretation of εταχειόε as being ἑταχειε might explain the dropping of σε and hence of προς σε in some mss. 'Εν τάχει in N.T. is always connected with divine retribution or angelic command except in Acts xxv. 4. If ἐν τάχει is a corruption of τάχειον, 1 Tim. as well as Heb. might accord with the Papyrus as above quoted (2554 c) in the meaning "sooner than might be expected under the circumstances." Comp. Plut. Vit. Fab. § 12 τάχειον μὲν ἢ ἐγὼ προσεδόκων, βράδιον δ' ἢ αὐτὸς ἔσπενδε... which shews how τάχειον might be used of relative speed.

[2554 e] Against rendering τάχειον in xiii. 27 "at once"—like the imperious θάττον in Aristoph.—it may be fairly urged (1) that Steph. gives abundant instances of θάττον thus used but none of τάχειον, (2) that ταχύ is repeatedly thus used in N.T. (Mt. v. 25, xxviii. 7, Lk. xv. 22), in LXX (2 S. xvii. 16, Ps. lxix. 17, lxxix. 8, cii. 2, cxliii. 7) and (Deissmann pp. 274—7) in magic adjurations, one of which (3rd century) concludes with the words ἡδη ἡδη ταχύ ταχύ. If this had been the meaning we should have expected in xiii. 27 ὁ ποιεῖς ποιήσον ταχύ.

from the earth [essentially] *is*¹," i.e. such a one cannot rise above his nature. Only one of the following is certainly a precept, "Judge not according to appearance, but the judgment that is just *judge ye*²," but it has been maintained above (2236—40) that a precept and not a statement is probably conveyed in "*Believe (πιστεύετε) in God, in me also believe*³." In xiii. 36—7, emphasis is laid upon the adverbs of time, "Thou art not able at present to be my follower, but follower thou shalt be later on"—an emphasis repeated in Peter's reply "Why am I not able to be thy follower at this moment?" In the opening sentences of the Gospel there is true chiasmus in i. 3 "All things through him came into being, and without him came into being not even one thing." But the preceding words ὁ λόγος ἦν πρὸς τὸν θεόν, καὶ θεὸς ἦν ὁ λόγος do not contain true chiasmus or, at all events, not such strict chiasmus as appears at first sight. For θεός without the article is distinct from θεός (in πρὸς τὸν θεόν) with it. This passage must be discussed later on (2594).

At the end of the sentence, ἐστίν receives emphasis from its position and from its relation to the preceding ὦν.

§ 3. The Possessive Genitive

[2558] Among Johannine variations of order one of the most frequent is that of the pronominal possessive genitive, which, for the sake of brevity, may be conveniently illustrated by the use of the genitive singular of αὐτός used possessively. "He stretched out his [own] hand" would be expressed (1) in Hebrew, briefly, by the inflexional form "his-hand," (2) in LXX, lengthily, by τὴν χεῖρα αὐτοῦ, (3) in classical Gk, briefly (as in French) by the article without the pronoun, τὴν χεῖρα—if at least the context made the meaning clear. All the evangelists, John included, freely use (2). But in describing how Peter wounded the High Priest's servant and "cut off his ear," all but Luke make αὐτοῦ precede the article and noun ("he cut off of him the ear") expressed by John thus, ἀπέκοψεν αὐτοῦ τὸ ὠτόριον τὸ δεξιόν¹. This αὐτοῦ, preceding the article and the noun, must be carefully distinguished from αὐτοῦ intervening between the article and the noun, as in τὸ αὐτοῦ ὠτόριον. The intervening αὐτοῦ would be emphatic and the meaning would be "his and nobody else's ear," but the precedent αὐτοῦ is unemphatic and throws the emphasis on "ear," so that it is almost equivalent to "cut off, not his hand, or foot, but his ear." Τὸ αὐτοῦ, emphasizing αὐτοῦ, seldom or never occurs in the Gospels², but αὐτοῦ unemphatically preceding the

[2558 c] No satisfactory instances have been alleged where possessive αὐτός comes between the article and the noun without emphasis. Blass § 48. 8 (n. 1) alleges Heb. vii. 18, Herm. Mand. vi. 2, and compares Clem. Hom. xiv. 7, 10. But in Heb. vii. 18 the context has contrasted the Levitical priesthood and that of Melchizedek; and now the writer says "there is a disannulling of the preparatory command because of the weakness of that (διὰ τὸ αὐτῆς ἀσθενές) [as compared with the strength of this]." In Herm. Mand., the context has described Hermas as desiring to know the (v. 1—2) ἐνέργειαν of Wrath, and has spoken (vi. 1. 1) of the δύναμιν and ἐνέργειαν belonging to Faith, Fear and Self-control. Now (vi. 2. 1) the Teacher says, "There are two angels with man, one of Righteousness and one of Wickedness," and Hermas replies, πῶς οὖν, κύριε, γνώσομαι τὰς αὐτῶν ἐνεργείας "How shall I recognise the energies of those [as of the rest]" because both the angels dwell with me?" The pronoun is therefore emphasized. Clem. Hom. xiv. 7, Schwegler's text, has ὑπὲρ πάντας αὐτοῦ με τοὺς φίλους ἀγαπῶν (not τοὺς αὐτοῦ φίλους) so that it is not to the point. In Clem. Hom. xiv. 10 σὺ εἰ Φαῦστος, ὁ ταύτης ἀνὴρ καὶ τῶν αὐτῆς παίδων πατήρ, a husband and father, supposed dead, is being identified in the presence of his wife: "Thou [it seems] art Faustus, the husband of this woman and the father of her children?" i.e. those whom she article occurs occasionally in the Synoptists and very frequently indeed in John. It may be called the unemphatic precedent possessive αὐτοῦ, or "the vernacular possessive" (2776—84)¹. It occurs in John about eighteen times; but in the Synoptists, taken all together, not much more than half that number.

[2559] The same difference, though not to the same extent, is perceptible in the Johannine and the Synoptic use of μου, σου, and ὑμῶν². Here, too, Luke appears to avoid the precedent unemphatic calls children as mother you call children as father. Αὐτῆς appears nearly equivalent to ταύτης, which is perhaps not repeated because the repetition would be monotonous. But the text of this book is so full of errors that τωναυτης may very well be an error, τῶταυτης being read as τωναυτης.

[2558 c] Where Mk xi. 15, Mt. xxi. 12 have τὰς τραπέζας τῶν κολλυβιστῶν, Jn ii. 15 has τῶν κολλυβιστῶν ἐξέχεεν τὰ κέρματα καὶ τὰς τραπέζας ἀνέτρεψεν. But the precedent possessive noun stands on a different footing from the precedent possessive pronoun, and is probably emphatic, placed first to define the two following nouns (2559 a). The meaning is, "And as for the money-changers he poured out their coins and overturned their tables." Similarly in viii. 17 δύο ἀνθρώπων ἡ μαρτυρία ἀληθὴς ἐστίν the genitive is manifestly emphatic—"the testimony of two men" being required by law to establish truth. So it is in the second clause of x. 4—5 "they know his voice (τ. φ. αὐτοῦ)...they know not of strangers the voice (τῶν ἀλλοτρῶν τὴν φωνήν)," where ἀλλοτρῶν, though precedent, is more emphatic than αὐτοῦ. Ἀλλοτρῶν is virtually a noun, and it is emphasized by antithesis. In ix. 27—8 αὐτοῦ and Μωυσέως are perhaps to be regarded as objective genitives "disciples following him and Moses" and the genitives are emphasized by antithesis. The separation of the genitive from the noun in xx. 23 ἂν τινῶν ἀφῆτε τὰς ἁμαρτίας makes the intervening ἀφῆτε emphatic, "Of whomsoever ye forgive sins," and "forgive" is also emphasized by antithesis with "retain" (mentioned in the context).

² [2559 a] I have not found the precedent unemphatic possessive with ὑμῶν in the Gospels unless it occurs in Jn xi. 48 ἀροῦσιν ὑμῶν καὶ τὸν τόπον καὶ τὸ ἔθνος which is almost equivalent to "they will take away from us both Temple and national existence." Phil. iii. 20 ὑμῶν γὰρ τὸ πολίτευμα is differentiated by the initial position of ὑμῶν, and by the intervening γὰρ: it means, in effect, "For us [whatever it may be for others], our country is in heaven." Rom. xiii. 11 ἐγγύτερον ὑμῶν is prob. (see Steph.) an instance of objective genitive. In 1 Thess. iii. 10 and 13 ἰδεῖν ὑμῶν τὸ πρόσωπον, and στηρίξαι ὑμῶν τὰς καρδίας, the unemphatic ὑμῶν throws the emphasis on what follows, "see you face to face," "strengthen [you not outwardly but inwardly in] your hearts." The unemphatic precedent genitives, ὑμῶν and αὐτῶν occur severally in 1 Thess. v. 23 Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης ἀγαθὰς ὑμᾶς ὁλοτελεῖς, καὶ ὁλόκληρον ὑμῶν τὸ πνεῦμα καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ καὶ τὸ σῶμα...

genitive as in his account of the healing of the paralytic compared with that in Mark and Matthew¹. And in the healing of the centurion's servant, where Matthew, using the unemphatic μου, lays stress upon the condescension of coming all the way to the centurion's "house," instead of healing at a distance ("come to my house"), Luke neglects or avoids this distinction². John, since he is continually representing the Saviour as using the words "I" and "my," is bound to use "my" more frequently than the Synoptists: and accordingly he uses μου and ἐμοῦ more frequently than any one of them. But if he wishes to emphasize "my" he mostly uses ὁ ἐμός, and, to increase the emphasis, he repeats the article. Ἐμός is used by John about forty times as against ten times in the rest of the Gospels. Thus he can rise to a climax of pronominal emphasis:—(1) μου τὰ ῥήματα, (2) τὰ ῥήματά μου, (3) τὰ ἐμὰ ῥήματα, (4) *τὰ ῥήματα τὰ ἐμὰ*³. See 2776—84.

² [2559 ε] Mt. viii. 8 ἵνα μου ὑπὸ τὴν στέγην εἰσέλθῃς, Lk. vii. 6 ἵνα ὑπὸ τὴν στέγην μου εἰσέλθῃς. Mt., by using the unemphatic μου, emphasizes στέγην.

kissing His "*feet*¹"—perhaps taking the emphasis off the pronoun and throwing it on the noun "feet," because another tradition described an anointing of the "head." In John, the "vernacular" possessive occurs repeatedly with "*eyes*²" (in the narrative of the healing of the blind man), also with "*heart*³," "*head*⁴," "*mouth*⁵," "*legs*⁶," "*side*⁷," "*hand*⁸." Once it occurs with "right ear"—a noteworthy instance because it occurs in a portion of "the four-fold Gospel," the smiting of the High Priest's servant by Peter: and here, though John agrees with Luke in adding that it was the "right ear" (a point omitted by Mark and Matthew) he follows Mark and Matthew against Luke in the use of the "vernacular" possessive⁹.

[2564] In xiii. 6 σύ μου νίπτεις τοὺς πόδας, the genitive pronoun is emphasized by coming next after another pronoun (2784 c) so that the meaning is, “Thou! for me! washest the feet¹!” This then—owing to special circumstances in the context—is not an instance of the vernacular unemphatic possessive. But it is followed by the true vernacular possessive, xiii. 8 οὐ μὴ νύψῃς μου τοὺς πόδας, “thou shalt assuredly never wash my feet,” where there is no emphasis on “thou” nor on “my,” but on “assuredly” and “feet.” Then comes the ordinary construction in xiii. 9 μὴ τ. π. μου μόνον, where μὴ...μόνον throws some emphasis on “feet,” and xiii. 12 ὅτε οὖν ἐνίψεν τοὺς πόδας αὐτῶν, where there is no emphasis on any particular word. Lastly comes the precept xiii. 14, where ὑμῶν τοὺς πόδας is not an instance of the true vernacular possessive, because “your” is exceptionally emphasized by the previous insertion of an emphatic “I” to which “your” is obviously antithetical. “If therefore I (ἐγὼ) washed for you (ὑμῶν) the feet...ye also (καὶ ὑμεῖς) are bound for one another to wash the feet (ἀλλήλων νίπτειν τ. πόδας)².”

(1) xi. 20—ὦ ὅτι οὖν Μάρθα ὡς ἤκουσεν ὅτι Ἰ. ἔρχεται ὑπὲρ τῆς

αὐτῷ· Μαριάμ δὲ ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ ἐκαθέζετο. εἶπεν οὖν ἡ Μάρθα πρὸς Ἰησοῦν, «Κύριε»¹, εἰ ἤς ᾧδε, οὐκ ἂν ἀπέθανεν ὁ ἀδελφός μου.

(2) xi. 29—32 ἐκείνη δὲ ὡς ἤκουσεν [i.e. that Jesus “called” her φωνεῖ σε] ἠγέρθη ταχὺ καὶ ἤρχετο πρὸς αὐτόν... ἡ οὖν Μαριάμ ὡς ἦλθεν ὁπου ἦν Ἰησοῦς ἰδοῦσα αὐτὸν ἔπεισεν αὐτοῦ πρὸς τοὺς πόδας λέγουσα αὐτῷ, Κύριε, εἰ ἤς ᾧδε, οὐκ ἂν μου ἀπέθανεν ὁ ἀδελφός.

[2566] Everything in (1)—the deliberation implied in “going to meet,” the weighty word εἶπεν (2456), the ordinary sequence of οὐκ ἂν ἀπέθανεν, and of ὁ ἀδελφός μου—points to deliberate utterance. In (2), Mary’s “rising up quickly” (contrasted with the previous “sitting in the house”) and her “falling at the feet” of the Saviour when she first catches sight of Him, prepare us for an utterance of passionate emotion. And, as a fact, the ordinary sequence of οὐκ ἂν and verb² is broken by the intervention of μου, and the connexion

[2566 b] In view of these instances, and of the reasonableness of emphasizing most pronouns in such a position, it is possible that σοι must be emphasized in Jn xviii. 30 where the evangelist with bitter irony describes the Jews (1885 (ii)) as avoiding external defilement, yet as defiling themselves internally by that which “cometh out of the mouth” in slander, accusing Christ of being an “evil-doer.” “If this man had not been an evil-doer we should not have delivered him up to [a just judge like] thee,” οὐκ ἂν σοι παρεδώκαμεν αὐτόν. Blass (p. 320) on οὐκ ἂν σοι παρεδώκαμεν, says “better οὐδ’ according to the Lewis Syriac.” And οὐδέ would certainly be preferable unless an emphasis on σοι could be justified. The variations in the best MSS. as to the position of ἂν in viii. 19 and xiv. 7 proceed in part from scribal doubts as to the relation between the two similar sayings, and in part from a failure to recognise that ἂν, in John, always follows an emphatic word, and that in these two sentences “my Father” is more emphatic than “know.” In xviii. 36, ἠγωνίζοντο ἂν (where B marg. has rightly inserted ἂν, casually omitted by B at the end of a line before ἔνα) comes emphatically before a short pause; and this (though not much more striking than xiv. 28 ἐχάρητε ἂν) has caused variations (2739 c). In none of these three passages does there seem good reason for supposing that ἂν was originally omitted. The variations in the Johannine order between μου and ὁ ἀδελφός is broken by the intervention of the verb. This obliges us to lay stress on ἄν i.e. "how different it would have been!" But it is not clear whether the emphasis on ἄν does, or does not, take away the emphasis from the following μου. If σύ had been inserted, we might have felt certain that μου (2564) is emphatic. Perhaps the writer draws a contrast between Martha, ending her sentence with "me" and Mary, ending hers with "brother." If so, μου is the vernacular possessive. As it is, the conclusion is doubtful¹.

[2567] In vi. 51—5, where the Eucharistic doctrine is introduced, the ordinary possessive, ἡ σὰρξ μου, occurs, first predicatively ("the bread that I shall give is my flesh") and then "except ye eat the flesh of (τὴν σ.) the Son of man." After this, when mention is made of drinking the blood and eating the flesh, the unemphatic "his" and "my" are used in order to emphasize "flesh" and "blood":—" [yea,] and drink his blood (αὐτοῦ τ. αἷμα)...he that eateth my flesh (μου τ. σάρκα) and drinketh my blood (μου τ. αἷμα)." When a return is made to definition, the ordinary possessive is resumed: "my flesh (ἡ σ.

of ἄν (e.g. viii. 19 τὸν πατέρα μου ἄν ᾗδετε, viii. 42 ἡγαπᾶτε ἄν ἐμέ, xv. 19 ὁ κόσμος ἄν τὸ ἴδιον ἐφίλει) are mostly explicable by emphasis on special words, but they are irregular enough to perplex scribes (comp. Gal. iii. 21 (W.H.) ἐν νόμῳ ἄν ᾗν (marg. ἐκ νόμου ᾗν [ἄν])). In xviii. 36 the final ἄν suits well with the imperfect—the meaning being "would be in that case striving at this very moment" [comp. Mt. xxvi. 53 "at this moment...twelve legions of angels"] "that I might not be delivered to the Jews." Blass (p. 207) says "τοῖς Ἰουδ. is contrary to sense and is omitted by Chrys." But Chrys. inserts τοῖς Ἰουδ. in quoting the passage. Afterwards, it is true, he omits it. But then he omits not only τοῖς Ἰουδ. but also the rest of Christ's sentence (τοῖς Ἰουδ. νῦν δὲ ἡ βασις. ἡ ἐμὴ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐντεῦθεν). The reason appears to be that he stops short because he sees no ground for special comment on the omitted words. Subsequently he casually repeats the words οὐκ ἐντεῦθεν, shewing that he had the clause before him, though he did not think it worth while to quote it in full or to comment on τοῖς Ἰουδ. Yet in fact there is great force in "the Jews," as denoting the real agents, Pilate being a mere puppet. In Lk. xix. 23, Blass (p. 206) takes ἐλθὼν as=(temporal) protasis, where I should prefer to supply the protasis from the context, "Why didst thou not put my money into the bank...and [then, if thou hadst done this,] I on my side (κἀγώ), when I came home (ἐλθὼν), should have exacted the sum with interest?"

μου) is true food, and my blood (τὸ αἷμα μου) is true drink." Then, when it has to be insisted that "abiding" in Christ is the result of feeding on the "flesh" and the "blood," the nouns are again emphasized: "He that eateth my flesh (μ. τὴν σάρκα) and drinketh my blood (μ. τὸ αἷμα) abideth in me¹."

[2568] Where there is no antithesis we are generally safe in taking the precedent possessive as unemphatic, e.g. "I manifested thy name," compared with "in thy name²." But antithesis and chiasmus probably give it emphasis in xv. 10 "ye will abide in my love (μενείτε ἐν τ. ἀγ. μου)...even as I...and abide in his love (μένω αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ ἀγ.)³." In iii. 19—20, the context is too long to discuss, but the genitives (one of which is separated from its governing noun by a predicative adjective, πονηρά) are perhaps intended to throw the emphasis on what follows in each case⁴. It is however a passage where there is room for difference of opinion.

[2567 b] In iv. 47 "that he might heal his son (α. τὸν υἱόν)" there may be an intention to emphasize "son," partly because it illustrated the urgency of the request, partly because some traditions may have differed as to whether (1862 a—c) the sick "boy" was a "son" or a "servant."

² [2568 a] xvii. 6 ἐφάνέρωσά σου τ. ὄνομα, comp. xvii. 11, 12 τήρησον (and ἐτήρουν) αὐτοὺς ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου.

[2569] In ii. 23 "beholding his signs (αὐτοῦ τὰ σημεῖα), which he was [continually] doing," and also in vii. 3 "that they may behold thy works (if we read σου τὰ ἔργα)," emphasis is laid on "signs" and "works," and the context implies, perhaps, that the speakers attached more importance to these than to Christ Himself. The same emphasis on the noun is to be laid in the only two instances where precedent αὐτοῦ occurs in the Johannine Epistles: 1 Jn ii. 4—5 "He that sayeth...and keepeth not his commandments (τὰς ἐντ. αὐτοῦ μὴ τηρῶν) is a liar...but whoso keepeth his word (ὃς δ' ἂν τηρῇ αὐτοῦ τὸν λόγον)¹, truly in him is the love of God," 3 Jn 9—10 "He that loveth supremacy over them, Diotrephes, doth not fitly receive us: for this cause, if I come, I will call to remembrance [not his pretensions but] his works (ὑπομνήσω αὐτοῦ τὰ ἔργα)."²

² [2569 b] Somewhat similar is the mention of "those who are puffed up" in 1 Cor. iv. 19, "But I will come quickly unto you...and will acquaint myself not with the speech but with the power of them that are puffed up, καὶ γινώσκει οὐ τὸν λόγον, τῶν πεφυσιωμένων ἀλλὰ τὴν δύναμιν."

[2569 c] In ix. 6, the reading is very doubtful. W.H. txt has ταῦτα εἰπὼν ἔπτυσεν χαμαὶ κ. ἐποίησεν πηλὸν ἐκ τοῦ πτύσματος καὶ ἔπέθηκεν¹ (marg. ἐπέχρισεν) αὐτοῦ τὸν πηλὸν ἐπὶ τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς. R.V. marg. has "the clay thereof," taking αὐτοῦ to refer to πτύσματος, and supplying "his." AC ins. "of the blind man" after "eyes." SS has "and took [it i.e. the clay] up [and] smeared [it] upon the eyes of that blind man," D "and smeared upon him (ἐπέχρισεν αὐτῷ) the clay upon his eyes," d "et linuit ei lutum super oculos eius," a "et linuit oculos ejus," b "et superlinuit lutum super oculos illius caeci," e "et superunxit oculos caeci," f "et superlinivit super oculos caeci," ff "et superunxit illud super oculos ejus." (1) Mark's (viii. 23) tradition about healing blindness with saliva, (2) Jewish traditions about such healing, and (3) the possibilities of mystical suggestion in the present passage, combine with (4) the textual variations to make its adequate interpretation at present impossible.

§ 4. Miscellaneous variations

[2570] The following miscellaneous variations, taken in their order as they occur in the Gospel, may be of use for reference, and for the purpose of giving the reader a general view of John's style. Many of them have been explained incidentally above: others will be briefly discussed here. A few of them deal with synonyms not discussed in Johannine Vocabulary. For example, the use of καταλαμβάνω in the Prologue (i. 5) was discussed in 1735 e—h, but the relation between παραλαμβάνω and λαμβάνω in the same context was merely touched on there, and will come first in the instances given below.

In i. 11—12 οἱ ἴδιοι αὐτὸν οὐ παρέλαβον· ὅσοι δὲ ἔλαβον αὐτόν, a distinction is certainly drawn between παρέλαβον and ἔλαβον, and the former is probably used with special reference to οἱ ἴδιοι. The meaning probably is that, when the Son of God came to His own family, none "received Him fitly as coming from the Father (παρέλαβον)," but some "received Him [though imperfectly] (ἔλαβον)."¹

[2570 b] But Chrysostom and Ammonius both take ἴδιοι in a twofold sense, as meaning (1) the world, (2) Israel; and in view of the language of the prophets about the rejection of Jehovah by His own children, and the language of Jesus Himself about "a prophet in his own country," there can hardly be a doubt that both meanings are intended. (1) Applied to the world at large, παρέλαβον may be illustrated by its use in Epictetus to describe our "receiving from [God]." In one passage he uses παραλαμβάνω (i. 6. 25 τὴν θέαν παρελήφατε) to describe our reception of the gift of beholding the sights of God's universe. Then he drops the compound preposition (ib. 28) "And come now, have you not received (εἰλήφατε) faculties?... Have you not received manliness? Have you not received magnanimity? Have you not received patience?" The Logos itself is described as (i. 20. 5) "received from [God] (παρελήπται) by [human] nature (ὑπὸ τῆς φύσεως)": and concerning the power of the Logos (ἡ λογικὴ δύναμις) it is said that (i. 1. 4) "it is received from [God]" and, in the same sentence, "it has come (ἐλήλυθε)." Elsewhere παραλαμβάνω is used (Ench. xxiv. 1, xxv. 1, xxxii. 2) of calling a friend to share one's meal or one's secret plans. (2) From the Jewish point of view, παραλαμβάνω is the regular word for "receiving words, or traditions," handed down from a teacher. It is thus used frequently in N.T. The very first words of the Sayings of the Jewish Fathers are "Moses received the Law from Sinai," [2571] i. 15, 30 ὁ ὀπίσω μου ἐρχόμενος ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν, ὅτι... (30) εἶπον, Ὁπίσω μου ἔρχεται ἀνὴρ ὃς ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν. Hereby the evangelist warns us that when he represents a speaker as apparently repeating a previous utterance, we are not to expect identity of expression. The introduction of ἀνὴρ may (2371) allude to the meaning "husband" and may prepare the way for (iii. 29) "bridegroom." But in any case this is one of many passages in which the writer seems to say, "The Baptist and the Lord Jesus said the same things again and again in slightly different ways, and there may be various traditions, all differing and yet all accurate."

[2572] The verb of seeing is thrice varied in i. 32—4 τεέμαι τὸ πνεῦμα καταβαῖνον... καὶ οὐκ ᾔδειν αὐτόν· ἀλλ' ὁ πέμψας με... εἶπεν Ἐφ' ὃν ἂν ἴδῃς... καὶ ἐώρακα καὶ μεμαρτύρηκα. This may be paraphrased thus, "I have beheld the manifestation of the Spirit... and I for my part did not know him [the Messiah] but he that sent me and the following sentences describe a long succession of teachers as each "receiving" from a predecessor.

[2570 c] In i. 4—12 the context makes it probable that παρέλαβον refers to the Jews: for it appears to describe three stages of failure, in three negations, with καταλαμβάνω, γινώσκω, and παραλαμβάνω. (1) "The life was the light of men... and the darkness apprehended it not (αὐτὸ οὐ κατέλαβεν)." (2) "[The light] was in the world; and the world, through him [or, it], came into being; and the world recognised him not (αὐτόν οὐκ ἔγνω)." (3) "To his own [house] he came, and his own [household] did not receive him [as coming] from [the Father of the house] (αὐτόν οὐ παρέλαβον)."

[2570 d] In the Synoptists, παραλαμβάνω is used, with Ἰησοῦν as object, in Mk iv. 36 of the disciples "taking Jesus with them in the boat," and in Mt. xxvii. 27 of the soldiers of the governor "taking Jesus with them into the praetorium," where Mk xv. 16 has ἀπήγαγον and Lk. altogether differs. The use of π. to describe "taking prisoners along with one" (or "accepting the surrender of a city" as in 1 Mac. xv. 30 (X) παρελάβετε, LXX κατελάβεσθε) is very rare in Gk, and occurs in canon. LXX perh. only in Lam. iii. 2 παρέλαβέν με κ. ἀπήγαγεν εἰς σκότος. It is therefore worthy of note that Jn, like Mt., has παραλαμβάνω in his account of the Passion. But, in Jn, it is not "the soldiers of the governor" but the "chief priests," who thus "take with them" or "receive" Jesus; xix. 16—17 "then therefore he [i.e. Pilate] delivered him to them [i.e. the chief priests] to be crucified. They therefore received (παρέλαβον) Jesus." The supposition that the word was applied in diverse traditions to a "reception" of Jesus as a prisoner is confirmed, if the txt is correctly supplied (as it probably is) by Evang. Petr. (ed. Robinson) § 1 καὶ τότε κελεύει Ἡρώδης ὁ βασιλεὺς παρ[αλημ]φθῆναι τὸν Κύριον. If Jn deliberately and allusively adapted a version of this ancient tradition, so as to represent the Logos as being, after this fashion, "received" by His own "priests"—who might be called pre-eminently "His own people"—it is one of the most ironical instances of Johannine irony.

...said, On whomsoever thou shalt see...and I [taught by God's word] have seen [and received the vision] and have testified" (1597 foll.). Θεᾶσθαι here means spiritual "seeing" but refers rather to the form ("descent as a dove") of the vision while έώρακα refers to the inner meaning of it.

[2573] As to iii. 3—5, γεννηθῆ ἄνωθεν compared with γ. ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ πνεύματος, and ιδεῖν τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ θεοῦ compared with εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν β. τ. θ., it was noted in 1903 a that Chrysostom apparently took ἄνωθεν to mean "from above." It should be added that Origen certainly does this in a passage in which he comments on viii. 23 ὑμεῖς ἐκ τῶν κάτω ἐστέ, ἐγὼ ἐκ τῶν ἄνω εἰμί, iii. 31 ὁ ὢν ἐκ τῆς γῆς...ὁ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐρχόμενος, where he says τὰ μὲν γὰρ περίγεια κάτω ἐστί, τὰ δὲ οὐράνια ἄνω, and then, after quoting Matthew's doctrine about the "heart" and the "treasure" being together, he adds: "If a man be treasuring up (θησαυρίζῃ) on earth, [then] as the result of his treasuring up on earth he becomes 'from below' (ἐκ τῶν κάτω γίνεται), but if a man is treasuring up (θησαυρίζει) in the heavens he is born from above (γεννᾶται ἄνωθεν) and assumes (1 Cor. xv. 49) 'the image of the heavenly'¹."

¹ [2573 a] Huet ii. 280 E—282 C. Comp. Origen's Homily on Gen. i. 6—7, where he refers to the "living water" as being that which is "above the firmament" and as opposed to the "water below," which is the water of death: "Studeat ergo unusquisque nostrum divisor aquae effici ejus quae est supra, et quae est subtus: quo scilicet spiritualis aquae intellectum, et participium capiens ejus quae est supra firmamentum, flumina de ventre suo educat aquae vivae salientis in vitam aeternam, segregatus sine dubio, et separatus ab ea aqua quae subtus est, id est, aqua abyssi, in qua tenebrae esse dicuntur, in qua princeps hujus mundi, et adversarius draco, et angeli ejus habitant, sicut superius indicatum est. Illius ergo aquae supernae participio, quae supra coelos esse dicitur, unusquisque fidelium coelestis efficitur, id est, cum sensum suum habet in arduis et excelsis, nihil de terra, sed totum de coelestibus cogitans, quae sursum sunt quaerens, ubi Christus est in dextra Dei patris."

[2573 b] Toward the end of the first century Christian teachers would find it necessary to emphasize the possibility that a man might be "born again" for evil as well as for good. This is recognised in some of the Gospels by the Parable of the "seven devils" entering into the man delivered from one devil, and by Christ's description of a proselyte as "twofold a child of Gehenna": and Christians might apply this doctrine to Simon Magus and others. Hermas implies this double possibility of proselytism in a passage that contains an attempt to draw a distinction (here made by John) between "seeing" and "entering," as regards the "kingdom of God." According to him (Sim. ix. 13—15) there are twelve holy Virgins (who are "holy spirits") and twelve unholy, Vexation (Αὐπη), Wickedness etc.: "The servant of God that bears these names, though he shall

vi. 48—51 ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ἄρτος τῆς ζωῆς...ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ζῶν, is not variation but development—a good example of the way in which John leads the reader on from suggestion to statement. “The bread of life” like “the tree of life,” is a comparatively simple phrase; but—after the analogy of “the water of life” and “living (i.e. running) water”—the Teacher passes on to say that the bread is itself “living,” and that it is indeed the “flesh” of a living Man. This was a new doctrine for the Jews, though it is only an application to the spiritual world of a physical law—that life feeds on life.

[2575] In vii. 30 ἐξήτουν οὖν αὐτὸν πιάσαι καὶ οὐδεὶς ἐπέβαλεν ἐπ' αὐτὸν τὴν χεῖρα ὅτι οὐπὼ ἐληλύθει ἡ ὥρα αὐτοῦ, is there any explanation of the sing. χεῖρα here and the pl. χεῖρας in vii. 44 τινὲς δὲ ἤθελον ἐξ αὐτῶν πιάσαι αὐτόν, ἀλλ' οὐδεὶς ἔβαλεν ἐπ' αὐτὸν τὰς χεῖρας? It has been pointed out above (2135 foll.) that ἀλλά as compared with καί represents Greek idiom as compared with Hebrew. So does ἤθελον as compared with ἐξήτουν—which, though meaning in Attic Gk “desire to” (Steph.) before such verbs as πυθέσθαι, ἐκμαθεῖν, εἰδέναι, λαθεῖν, or other verbs expressing what one desires for oneself, does not seem to be used as in LXX (Ex. ii. 15, iv. 24, Esth. ii. 21, Ps. xxxvii. 32 etc.) in such phrases as “desire to kill.” Possibly, in the same way, χεῖρα may be explained as Hebraic and χεῖρας as Hellenic. At all events, in Esth. vi. 2, where the Heb. has “lay hand,” the LXX has τὰς χεῖρας (comp. 1 K. xx. 6): and Eustathius (Steph. ἐπιβάλλω 1524 D) speaks of the phrase in the pl., τὸ χεῖρας see the kingdom of God yet shall not enter therein,” ταῦτα τὰ ὀνόματα ὁ φορῶν τοῦ θεοῦ δοῦλος τὴν βασιλείαν μὲν ὀψεται τοῦ θεοῦ εἰς αὐτὴν δὲ οὐκ εἰσελεύσεται, where the Latin has “spiritus” for ὀνόματα. Irenaeus (i. 13. 6 and i. 21. 1—5) shews that parodies of baptism were common among certain heretics promising a “redemption” or “restitution” that was to be compatible with the grossest immorality. For these reasons it became needful to insist that the “new birth” was not only “new” but also “from above.”

[2573 c] In addition to the facts adduced in 1903 as to Chrysostom's interpretation of ἄνωθεν it should be added that Cramer has τὸ δὲ ἄνωθεν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ οὐ δηλοῖ in a context that indicates either (1) that οὐ δηλοῖ means “does not make clear,” or (2) that final -ου in οὐρανοῦ has been repeated as οὐ.

ἐπέβαλε¹. As to ἐπέβαλεν compared with ἔβαλεν, the latter is perhaps the less aggressive, and John indicates, in vii. 44, that those previously mentioned as longing to capture Jesus dared not now play the part of aggressors even in a minor degree.

[2576] In reply to Christ's words viii. 51 εἰάν τις τὸν ἐμὸν λόγον τηρήσῃ, θάνατον οὐ μὴ θεωρήσῃ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, the Jews say, viii. 52 σὺ λέγεις Ἐάν τις τὸν λόγον μου² τηρήσῃ, οὐ μὴ γεύσεται θανάτου εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα. "Taste of death" is an expression assigned to our Lord by all the Synoptists just before the Transfiguration, and it means literal death³. But "behold death" appears to refer to spiritual death, and perhaps contains an assumption that whatever one "beholds"—whether it be the true glory of Goodness or the false glory of Satan—one is, as St Paul says, "conformed to it⁴." In what follows, Christ says about Abraham, "He saw it [i.e. my day] and rejoiced," i.e. he spiritually "saw" the joy of the day of the Messiah and was conformed to that joy so that he himself "rejoiced⁵." Our Lord elsewhere uses the word ἰδεῖν of "seeing the kingdom of God⁶." Here John uses θεωρεῖν—a word that sometimes (1598) means blank, unintelligent, or superstitious vision—perhaps, as being more appropriate to the view of the dark powers of spiritual death⁷. But the Aramaic phrase "see death"—as distinct from

² [2576 a] Τὸν λόγον μου is not quite so emphatic as τὸν ἐμὸν λόγον, which again is not so emphatic as ὁ λ. ὁ ἐμός would have been. In Jn, ὁ ἐμός occurs thrice, v. 47, vii. 16, viii. 51, whereas δ...ὁ ἐμός is much more frequent.

⁴ [2576 c] See 2 Cor. iii. 18 κατοπτριζόμενοι, Rom. xii. 2 συνσχηματίζεσθε... μεταμορφούσθε. ⁵ viii. 56. ⁶ iii. 3.

"taste death," and without any discrimination between different verbs of seeing—may have referred to Biblical usage, which sometimes attaches to "see" the meaning of "see for oneself," "have personal experience of," "realise¹." The fact that both Peter and Paul are represented in the Acts as quoting Ps. xvi. 10, to shew that the Messiah was distinguished from David by "not seeing the pit," makes it probable that the phrase "see death" was variously applied, not without controversy, toward the end of the first century. John here teaches that "not to behold death" was a spiritual gift, extending, not only to Enoch, Elijah, and the Lord Jesus Christ, but to all Christ's true disciples. At the same time, he points out that the Jews confused this with a phrase not used in O.T., "tasting death," which they interpreted as referring to physical death.

[2577] ix. 21—3 πῶς δὲ νῦν βλέπει οὐκ οἶδαμεν, ἢ τίς ἤνοιξεν αὐτοῦ τοὺς ὀφθ. ἡμεῖς οὐκ οἶδαμεν· αὐτὸν ἐρωτήσατε, ἡλικίαν ἔχει...διὰ τοῦτο.. εἶπαν ὅτι Ἡλικίαν ἔχει, αὐτὸν ἐπερωτήσατε (marg. ἐρωτήσατε). The difference between "we know not" and "we (ἡμεῖς) know not" is that the latter implies a more emphatic disavowal because the speakers, in the latter case, are more frightened: "But how he now sees we know not. Or, who opened his eyes, [if indeed some one opened his eyes]—we know nothing about it." In what follows, the fact that the evangelist puts the last words of the parents first in repeating their utterance is in conformity with the rule mentioned above (2552—3). But the change of ἐρωτήσατε to ἐπερωτήσατε is a remarkable concession to dramatic effect or impressionism. "In effect," John seems to say, "what the parents meant was, He is of age, ask him, [not us, and ask him] as much as you like²."

[2578] In xiii. 33 (rep. from viii. 21) ὅπου ἐγὼ ὑπάγω ὑμεῖς οὐ δύνασθε ἐλθεῖν, which had been uttered to the Jews, the pronouns emphasize the opposition between “I” and “ye” (“Where I go ye cannot come”)—as also in vii. 34, 36—but when Christ repeats this to Peter, xiii. 36 ὅπου ὑπάγω οὐ δύνασαι μοι νῦν ἀκολουθῆσαι, the pronouns are omitted so as to lay no stress upon personal antithesis but only on present time, “Where I go thou canst not follow me at present.”

[2579] In xiv. 10—11 οὐ πιστεύεις ὅτι ἐγὼ ἐν τῷ π. καὶ ὁ π. ἐν ἐμοί ἐστιν; the position of ἐστιν at the end of the sentence marks it as emphatic—and all the more emphatic because the meaning would have been clear without it,—“Do ye not believe...that in me the Father truly is?” In the repetition, πιστεύέτε μοι ὅτι ἐγὼ ἐν τῷ π. καὶ ὁ π. ἐν ἐμοί, the stress on “is” is dropped by the omission of ἐστιν in order to emphasize “me” (“Believe me”), and the sentence concludes, “But if [ye can] not [do this], believe for the mere works’ sake”—thus omitting the whole of the object of “believe” in order to emphasize the cause of belief.

[2580] In xiv. 23—24 εἰάν τις ἀγαπᾷ με τὸν λόγον μου τηρήσει, compared with ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν με τοὺς λόγους μου οὐ τηρεῖ, εἰάν τις is more selective than ὁ μὴ (2552 c), and τὸν λόγον represents “the word” taken as a whole, the spirit of Christ’s teaching, whereas τοὺς λόγους means the separate doctrines, “does not [even] keep [the letter of] my words.” This is the only occasion where Christ in the Fourth Gospel uses the plural λόγοι.²

[2581] In xv. 9—11 μέναιτε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ τῇ ἐμῇ...μενέιτε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ μου...καθὼς ἐγὼ...καὶ μένω αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ...ἵνα ἡ χαρὰ ἣ ἐμὴ ἐν ὑμῖν ᾗ καὶ ἡ χαρὰ ὑμῶν πληρωθῇ, the phrase ἡ ἐμὴ emphasizes the “love” and the “joy” so that they are distinguished from the said his parents, Ask him.” In classical Gk ἐπερωτᾶν sometimes means “ask in turn,” i.e. “ask after answering,” as in Mk xi. 29 (where Mt.-Lk. have ἐρωτᾶν) but Steph. gives no instance where it clearly means “ask further.”

¹ [2579 a] See Philo i. 267 in 2588 c, ὁὕτως γὰρ ὁ ἀληθινὸς οὗτός ἐστιν, where ἐστιν is similarly emphatic.

ordinary feelings so called—"the love that is peculiarly mine...the joy that is peculiarly mine"—indicating that a new kind of love has been brought into the world by the Son of God.

[2582] In xv. 21 ταῦτα πάντα ποιήσουσιν...ὅτι οὐκ οἶδασιν τὸν πέμψαντά με, and xvi. 3 ταῦτα ποιήσουσιν ὅτι οὐκ ἔγνωσαν τὸν πατέρα οὐδὲ ἐμέ, the exact meaning is hard to give without paraphrase, and is not given by R.V. "know not," "have not known." The first sentence says "They will persecute you, my followers, because they know not the nature of him that sent me." Then Jesus shews that this want of knowledge arose, not from intellectual but from moral fault, and lastly He repeats "They will persecute you, I say, because—not having in themselves the spirit of love, the spirit of fatherhood, the spirit of sonship—they failed to recognise the Father and failed to recognise me,—his Son [when the Father sent the Son to them]."

[2583] xvi. 14—15 ἐκ τοῦ ἐμοῦ λήμψεται...διὰ τοῦτο εἶπον ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ ἐμοῦ λαμβάνει is a remarkable instance of verbally inaccurate quotation. SS, and the Latin versions except a, read λήμψεται for λαμβάνει so as to make the quotation accurate¹. After saying "He will take from what is mine," Jesus explains, that "mine" means "the Father's" because "all things as many as the Father hath are mine." Then, having passed into the present, while describing the ever present relations between the Father and the Son, He continues in the present tense when repeating what He had previously uttered about the relations between the Holy Spirit and the Son. Another case of variation in repeating occurs in xvi. 16—19 where Jesus says "ye behold me no longer (οὐκέτι)," but the disciples repeat it as "ye behold me not (οὐ)," and our Lord Himself, accepting their variation, says, "On this matter are ye questioning with one another because I said, A little while and ye behold me not (οὐ)!" Perhaps "no longer" was intended to suggest "no longer in the old familiar way, after the flesh." But the disciples, panic-stricken, fasten on the bare negative "not," and their Master adapts His reply to their fears, and accepts their version of His utterance².

² [2583 δ] In xvi. 16—19 a, d, e, f and SS have "non" throughout.

[2583 c] On other variations of Christ's sayings see 2545 foll., 2190. And add ix. 7 ὕπαγε ρίψαι εἰς τὴν κολυμβήθραν τοῦ Σ., repeated by the blind man thus, ix. 11 εἰπέν μοι ὅτι "Ὑπαγε εἰς τὸν Σ. καὶ ρίψαι.

[2584] In xvii. 12 ὅτε ἤμην μετ' αὐτῶν ἐγὼ ἐτήρουν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι...καὶ ἐφύλαξα, a difference is intended by the difference of verb and tense. Ἐτήρουν, "I was always watching, or keeping my eye on," implies the continually watchful care of the Lord during His incarnate life, on which He is supposed to be, by anticipation, looking back; ἐφύλαξα "I protected" (not "I have protected") implies action regarded simply as past. There is emphasis on "I" as distinct from the Father, "I could do it once, now I beseech thee to do it." Μετ' αὐτῶν (2349) implies friendly companionship: "As long as I was side by side with them," i.e. in the world—a phrase that is supplied by many authorities. On xi. 50 συμφέρει...ἵνα εἰς ἄνθρωπος ἀποθάνῃ, compared with xviii. 14 συμφέρει εἶνα ἄνθρωπον ἀποθανεῖν, see 2104¹.

[2585] xiii. 19 ἀπ' ἄρτι λέγω ὑμῖν πρὸ τοῦ γενέσθαι ἵνα πιστεύητε, ὅταν γένηται, ὅτι ἐγὼ εἰμι (marg. ἐγὼ εἰμί) is to be compared with

[2584 b] iv. 46—53 presents synonyms that may bear on disputed tradition concerning the boy healed by our Lord at a distance. In Mt. viii. 6 he is called παῖς i.e. "boy," which may mean (in the phrase "thy boy") "son" or "servant." In Lk. vii. 2, he is called δοῦλος, "slave" or "servant." In Jn, the evangelist begins by saying "whose son (υἱός) was sick." The father then says, "Come down before my little child (παιδίον) dies." Jesus then says, "Thy son liveth." Then servants of the father "met him saying, 'Thy boy (παῖς) liveth.'" Thus, in Jn, three names are given to the child, all of them compatible with fact, and indicative of the manner in which a mistake might have arisen from mistaking παιδίον, or παῖς, for δοῦλος. See 1862 a—c.

xiv. 29 καὶ νῦν εἶρηκα ὑμῖν πρὶν γενέσθαι ἵνα, ὅταν γένηται, πιστεύσητε, and both may be compared with the tradition in Mark and Matthew, "*I have told you beforehand*¹." The first saying refers to the betrayal by Judas, but this is regarded in the Last Discourse (xiii.—xiv.) as part of a general persecution, which is to befall the Church hereafter, all of which Christ predicts "before it come to pass." The first saying is longer than the second and emphasizes the date ("from this moment") and the object of the prediction, "that ye may grow in the belief (2525—8) that I am [He]²" (2221 foll.). The second emphasizes the time to come when the coincidence will be observed—between what will have "come to pass," and what was said before it "came to pass"—so as to cause a special belief based on this evidence.

[2586] xix. 8 ὅτε οὖν ἤκουσεν ὁ Π. τοῦτον τὸν λόγον μᾶλλον ἐφοβήθη may be compared with xix. 13 ὁ οὖν Π., ἀκούσας τῶν λόγων τούτων ἤγαγεν ἔξω τὸν Ἰ. In the former, the "hearing" does not produce (1614 b) any result beyond emotion; and the clause, being subordinate in thought, is introduced with a subordinate conjunction. In the latter, τούτων is emphasized by position (2553 c) and τ. λόγων τούτων by case (1614 b)—referring to the words "thou art not Cæsar's friend." This is a charge that Pilate cannot hear unmoved. Now therefore he is goaded to action, and the sentence introduces the action as the consequence, ὁ οὖν Π...ἤγαγεν³.

² [2585 b] The phrase "I am [He]" appears to connect this Johannine tradition directly with Mk xiii. 6 and parall. mentioned above, and hence indirectly with Mk xiii. 23 "I have told you beforehand."

[2586 b] According to W.H., Mary Magdalene is called Μαρία in xix. 25, xx. 1, 11, but Μαριάμ in xx. 16, 18. According to Tischendorf, it should be Μαριάμ throughout. If W.H. are correct, the explanation suggests itself that Mapla was used in evangelistic narrative up to the point where Jesus called her by her Aramaic name xx. 16 "Mary (Μαριάμ)," and that here, and in the subsequent xx. 18, the Aramaic form was retained.

[2586 c] In xi. 11—12 κεκοίμηται—εἰ κεκοίμηται σωθήσεται, SS has "is lying down...sleepeth," a "obdormit...dormit," b, e, f "dormit...dormit" (agreeing with D κοιμάται...κοιμάται, but d has "dormivit...dormit"). Nonnus has εὕδει...κνώσσει. Perhaps the desire to explain the alleged misunderstanding of the disciples caused some translators to represent the disciples as using a different word from Christ's when repeating what He had said. On the other hand an ancient comment (Cramer on xi. 7) boldly asserts "They did not really think it was sleep, but supposed Him to be talking in a dark saying (αἰνίγματι)." The writer declares, not without force, that it would be senseless for the disciples to suppose that their Master would go "fifteen furlongs (sic)" to wake the sleeping man. Cramer (Vol. ii. 316) prints, as from Origen, an explanation suggesting that Thomas supposed the Lord to mean that He was "going down to the place of the [departed] souls (καταβάντος εἰς τὸ τῶν ψυχῶν χωρίον)" to wake Lazarus, and that hence the disciple desired to die with his Master.

[2586 d] In x. 28—9 οὐχ ἀρπάσει τις...οὐδεὶς δύναται ἀρπάζειν, is any difference intended by the variation of οὐ...τις and οὐδεὶς? The former, in (1) LXX and (2) N.T., means "not a single man." (1) In LXX, οὐκ ἄνθρωπος, or ἄνθρ. οὐ, = "not any one," Heb. "not a man," or "man not," in Josh. i. 5, Ezek. vii. 13 etc. Τίς, "any," often = Heb. "man" in the phrase "if a man," but never (Oxf. Conc.) in "not a man." In 2 S. xix. 22 "shall [any] man die...?", οὐ θανατωθήσεται τις ἄνθρ., and in Sir. x. 24 οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτῶν τις, the Gk seems to mean "not a single one." Οὐ...τις seems to mean "not a single thing" in LXX (where there is no corresponding Heb.) in Job xxxv. 15 οὐκ ἔγνω παράπτωμά τι, Prov. xv. 23 οὐδὲ μὴ εἶπη καίριόν τι, Wisd. xi. 24 οὐδὲ γὰρ ἂν μισῶν τι κατεσκεύασας (comp. Judith ii. 13 οὐ παραβήσῃ ἐν τι). (2) In N.T., τις, τι etc., after οὐ or μή, appear to be emphatic in Mk iv. 22 marg., Mt. viii. 28, xi. 27 οὐδεὶς...οὐδὲ...τις, xii. 19, xxii. 46 οὐδεὶς ἐδύνατο...οὐδὲ ἐτόλμησέν τις, Lk. xi. 36 etc. In Mk v. 37 οὐκ ἀφήκεν οὐδένα the parall. Lk. viii. 51 has οὐκ ἀφήκεν...τινά (al. οὐδένα). It is very emphatic in 1 Cor. ii. 2, iv. 5, 1 Thess. ii. 9, 2 Thess. iii. 8, 1 Pet. iv. 15 etc. In 2 Pet. iii. 9 μή βουλόμενός τινας ἀπολέσθαι ἀλλὰ πάντας...χωρῆσαι shews an exceptional use of the pl. Perhaps the writer means "not desiring that some should perish [while others are saved] but that all should come to repentance."

[2586 e] In Mt. xi. 27, xxii. 46 οὐδὲ...τις is stronger than the preceding οὐδεὶς. Here (x. 28—9) it is stronger than the following οὐδεὶς. The question is at first about "snatching" from the Son, and it is said, emphatically, that "not any" can snatch from the Son. Afterwards, when "snatching" from the Father is spoken of, stress is laid, not on "anyone," but on the notion of "snatching":—"there is no such thing as snatching from Him,"—where it is better (2767) to read οὐδεὶς ἀρπάξει with Origen; but in any case, the verb, not the pronoun, is emphatic. If John had wished to emphasize the pronoun he might have used (2257) οὐ...οὐδεὶς.

CHAPTER II

REPETITION

§ 1. The nature of Johannine repetition

[2587] Johannine repetition may be roughly classified as (1) word-repetition, (2) phrase-repetition. In (1), the repetition follows closely in the context, e.g. "confessed and denied not and confessed." In (2), it is sometimes of the nature of a refrain, as in "A little while and ye shall see me," "Feed my sheep," "All that thou hast given me" etc. Repetition may, or may not, be accompanied with variation of order, such as we find in one of the prayers before sleep in the Jewish Prayer Book: "Behold, He that guardeth Israel will neither slumber nor sleep." This is "to be said three times" apparently without variation. But the next sentence is varied thrice, as follows:—"For thy salvation I hope, O Lord. I hope, O Lord, for thy salvation. O Lord, for thy salvation I hope (to be said three times)¹." Few or none of the Johannine variations will be found to present any ambiguity; but they are of importance as illustrating the deliberate and poetic arrangement of large parts of the Fourth Gospel and the weight and mystical meaning attached by the author to certain utterances, and indicated by him in twofold, threefold, and sevenfold repetition.

¹ [2587 a] Jewish Prayer Book, transl. by Rev. S. Singer p. 296. In the Confession on a Death-bed (p. 317) "The Lord reigneth; the Lord hath reigned; the Lord shall reign for ever and ever" is to be said three times, and so is "Blessed be His name, whose glorious kingdom is for ever and ever." But "the Lord He is God" is to be said seven times. Presumably, and appropriately, there is to be only one utterance of the final confession of the unity of God: "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God, the Lord is one." But even here the bald truth might have been expressed by "The Lord our God is one," and the addition of "the Lord" suggests a "threefold effect" like that in the first sentence of the Fourth Gospel.

§ 2. Jewish canons of repetition

[2588] Jesus is represented as saying to the Jews "Yea even in your own law it is written that the witness of two men is true." The passage referred to says, "At the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses shall a matter be established¹." This would naturally lead to a discussion as to the matters for which, severally, the witnesses should be "two" or "three." Philo says (i. 243) "A holy matter (ἅγιον πράγμα) is approved (δοκιμάζεται) through three witnesses (διὰ τριῶν μαρτύρων)." Commenting on the words of the Psalmist "The Lord spake once, twice I have also heard this," he connects terrestrial "hearing" with the imperfect "duad"². Elsewhere he explains the idiomatic Hebrew reduplications of nouns and verbs as indicating a twofold application to body and to spirit³. Scripture, he asserts, never sets down a superfluous word, and never commits "tautology—the worst kind of verbosity"⁴.

[2589] In Rabbinical literature we find much allusion to twofold but not much to threefold witness. Philo is fuller on the latter: We must not, he says, delight in casual witness, but must believe that the [Supreme] God is very near us: "For there is no need, says the sacred writer (Deut. xxx. 12), to go away to heaven, nor yet to travel across sea, in search of the Good: for it is near and close to each. And he divides it [i.e. the Good] threefold—most naturally.

² [2588 b] Philo i. 284—5, on Ps. lxii. 11 and lxxv. 8. Ps. lxii. 11 is quoted by Nedarim iii. 2 (Schwab viii. 179) to explain the apparent contradictions of the Law; and the Targ. has "God spake one law...we heard it twice from Moses."

³ [2588 c] See Philo i. 63 (on Gen. ii. 16 "eating thou mayest eat") and i. 129 (Gen. xxii. 17 "Blessing I will bless") and i. 554 (Ex. xxi. 12 "let him die the death"). On Lev. xviii. 6 (lit. and LXX) "man man shall not approach" Philo says (i. 267) "His saying 'man, man,' not once but twice, is a sign that the meaning is not the [man] of [mere] body and soul but the [man] of virtue. For this is really the true [man] (μὴ τὸν ἐκ σώματος κ. ψυχῆς ἀλλὰ τὸν ἀρετῇ κεχρημένον δηλοῦσθαι. "Οὕτως γὰρ ὁ ἀληθινὸς οὗτός ἐστιν)."

‘For,’ says he, ‘it is in thy mouth and in thy heart and in thy hands,’ that is, in speech, purpose, and act¹.’ Then, after quoting, from Deuteronomy, “Ask thy father, and he shall declare unto thee,” he protests that no human “father” can describe the immemorial past, but the “father” must mean “the Right Logos².” Afterwards comes the conclusion, “Now a holy matter is approved through three witnesses³,” where there seems to be an underlying assumption that, since the nature of the highest Good is threefold, the nature of the testimony to the highest truth, and to that which is “holy,” must also be threefold⁴.

[2590] As regards twofold repetition Philo says that there are “two divine Words (Verba), one, the pillar and support of the world of reason, the other of the world of sense...two Reasons (Rationes) of the twofold Universe, shewing forth foreordained and fixed event, that is to say, the harmonious connexion of all things⁵,” and this harmonizes with a mystical view found in Jewish Midrash that “two words,” when found together in Scripture, denote a twofold fulfilment—“in the kingdom above” and “in the kingdom below⁶.”

³ Philo i. 243.

⁵ Philo (P.A. 510) (transl.) on Ex. xxv. 11—14.

⁶ [2590 a] Thus Schöttg. (ii. 67) quotes Bammidbar r. xv. f. 230. 1 as connecting Is. lxii. 10, lvii. 14 “sternite, sternite, viam” with Ezek. xi. 19, as implying (1) a “clearing away” of the “stones” by men, and (2) an “eradicating” of the “stony heart” by the Messiah. Ib. ii. 71 quotes Vajikra r. x. f. 153. 3 “Dixit Deus S. B. ad Iesaiam : ‘Omnes prophetae proferunt vaticinia simplicia, tu autem, consolationes duplices,’” in support of which are alleged Is. xl. 1 “Comfort ye, comfort ye,” li. 9 “Awake, awake,” li. 12 “I, I, am he that comforteth you,” li. 17 “Arouse thyself, arouse thyself,” lxi. 10 “Rejoicing I will rejoice.”

[2590 b] It is interesting to note how Onkelos (followed by Jer.) deals with the repetition in Ex. xv. 16, which is really nothing but poetic repetition for emphasis : “Until thy people, O Lord, pass over [Arnon], until thy people whom thou hast redeemed pass over [Jordan].” All Jewish commentators of the first and second century would agree with Philo that no word of Scripture is “tautological.” But they would defend it against the charge of tautology in different ways. Non-mystical writers would try to supply references to two distinct historical events ; mystical writers would explain by reference to “the kingdom above” and “the kingdom below.”

[2590 c] Hor. Heb. (i. 84) quotes (from Menachoth ch. x. and Tosaph. ibid.) a

St Paul assumes that the Corinthians are familiar with the Deuteronomic saying above quoted—when he says, “This is the third time that I am coming to you. At the mouth of two witnesses or three shall every word be established¹”—and his Scriptural illustrations of the doctrine about “the second man,” who is “of heaven²,” indicate that Jewish canons of sacred writing would very soon influence writers, and especially mystical writers, of Gospels intended largely for Greeks

§ 3. Repetition through negation

[2591] The Fourth Gospel shews traces of another Jewish canon, of which little or no mention seems to have been made by Philo,—namely, that a full statement includes the negative as well as the positive aspect of a fact. Expressions on which it might be based are frequent in O.T., such as “I shall not die but live,” “The dead praise not the Lord...but we will bless the Lord that live,” “Not unto us, O Lord, but unto thy name,” “Not their own arm but thy right hand”—all of which are in the Psalms³. It does not appear to have been formulated in early Jewish literature; and the principal authority for it is the work Sohar, known to be of late origin as a whole but generally acknowledged to contain elements of great quaint tradition combining the “twice” and the “thrice,” apparently because the “twice” denoted certainty and the “thrice” certainty about a holy matter (i. 84): “The sheaf of first-fruits was reaped from the Ashes-valley of the brook Kedron. The first day of the feast of the Passover, certain persons, deputed from the Sanhedrim, went forth into that valley...And the reason of the pomp was... because the Baithuseans, or Sadducees, did not think well of doing that action on that day: therefore, that they might cross that crossing opinion, they performed the business with as much show as could be. ‘When it was now even, he on whom the office of reaping lay, saith, “The sun is set”; and they answered, “Well.”—“The sun is set”; and they answered, “Well.”—“With this reaping-hook”; and they answered, “Well.”—“With this reaping-hook”; and they answered, “Well.”—“In this basket”; and they answered, “Well.”—“In this basket”; and they answered, “Well.”—If it were the sabbath, he said, “On this sabbath”; and they answered, “Well.”—“On this sabbath”; and they answered, “Well.”—“I will reap”; and they answered, “Reap.”—“I will reap”; and they answered “Reap.” This he said thrice; and they answered thrice, “Well.”” antiquity. Expressed in the words of Grätz¹, who does not err on the side of exaggerating the importance of Sohar, the canon is as follows: "All laws of the Torah are to be considered as parts and constituents of a higher world; they resolve themselves into the mysteries of the masculine and feminine principle (positive and negative). Only when both parts meet together does the higher unity arise."

³ Ps. cxviii. 17, cxv. 17—18, cxv. 1, xlv. 3.

§ 4. Repetition in the Synoptists

[2592] The Synoptic Gospels contain but few repetitions. These are mostly in traditions peculiar to one or two writers, and of a very different character from those of the Fourth Gospel. For example, "If thy hand cause thee to stumble," repeated thrice by Mark with the substitution of "foot" and "eye" for "hand"—a tradition condensed by Matthew and omitted by Luke—is manifestly of a concrete and non-mystical character². Non-mystical also, and manifestly rhetorical, are the repetitions of "A greater than Solomon is here" (varied as "A greater than Jonah is here"), "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites," "Ye have heard that it hath been said to them of old time," "Thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall reward thee" etc.³ Emotional repetition of a single word, such as that of Isaiah quoted above (2590 a), is found in Christ's lamentation over the Holy City ("Jerusalem, Jerusalem")⁴: but the Fourth

Gospel contains nothing of this kind. Perhaps the nearest Synoptic approximation to Johannine repetition is in Mark's version of the Rich Ruler, where the words "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God" are followed by "Children, how hard it is to enter into the kingdom of God¹"—a repetition that is omitted by the parallel Matthew and Luke. Others might be mentioned, but few or none like those in the Fourth Gospel as will appear later on.

[2593] Repetition by negation in the Synoptists is more frequent comparatively in Mark than in Matthew, and in Matthew than in Luke. Mark alone inserts the negative clauses in "Receiveth not me but him that sent me" and "With men it is impossible but not with God²," and the positive clauses in "Is not able to stand but hath an end" and "Hath not forgiveness...but is liable to condemnation³." Also, where Mark and Matthew write "Have no root...but believe for a season," Luke changes the construction so as to avoid οὐκ...ἀλλὰ⁴, and many passages containing this construction are altogether omitted by him or given differently, e.g. "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister⁵." Where Mark and Matthew say that those who shall be raised from the dead "do not marry...but are as angels," Luke has "do not marry...for neither can they die any longer, for they are angel-like⁶," and this and other passages indicate that he, or the documents that he followed, sometimes eschewed the construction that abounds in Mark's and Matthew's versions of Christ's words, "not this but that⁷." But the three Synoptists agree in retaining οὐκ...ἀλλὰ in the sayings "Not they that are whole...but they that are sick," "Not the righteous but sinners," "She is not dead but sleepeth," "Not so with you,

⁶ Mk xii. 25, Mt. xxii. 30, Lk. xx. 35—6.

⁷ [2593 a] In Christ's words, besides the passages above quoted or referred to, Mk alone has οὐκ (or μή)...ἀλλὰ in vi. 9, vii. 19, xi. 23, xiii. 11 a, xiii. 20; Mk-Mt. alone in Mk x. 8 and Mt. xix. 6, Mk x. 40 and Mt. xx. 23, Mk xiii. 11 b, Mt. x. 20. but...," "God is not God of the dead but of the living," "Not my will...but thine¹." The evidence tends to shew that our Lord frequently used this form of speech in His doctrine, and that His usage, in this respect, is better represented by Mark than by Luke.

§ 5. The Johannine Prologue

[2594] Before giving a list of Johannine repetitions, twofold, threefold, and sevenfold, it will be convenient to touch on the first six verses of the Gospel from the point of view of the "canon of repetition," including also the "canon of negation" above mentioned (2591), and adding a few remarks on the context. The first sentence, for example, contains three statements about "the Word." Schöttgen tells us that "when one word in the sacred text is twice or thrice repeated, then the Cabbalists multiply that event and make many persons or events out of one²." Doubtless it would be an anachronism (as well as a fault of judgment) to impute to John such fancies as these. Yet it is probable that he followed Jewish tradition as well as prophetic inspiration in his three repetitions of "the Word," implying a threefold aspect, first, the Word in itself, and then the Word in two other aspects: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with the Divine Being³, and Divine Being was the Word." The three relations of the Logos are then summed up thus: "This [i.e. the Word conceived as above] was in the

[2593 c] In the Sermon on the Mount, οὐκ...ἀλλά occurs in Mt. v. 17, 39; vi. 13 ("Lead us,not...but deliver us from evil"), vi. 18, vii. 21: but Lk. omits either the phrase, or the phrase and its context. In Mt. xviii. 22, Lk. omits the phrase.

[2593 d] A curious exception to Synoptic usage occurs in Mk iv. 21 μήτις...ἡ...οὐχ ἴσα...; where Mt. v. 15 and Lk. viii. 16, xi. 33 have ἀλλά after a negative. In Mk ii. 22, W. H. bracket the ἀλλά-clause, giving it unbracketed in parall. Mt. Lk.

³ [2594 a] "With the Divine Being," πρὸς τὸν θεόν. The author might have written πρὸς θεόν here as in i. 6 he has παρὰ θεοῦ, and in xiii. 3 ἀπὸ θεοῦ. But he apparently wishes (as does Philo i. 655) to call attention to the distinction between θεός and ὁ θεός. In the last clause, "the Word" though it comes last (as in Gk) is subject, and we should express it more naturally in English by "the Word was Divine Being." This is stronger than saying "the Word was divine (θεῖος)."³ It means that the Word must be regarded as "God," but never apart from the relationship described as "being with, or towards, the [one] God."

beginning with the Divine Being," a summary that is not tautological; for it teaches us that the three propositions about the Logos were all true "in the beginning."

[2595] There follows a sentence in chiasmus, which also contains a negation: "All things through him¹ came into being; and without him came into being not even one [thing]." From the logical point of view the second clause is superfluous; but it is suggestive of the possibility that a thing might be "without him," i.e. apart from the Word, apart from law, order, and harmony. Grant that "all things came into being" through the Word, does it follow that they may not fall away so as to be "without him"? This phrase prepares the way for the subsequent mention of "darkness" (which is "without the light"). Moreover the sentence, beginning with "all" and ending with "one," suggests (though it does not state) that "without" the Logos or Word, there is no oneness or unity.

[2596] The writer began by three propositions about the Word, telling us first what the Word was "in" ("in the beginning"). Now he calls our attention to that which is "in" the Word—first defining it as "life," and then stating two facts about it:—i. 4 "That which *hath come into being*² in Him was life, and the life was the light of men; and the light in the darkness shineth and the darkness apprehended it not." But in these three propositions the same subject is not repeated (as it was above, "the Word"). The construction goes forward step by step, the predicate in one clause being repeated as the subject of the next, so as to suggest cause and effect³. Moreover, whereas the first verse contained one tense (ἦν) thrice repeated, this contains three predicative tenses (ἦν, φαίνει, and κατέλαβεν) suggesting that we have passed from the Eternal "was" into the conditions of change and time. We have also been brought down from "God" to "men." Immediately after the mention of "men" there has come a mention of "darkness" as that in which "the light

² [2596 a] On γέγονεν see 2478. It seems to imply that although "all things came into being" (aorist) through the Word, yet not "all things" retain the state, so to speak, of "having come into being" thus. Only that which retains the state is "life."

[of men] shineth." Last comes a negation, discussed elsewhere (1735 e—g), "the darkness apprehended not" the light. This—whether it means "did not overcome" or "did not apprehend" or both—apparently implies something suggestive of failure or conflict.

[2597] After "men" comes mention of "a man," i. 6 "There came into being a man (ἐγένετο ἄνθρωπος) sent from God, his name [was] John." The writer could have said simply, "A man named John was sent by God" or "God sent a man named John." But he apparently wishes to draw a distinction between "was" above ("In the beginning was the Word") and "came into being" here ("there came into being a man"). Perhaps, too, he wishes to suggest a distinction between "the Word was with God" and "a man sent from God." Next follows a statement that this man "came to be a witness," which might have been briefly and naturally expressed by saying simply that he "came to be a witness about the light." But this Gospel, in accordance with the canon of twofold repetition, throws the statement into what may be called two "witness-clauses": "This [man] came [to be] for a witness, that he might bear witness about the light, that all might believe through it (2302—4)." Then, in accordance with the canon of negation, the fact is restated after a negative: "He was not the light, but [he came, or, it was ordained (2063, 2105 foll.)] in order that he might bear witness concerning the light."

§ 6. Johannine repetition through negation

[2598] This is very frequent both in narrative and in words of Christ. In i. 20 "and confessed and denied not and (A.V. but) confessed," the negative (οὐ) is followed by "and" (instead of "but (ἀλλά)," which is almost invariably used). Very frequently the negation means "not of man," or "not of this or that lower kind," or "not evil"; and the affirmation means "but of God," or "but of a higher kind" or "but good," e.g. i. 13 "not...nor yet from the will of man, but from God," iii. 16 "should not perish but should have life eternal," iii. 17 "for God sent not his Son...that he should judge the world but that the world through him should be saved," v. 24 "Cometh not into judgment, but hath passed from death into life," v. 30 "I seek not mine own will, but the will of him that sent me¹."

[2599] Instances of repetition with $\mu\eta$ are less frequent. The $\mu\eta$ clause comes second in iii. 18 "He that believeth in him is not [to be] judged. He that believeth not ($\delta\ \mu\eta\ \pi.$) hath been judged already"; v. 23 "that all may honour the Son even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father, who sent him"; xiv. 23—4 "If any one love me he will keep my word...he that loveth me not keepeth not my words." The $\mu\eta$ clause comes first in x. 1—2 "He that entereth not through the door...is a thief and a robber, but he that entereth through the door is shepherd of the sheep," xv. 2 "Every branch in me that beareth not ($\mu\eta\ \phi\acute{\epsilon}\rho\omega$) fruit he taketh it away, and every [branch] that beareth fruit he cleanseth it."

[2600] There is no special ambiguity arising out of these constructions or out of John's general use of the negative. But it is worth noting that $\omega\delta$ occurs in his Gospel almost as often as in Mark and Luke taken together. And we may often perceive how the negation leads the reader towards an affirmation in a very suggestive and stimulating way, as when our Lord says, "I have not come from myself," "I am not alone," "I speak not from myself," "I seek not mine own glory," and "I will not leave you orphans¹," preparing the way for some positive doctrine. The negative, however, is not often thus used in communicating the highest kind of truth. After stating that the Baptist came to bear witness about the light, the evangelist proceeds, "He was not the light"; and his description of the "witness" is as follows: "And this is the witness...And he confessed and denied not and confessed, 'I am not the Christ'"—the two subsequent answers being also negative ("I am not," "Nō")². Then, and not till then, follows the positive testimony. The writer perhaps feels that divine teaching is often a "dark saying" misunderstood for a time, and that the interpreter must explain by negatives, "not this but that." At all events the last saying of Jesus recorded in this Gospel affords an instance of a "not...but" correcting a misunderstanding: "But Jesus said not unto him that he was not to die, but..."³.

§ 7. Twofold repetition in the Baptist's teaching

[2601] The teaching of the Baptist, being rudimentary, contains, as might be expected, several instances of twofold repetition. First the evangelist speaks, i. 7—8 “John...came for witness that he might witness concerning the light...he was not the light, but [came] that he might witness concerning the light.” Then the Baptist (probably, 1927) speaks, i. 15 (W.H. marg.) “This was he (lit.) that (ὅν) I said,” repeated with variation in i. 30 “This is he in behalf of whom (ὑπὲρ οὗ) I said”¹. The participial clause “he that cometh after me” is also repeated twice². So is the difficult sentence, “He is become before me because he was first in respect of me”³. The mission to “baptize in water” is also twice stated as a preparation for something higher⁴.

[2602] The words, “Behold, [here is] the lamb of God” are twice repeated; first, without mention of any particular hearers, “Behold, [here is] the lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world,” then, in the presence of two of John’s disciples, “Behold, [here is] the lamb of God”⁵. The descent of the Spirit is twice attested, “I have beheld,” “I have seen”; but it is also predicted by God Himself (“Upon whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending”), so that it gives the impression of being twice attested on earth and once from heaven, being one of those “holy things” described by Philo as “approved by three witnesses.” Strictly speaking, the

² [2601 b] i. 15 ὁ ὀπίσω μου ἐρχόμενος. In i. 26, W.H. have ὀπίσω μου ἐρχόμενος (with BN¹) without the article; SS has “he that cometh,” Origen varies. The testimony of B as to O following ε is sometimes untrustworthy. In i. 30 ὀπίσω μου ἔρχεται, the vb is indicative.

⁴ [2601 c] i. 26 “I baptize in water...,” i. 31 “For this cause came I baptizing in water...” The mention of “baptizing in the spirit” is assigned, not to the Baptist (as in the Synoptists) but to God, i. 33 “Upon whomsoever thou shalt see the spirit descending...this is he that is to baptize in the Holy Spirit.”

⁵ [2602 a] This happens on the third day. The account of the first day (i. 19—28) contains the Baptist’s negative testimony, ending with “one whom ye know not... the latchet of whose shoe I am not worthy to loose.” The second day (i. 29 “the morrow”) contains the first testimony to “the lamb of God,” which testimony, however, is not recorded to have produced any effect. The third day (i. 35 “on the morrow again”) brings a repetition of the testimony to “the lamb”: and this second testimony being uttered in the presence of two witnesses, who immediately become converts, results indirectly in the beginning of the Church of Christ upon earth.

Baptist's testimony may be said to end here. But there is an appeal to it later on in the section describing the close of his mission, where, after negation and antithesis—"I am not the Christ, I am his messenger"; "he, the bridegroom, must increase but I, the bridegroom's friend, must decrease"—there follows a remarkable instance of twofold repetition, "*He that cometh from above is above all. He that is from the earth, from the earth he is, and from the earth he speaketh: he that cometh from the heaven is above all*¹."

§ 8. Twofold repetition in Christ's words

[2603] In Christ's words, the twofold repetitions are for the most part confined to negative or comparatively rudimentary doctrine. The earliest of any importance is expressly said to refer to "earth." It describes the necessity of something more than mere baptism by water, iii. 3 "Except a man be born from above, he cannot see the kingdom of God," iii. 5 "Except a man be born from water and the Spirit (2573, 2612) he cannot enter into the kingdom of God"—concerning which statements and their context Jesus says, "If I told you earthly things and ye believe not, how will ye believe if I tell you heavenly things?" Another twofold protest in behalf of "the spirit" is in iv. 23—4, "the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth...they that worship him must worship in spirit and truth." The following refers to the resurrection, v. 25—8 "the hour cometh and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God and they that shall have heard shall live...the hour cometh when all that are in the tombs shall hear his voice and shall go forth."

[2604] The belief in Christ for His works' sake, being regarded in this Gospel as rudimentary², is naturally made the subject of twofold repetition, v. 36 "for the works that the Father hath given me that I may accomplish them, the very works that I do, bear witness concerning me," compared with x. 25 "the works that I do in the name of my Father, these bear witness concerning me." As regards the reduplication in xiv. 13—14 "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name this will I do...if ye shall ask [me] anything in my name this will I do," it may be intended as a preparation for a further doctrine in xv. 16 "that whatsoever ye may ask the Father in my name he may give it to you," and xvi. 23—4 "If ye ask the Father anything he will give it to you in my name. Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name. Ask and ye shall receive¹."

[2605] Further instances of twofold negative repetition, in Christ's words, occur as follows: v. 19, 30 "The Son can do, from himself, nothing," "I can do, from myself, *nothing*²"; v. 30, vi. 38 "I seek not mine own will but the will of him that sent me," "not that I may do mine own will but the will of him that sent me"; v. 34, 41 "But I receive not my witness from man," "I receive not glory from man," vii. 6, 8 "My time (καιρός) is not yet present," "My time is not yet fulfilled." The effect of a twofold repetition is produced both in vii. 34—6 and in viii. 21—2 because Christ first says, and the Jews then repeat, "Where I (ἐγώ) am (or, go) ye (ὑμεῖς) cannot come." Later on, Christ repeats the second of these sayings to the disciples, xiii. 33 "Ye shall seek me³, and even as I said to the Jews, 'Where I (ἐγώ) go, ye (ὑμεῖς) cannot come'—to you also I say it now (ἄρτι)."
Then, to Peter, He drops the emphatic pronouns, saying xiii. 36 "Where I go, thou canst not follow me for the present." All this implies that what had been said to the Jews in one sense is repeated to the disciples in another, which is explained to Peter. The following is an utterance of mere condemnation, x. 25—6 "I told you and ye believe not.....But ye believe not because ye are not of my sheep⁴."

² [2605 a] Note the emphasis laid on οὐδέν by its position at the end of the clause or sentence, ποιεῖν ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ οὐδέν, ποιεῖν ἀπ' ἑμαυτοῦ οὐδέν. The saying is repeated, without δύναμαι, in viii. 28 ἀπ' ἑμαυτοῦ ποιῶ οὐδέν, "from myself I do nothing."

³ [2605 b] To the Jews Christ had said, viii. 21 "Ye shall seek me and in your sin ye shall die." The disciples were to "seek" Jesus, after His departure, but in a different way (2545).

[2606] In Christ's words, the pleonastic repetition of a noun or verb may sometimes be sufficiently explained by the desire of emphasis as in x. 32 "Many deeds have I shewn unto you [and those] good...For which deed of [all] those do ye stone me?" The verb is clearly emphatic in vi. 63 "The words that I have spoken unto you—spirit they are and life they are (πνεῦμά ἐστιν καὶ ζωὴ ἐστιν)," x. 10 "that they may have life and abundantly may have [it]¹." It is interesting—and probably we are intended—to compare Christ's words, x. 18 "Authority have I to lay it [i.e. my life] down and authority have I again to take it," with Pilate's words, xix. 10 "authority have I to acquit thee and authority have I to crucify"—in view of (1593—4) the two different views of "authority" here contrasted. There is no pleonasm in the following, but the repetition of the noun (instead of using a pronoun) adds weight: iii. 20 "hateth the light and cometh not to the light," iv. 14 "whosoever shall drink of the water that I shall give him...but the water that I shall give him shall become...," xii. 47 "for I came not that I might judge the world but that I might save the world," with which compare iii. 17 "For God sent not the Son into the world that he might judge the world but that the world might be saved through him." In the last two or three instances mystical meaning may be intended.

§ 9. Twofold repetition in narrative

[2607] Twofold repetition in narrative may occasionally be intended to emphasize a disputed or doubtful fact, as in the Anointing, where some said that Christ's head was anointed² but John says xii. 3 "She anointed the feet of Jesus and wiped with her hair his feet." Emphasis is also laid on the piercing of Christ's side by a "soldier" thus, xix. 32 "There came therefore the soldiers...but, having come to Jesus...they brake not his legs but one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side." Or it may be used for clearness after a parenthesis as in ii. 9 "But when the master of the feast had tasted...the master of the feast calleth," or in scorn as in vii. 35 "Will he go to the scattered people of the Greeks and teach the Greeks?" It is manifestly emphatic in ii. 25 "he needed not that any should testify about the [nature of] man, for he knew of himself what was in the [nature of] man," and in the words of Thomas xx. 25 "and [unless] I put my finger...and put my hand." There is a twofold repetition in i. 20 "He confessed and denied not and confessed," and probably a pair of twofold repetitions with slight variations, in xix. 35 "And he that hath seen hath borne witness (μεμαρτύρηκεν) and real-and-true (ἀληθινή) is his witness (μαρτυρία), and he knoweth that he saith true (ἀληθῆ)." But on the whole the evangelist's tendency to twofold repetition appears not so much in words as in the insistence on parallelism in events, which is discussed later on (2646—9).

¹ [2606 a] In xii. 49 ἐντολὴν δέδωκεν τί εἴπω καὶ τί λαλήσω, the meaning seems to be, "what I should say [particularly, on each occasion] and what I should speak [generally, in proclaiming the Gospel]." Weight is added by the pleonastic repetition of τί, as well as by the two verbs. Comp. Rom. iii. 19 ὅσα ὁ νόμος λέγει τοῖς ἐν τῷ νόμῳ λαλεῖ, "whatsoever the Law says on any particular occasion it invariably proclaims to those who are in the pale of the Law."

§ 10. Twofold or threefold repetition

[2608] In Christ's words, there occurs the twice repeated statement (x. 11, 14) "I am the good shepherd." This describes a condition of conflict intended to prepare the way for victory—the shepherd contending against the wolf—and may be read as a twofold repetition or attestation. But the addition of (x. 11) "the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep" suggests a threefold repetition of "the good shepherd," as a separate phrase, implying a reference to the sacrifice of Christ, which would be regarded as (2588—9) "a holy matter," to be triply attested. So, too, the triple mention of the vine in xv. 1—5 "I am the true vine...if any man abide not in the vine...I am the vine"—these being the only instances of "vine" in the Fourth Gospel—suggests a triple attestation. And, if this is so with "good shepherd" and "vine," it is probably true about x. 24—9 "But he that entereth through the door...I am the door of the sheep...I am the door": and we are to regard the only other mention of "door" (in Christ's words) in this Gospel ("he that entereth not through the door...is a thief and a robber") as a negation, serving as a foil to a threefold attestation. With these must be compared the duality of viii. 12 ἐγὼ εἰμι τὸ φῶς τ. κόσμου, ix. 5 φῶς εἰμι τ. κόσμου supplemented by xii. 46 ἐγὼ φῶς εἰς τ. κόσμον ἐλήλυθα, and that of vi. 35, 48 "I am the bread of life," supplemented by vi. 51 "I am the bread that liveth."

[2609] The same possibility of various interpretation occurs in xii. 45 "he that beholdeth me beholdeth him that sent me." This, if taken with xiii. 20 "he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me," would suggest a twofold statement that the vision, and the reception, of the Messenger on earth, are to prepare the way for a vision, and a reception, of the Sender in heaven; but if the two are combined with xiv. 9 "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father"—the three passages suggest a threefold attestation. So, too, the command "Love one another" would be a twofold repetition if taken merely in xiii. 34 "A new command I give you that ye love one another even as I loved you that ye also love one another"; but it is probably to be taken as repeated a third time in xv. 12 "This is the commandment that is [peculiarly] my own that ye love one another even as I loved you" (see also 2612). On the other hand the statements xiv. 15, 23 "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments," "If a man love me he will keep my word," are rudimentary and repeated only twice¹.

[2610] In the Epistle, duality characterizes the passages that deal with earthly testimony. We may give the name "dual"—or "quadruple" but certainly not "triple"—to the attestation with which the Epistle opens, i. 1 "That which we have heard, that which we have seen (ἐωράκαμεν) with our eyes," followed by (ib.) "That which we gazed on (ἐθεασάμεθα) and our hands handled." Similarly ii. 12—13, containing a solemn testimony to all classes in the

[2609 β] In the following three clauses, describing Christ's legacy of "peace" (xiv. 27), the word "peace" is twice actually repeated, and a third repetition is suggested. In the first clause it is simply "peace," in the second "my peace." In the first clause the action is described as "leaving"; in the second, as "giving"; in the third, as "giving not as the world giveth"; and it is no longer διδωμι "I-give," but ἐγὼ δίδωμι "I give." It would be contrary to all rules of literature and good taste—and, we may almost say, of morality—to suppose that the writer deliberately wrote the sentence according to numerical canons. But the passage is one of the most beautiful instances of inspiration working under rule—like the rule of poetic metre for a true poet—rule that gives life and force and harmony to expression: "Peace I leave (ἀφίημι) unto you; the peace that is mine I-give (δίδωμι) unto you; not as the world giveth give I (ἐγὼ δίδωμι) unto you."

Church, repeats twice, to each, "I write," "I have written." It is true that in this Epistle the witness is notably threefold in v. 6—8: "This is he that came by water and blood, Jesus Christ, not in the water alone but in the water and in the blood; and the Spirit it is that witnesseth, because the Spirit is the truth. Because three are they that witness, the Spirit and the water and the blood, and the three make up the one." But even in this passage, the writer seems to indicate by his arrangement of the "three" that "the water" and "the blood" come first as representing the testimony of the life of Jesus on earth, and that "the spirit" comes afterwards as witnessing from heaven. The dual form of expression is naturally adopted while the writer is describing the witness of apostles and the manifestation that led to it, and while his mind rests, at the outset, on the dual aspect of the Christian message when the Son was drawing men to the Father and when "the Holy Spirit was not yet": (i. 2 foll.) "And the light (a) was manifested and (b) we have seen; and we (a) witness and (b) declare to you the life eternal, which (a) was with the Father and (b) was manifested to us: (3) what we have (a) heard and (b) seen, that we declare also to you, that ye too may have fellowship with us, and indeed our fellowship is with (a) the Father and with (b) his Son Jesus Christ.... (5) And this is the tidings that we (a) have heard from him and (b) declare to you, that (a) God is light and (b) darkness is not in him at all."

[2611] Returning to the Gospel we may say in conclusion that the general impression left on us by the form of its ordinary doctrine is that of twofold attestation¹. In statements made by our Lord

[2611 b] Ἀμὴν ἀμὴν occurs twenty-five times (ἀμὴν never) and is used in predictions (i. 51, xiii. 21, xiii. 38, xxi. 18) of good and of evil including the prediction of betrayal. It introduces (viii. 58, x. 7) "I am [he]" and "I am the door," and on the other hand (vi. 26) "Ye seek me...because ye have eaten of the loaves," and (viii. 34) "Everyone that doeth sin is a slave," and it is thrice used (iii. 3, 5, 11) in the Dialogue with Nicodemus. The facts suggest no special doctrine for which the phrase is reserved.

[2611 c] Ἀπεκρίθη (Ἰησοῦς) κ. εἶπεν, in its last three instances, is used where about Himself, the duality of "I am the good shepherd," "I am the light of the world," "I am the door," "I am the bread of life," "I am the vine," is supplemented in such a way as to suggest a trinity; but for the most part the doctrine is distinctly dual, especially in the teaching of the Baptist. That there should be passages in which the distinction is not clearly drawn is fit and natural in a work that expresses spiritual truth with dramatic yet natural vividness. A book made up of manifest twofold, threefold, and sevenfold repetitions, broken by regular and systematic variations, would be intolerably artificial. But the work we have before us betrays nothing that could fairly be called artificiality—at least in a Jew, trained to the study of the Bible in the literary school of Philo (though raised up above the narrower formalities of that school by the Spirit of Christ), and committing to paper some among many traditions of the Christian Church, with his paraphrases and explanations of them, according to the manner and pattern of the Hebrew Scriptures and Jewish Targums. One reason for duality of form may have been that he was profoundly impressed by the Lord's statement that His doctrines, without the Spirit, were "dark sayings." Hence perhaps, in a point of detail, the contrast between the Gospel and the Epistle as to the "blood and water" from the Cross. The Gospel says, "He that hath seen hath borne witness and true is his *witness*¹." The Epistle speaks of "water" and "blood" and "spirit." The latter suggests trinity; the former duality—because "the Holy Spirit was not yet."

there is some misunderstanding in the context, as where the Voice from heaven is taken by some to be "thunder," and Christ (xii. 30) explains that it came for the sake of the multitude. It also introduces the saying to Peter (xiii. 7) "What I do, thou knowest not now," and the answer to "Judas not Iscariot" (xiv. 23) who cannot understand how a manifestation can be made to the disciples and not to the world. At the outset of the Gospel it is used twice (i. 48, 50) in the Dialogue with Nathanael, once before the words (misunderstood) (ii. 19) "Destroy this temple," and thrice (iii. 3, 5, 10) in the Dialogue with Nicodemus, who is supposed not to understand even elementary truths. Subsequently it is used (iv. 10, 13) in the Dialogue with the Samaritan woman, who takes the Doctrine of Water literally, and (from vi. 26 to viii. 14) several times in discussions with literalising or hostile controversialists. The facts suggest that the phrase introduces elementary doctrine or explanation of misunderstanding.

[2612] It is obvious that a threefold repetition of the same saying, with little or no variation, and in the same context, would be monotonous and unimpressive, except in special circumstances where a refrain is intended, as in the threefold question to Peter, "Lovest thou me?" followed by the threefold precept "Feed my sheep": and, even there, the three utterances are not quite identical. Hence, if the writer introduces this form of doctrine in Christ's words, it is diversified in various ways. For example, the commandment "love one another" might be regarded as repeated twice as a commandment and once more as a sign (xiii. 34—5) "A new commandment give I you that ye love one another; even as I loved you that ye (emph.) also love one another: herein shall all know that ye are my disciples if ye have love among one another": but it is also repeated once again (2609) as a commandment. It has been pointed out (2608) that this variation so affects such sayings as "I am the good shepherd" that we may regard them as either twofold or threefold repetitions; and the same statement applies to the doctrine about new birth, which, though called an "earthly" doctrine from one point of view (iii. 12), may be regarded as "heavenly" since it concerns the Holy Spirit (iii. 3—7) "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born from above...Except a man be born from water and the spirit...Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must *be born from above*¹." In the prediction of the suffering of the Good Shepherd, the monotony of a repetition of "I lay down my life for the sheep" is avoided by dropping "for the sheep" in the second clause, and "my life for the sheep" in the third, and by substituting for them phrases suggesting the resurrection and the spontaneousness of the sacrifice (x. 15—18) "I lay down my life for the sheep...For this cause doth my Father love me because I lay down my life that I may receive it again...No man hath taken it from me, but I lay it down of myself." The result is a threefold repetition of nothing but "I lay down": yet the meaning is clear and the threefold effect is retained.

[2613] A triple effect is imparted to a long saying of Christ in the following passage by the questioning of the disciples and the explanation of their Master: xvi. 16—19 “A little, and ye no longer behold me, and again a little, and ye shall see me... What is this that he saith to us, A little, and ye behold me not, and again a little, and ye shall see me?... Jesus... said to them, Question ye with one another concerning this that I said unto you, A little, and ye behold me not, and again a little, and ye shall see me?” In the following, which states the absolute knowledge (οἶδα) of the Father possessed by the Son, a third clause is introduced negatively: viii. 55 “Ye have no understanding of (ἐγνώκατε) him. But I know (οἶδα) him. And, if I say I know (οἶδα) him not, I shall be a liar like unto you. But I know (οἶδα) him¹.” As in the Dialogue with Nicodemus a triple repetition of the verb “to be born” was accompanied with a double repetition of other circumstances, so there is a triple repetition of “he that feedeth,” with variations, in the following: vi. 54—7 “He that feedeth on my flesh and drinketh my blood hath life eternal... he that feedeth on my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me... he that feedeth on me, he (emph.) shall live on account of me.”

[2614] Concerning the Wind or Breath or Spirit Christ says (iii. 8) that man (1) hears its voice, but knows not (2) whence it comes, and (3) whither it goes. This may refer to (1) the work, (2) the origin, and (3) the object of the Holy Spirit, and may suggest a threefold aspect of it. Certainly the Spirit's “convicting” influence is triply described later on as referring to (xvi. 8) “sin,” “righteousness,” and “judgment.” It is also thrice mentioned (xiv. 17, xv. 26, xvi. 13) as “the spirit of truth.” And in the following passage—along with an implied threefold statement that what the Spirit will “declare” comes from Him who is speaking, indicated by the thrice repeated “me” or “mine”—the words “He shall declare unto you” occur as a triple refrain (xvi. 13—16) “For he shall not speak from himself, but what he heareth that shall he speak and things to come (1) he shall declare unto you. He shall glorify me, for he shall take from mine and (2) he shall declare unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine. For this cause said I that he taketh from mine and (3) he shall declare unto you.” The thought of the Spirit is connected with the thought of unity—unity both in the being of God and in the Church ; and the prayer for this, which is uttered, first for the Church as a whole, and then for the Apostles in particular, is thrown (in both cases) into a threefold form (xvii. 21) “ That all may be one :—even as (1) thou, Father, art in me, and (2) I in thee, that (3) they, also, may be in us,” (xvii. 23) “ that they may be one as we are one :—(1) I in them, and (2) thou in me, that (3) they may be perfected into one¹.” Negative doctrine would naturally be seldom expressed with threefold repetition ; but when it points to the divine unity an exception may be expected, as in viii. 16 “ I am not alone,” viii. 29 “ He [i.e. the Father] hath not left me alone,” xvi. 32 “ And I am not alone because the Father is with me.”

[2615] As regards the use by the evangelist (in his own person) of threefold repetition, it is most prominent in the Prologue, which begins with a triple mention of “ the Word ” in the same sentence, commented on above (2594). The last words of the Prologue (i. 18) are not quite certain, but they are probably—as has been maintained above (1964)—“ God no one hath seen at any time. Only begotten, God (R.V. Son), HE THAT IS in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.” If so, instead of one name (R.V. txt) “ the only begotten Son,” we may suppose the writer to mean two names, making a total of three : (1) “ Only begotten,” (2) “ God,” (3) “ He that is in the bosom of the Father.” These will correspond to the three clauses in the first verse : (1) “ In the beginning,” (2) “ with God,” (3) “ God.” This is far more symmetrical than the view that the Prologue begins with three clauses describing the Word, and ends with two.

[2616] The act of “ lifting up the eyes ” is thrice attributed to Jesus. Once also He uses the phrase as a precept, iv. 35 “ Lift up your eyes (ἐνάρπατε τ. ὁ.) and behold the lands how that they are white for harvest." This is obviously a spiritual act. Philo (on Gen. xviii. 2) treats it as such when he describes how Abraham, seated at the door of his tent, "lifted up his eyes" and beheld the three divine Persons to whom he ministered and gave bread (1608). It is a commonplace in Jewish tradition that whatever Abraham does in service to God, God will do, in return, to Abraham's seed. Most appropriately, therefore, before the Feeding of the Five Thousand, John says that the Logos (vi. 3—5) "sat" with His disciples on the mountain¹ and "lifted up [his] eyes (ἐπάρας οὖν τ. ὁ.) and beheld that a great multitude was coming unto him," i.e. He sees the spiritual harvest, the seed of Abraham after the spirit, the future Church: Then, as Abraham gave bread to the three Persons, so He gives bread to Abraham's children.

¹ [2614 b] To these might have been added Christ’s triple repetition of the doctrine that “ the Son of man (or, I) must be lifted up ” in iii. 14, viii. 28, xii. 32, the last being “ if I be lifted up from the earth I will draw all men unto me.”

[2614 c] There remain threefold repetitions of words partly by Christ partly by the evangelist. Of these, εὐχαριστέω (vi. 11, 23, xi. 41) is probably accidental. But Jn’s statement that Christ (xi. 33) “ troubled (ἐτάραξεν) himself,” and (xiii. 21) “ was troubled in spirit,” may be intended to be read along with (xii. 27) “ Now is my soul troubled,” as a threefold repetition (920). There is also His doctrine of “ the way,” introduced with the words (xiv. 4) “ Ye know the way,” to which Thomas answers, “ How can we know the way ? ” whereon Jesus replies “ I am the way, and the truth, and the life,” which has decidedly the effect of a threefold repetition.

[2617] On the second occasion it is said (xi. 41) "He lifted [his] eyes upward (ᾤρεν τ. ὁ. ἄνω) and said, 'Father, I thank thee that thou didst hearken to me...,' " before the raising of Lazarus; and, on the third (xvii. 1) "These things spake Jesus, and, having lifted up his eyes to the heaven (ἐπάρας τ. ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ εἰς τ. οὐρανόν), he said, 'Father, the hour hath come...'" In Isaiah (li. 6) "Lift up your eyes to the heavens and look upon the earth beneath" introduces a contrast between the eternal righteousness of God and the perishableness of men, and Ibn Ezra says (though dissenting) "Philosophers derive from this verse the doctrine of the immortality of the soul of man." Having regard to the Scriptural use of the phrase, to the comments of Philo, and to the metaphorical use of it as a precept by Christ, we are justified in concluding that John attaches a spiritual meaning to the thrice repeated act of our Lord, and that the last is regarded as the climax of the three. No outward action, it is true, accompanies the third utterance; but it prepares the way for the sacrifice on the cross².

² [2617 a] It may be noted that θεᾶσθαι is twice applied to Jesus, once (i. 38) when He sees the two disciples "following," once (vi. 5) when He sees "that a great multitude is coming to him." The two disciples are the firstfruits of the [2618] The word κράζω, "cry aloud," applied to our Lord by Matthew alone (or possibly by Matthew and Mark)¹ is applied to Him thrice by John on three solemn occasions. It has been pointed out (1752 a—f) that there may have been various traditions as to the Messiah's not "crying aloud," based on Isaiah xlii. 2, which may have induced evangelists to refrain from assigning this act to Him at any time, or at all events till the "victory" consummated in the crucifixion. The first Johannine mention of it applied to Christ is in vii. 28, "Jesus then cried aloud in the temple teaching and saying, Ye know both me and ye know whence I am; and I am not come of myself, but he is true that sent me, whom ye (emph.) know not." This clearly "witnesses" to the Father. The second is in vii. 37, "In the last day, the great one, of the Feast, stood Jesus, and cried aloud saying, If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink. He that believeth in me—as said the Scripture—rivers from his belly shall flow forth, [yea,] of living water." This "witness"—the evangelist himself tells us in the next verse—"he spake concerning the Spirit." The third and last (xii. 44—50) introduces the final public utterance of Jesus on finding Himself rejected by His countrymen, and it is a series of statements concerning Himself:—that He represents the Father; that He has come as the Light of the World; that His word will judge those who reject Him; and that His utterances are the words of the Father. Of these three utterances we may say, roughly, that they severally witness to the Father, the Holy Spirit, and the Son. Thus the peculiar nature of the subject-matter supplies, in itself, some kind of probability that the author deliberately chose this special and unusual word (κράζω) to emphasize the public threefold witness of Jesus to a "holy matter."

[2619] Corresponding to the threefold "crying aloud" of Christ in His preaching of the Gospel we might naturally expect to find a threefold manifestation of Himself after the Resurrection: and this is stated as a fact (xxi. 14) "This is now the third time that Jesus was manifested to the disciples (having been raised from the dead).” Having previously mentioned one manifestation to Mary and two to the disciples, John might have said, “This is now the fourth time.” But presumably he lays stress on “to the disciples” here, meaning that it was “the third” to them collectively, excluding manifestations to single persons. The first Epistle to the Corinthians enumerates three manifestations to collective witnesses thus, (xv. 6—8) “He appeared to Cephas, then to (1) the Twelve; then he appeared to (2) five hundred brethren at once;...then he appeared to James; then to (3) the apostles all [together] (τοῖς ἀποστόλοις πᾶσιν). But last of all he appeared as unto one born out of due time, yea, even to me.” If both writers were to be supposed to have known all the manifestations, and to be here enumerating all the manifestations they knew, it would follow that the manifestation here mentioned by John in which Christ sends forth Peter and his companions to “feed the sheep” is identical with the one described by Paul as being “to the apostles all [together].” But John mentions only seven disciples as being present.

Church; the Five Thousand are a type, though an elementary one, of the Church as a whole. There is, therefore, an inward similarity between the two scenes, however much they outwardly differ. βλέπω is only applied once to Christ, and then describes the Son (v. 19) "noting" the acts of the Father in heaven. Philo, too (1607), uses the same word to describe the Eldest Son "noting" the acts of the Father "as patterns for His own action."

[2620] More probably there were a vast number of manifestations during the period described by Luke in the Acts (i. 3) as one of “forty” days: and John uses the phrase “this is now the third time” in order to describe that particular one (out of a very large number) which he intends to place third and last, as being the crowning manifestation (apart from the one to Mary Magdalene)¹. In confining himself to “three” manifestations, he would be following Hebrew precedent, as to phrases about Jehovah making His face to shine on Israel. This refrain is thrice repeated in one of the Psalms², and the phrase occurs in the Blessing of Israel, which contains the name of Jehovah in threefold repetition³. In view of these circumstances it is probably not accidental that the evangelist, besides inserting "third," mentions the verb φανερώω thrice, in connexion with Christ's resurrection, xxi. 1—14 "Jesus manifested himself again to the disciples on the sea of Tiberias. Now he manifested himself thus.....This is the third time that Jesus manifested himself to the disciples." How simple, in the first verse, to have written merely, "Jesus manifested himself again thus...Tiberias," using the verb once! How can we possibly acquit the writer of that "tautology" which Philo so gravely rebukes—unless he wrote with a sense of the spiritual meaning and weight conveyed by this threefold repetition?

[2621] The following passage contains a curious instance of the threefold repetition of a mere pronoun, which, in an ordinary writer, would naturally be set down to mere slovenliness of style:—xii. 16 "These things (ταῦτα) his disciples recognised not at the first. But, when Jesus was glorified, then they remembered that these things had been written concerning him, and [that] they did these things to him." What are "these things"? The previous narrative describes Jesus entering into Jerusalem riding on an ass: and it might be supposed by one familiar with the Synoptists—who say that the disciples found the ass and (according to Luke) placed Jesus upon it—that John refers to this action of the disciples. But John says expressly, "Jesus, having found an ass, sat on it." Consequently "these things" must refer to the fact that the multitude welcomed Jesus as king in the words of the Psalms (cxviii. 25—6) crying "Hosanna, blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Now in the LXX of this Psalm "these things," or its equivalent, occurs in a very peculiar form. The whole of the Psalm may be regarded as Messianic, and part of it is quoted by all the Synoptists as being uttered by Jesus soon after the Entry, "The stone that the builders rejected...." Then follow words, omitted by Luke, but quoted by Mark and Matthew as follows; "This (αὕτη) is from the Lord¹"—meaning "this thing" or "these things," where the evangelists (following the LXX) curiously reproduce a Hebrew feminine use of the demonstrative pronoun.

[2622] Westcott, at this point, reminds his readers that (1) the cry of Hosanna is from Ps. cxviii. 25, and adds, on "these things," sentences suggest a blessing in heaven fulfilled upon earth: and the threefold repetition suggests that the words contain "a holy matter" (2588—9).

the remark, "(2) The triple repetition of the words is to be noticed." But he does not connect the two statements. Schöttgen, however, calls attention to the fact that the Hebrew feminine pronoun occurring here is interpreted by the Cabbalists in a symbolical sense as referring to the Messiah, and he quotes a very large number of passages in which the pronoun is similarly symbolized¹. But in Greek the feminine is so unintelligible that even Origen misunderstands it and refers it to the preceding κεφαλὴ², and perhaps the difficulty of it was the reason, or one of the reasons, that induced Luke to omit it, and to substitute something about a "stone" of a very different kind. The facts, taken as a whole, point to the conclusion that there was early difficulty as to the meaning of the words "This (αὕτη) was from the Lord"—quoted from the Psalm that was connected on the one hand (through the cry of the multitude) with the "Hosanna" in the Entry into Jerusalem, and, on the other (through our Lord's quotation about "the stone that the builders rejected"), with Christ's doctrine about the rejection of the Messiah or about the Stone of Israel. Luke at all events omits both the cry "Hosanna" (1816 b) and the difficult "this" or "these things." John (besides following Mark and Matthew in retaining "Hosanna") paraphrases and amplifies an explanation of "these things" that contains a latent symbolism. See 2757.

[2623] Another parallel instance of threefold repetition, as to a fulfilment of prophecy, only touched on by Mark and Matthew and given quite differently by Luke, refers to the "sponge" full of vinegar given to Christ at the crucifixion. John introduces this as part of the total "accomplishment" (2115) of the will of the Father by the Son "in order that the Scripture might be perfected" and as prefaced by a special utterance of our Lord, "I thirst." Then he says xix. 29—30 "A vessel lay [near] full of vinegar. A sponge therefore full of the vinegar...they brought near to his mouth. When therefore he received the vinegar Jesus said, It is finished...³."

¹ [2622 a] Schöttg. ii. 45, "de Cabbala Exegetica," places Ps. cxviii. 23 first in the list of these interpretations. Ib. p. 140 places Dan. ii. 35 (on "the stone") first, and then (after Ezek. i. 28) Ps. cxviii. 23. It will be remembered that Lk. xx. 18, instead of the quotation about αὕτη, has "everyone that falleth on this stone," which W.H. also bracket in Mt. xxi. 44.

² [2622 b] Origen (on Mt. xxi. 42) Huet i. 468 A. Field (ad loc.) refers only to modern commentators, not to Origen, but calls the explanation "objectionable."

§ 12. Sevenfold repetition

[2624] The number "seven" occurs in Revelation more often than in all the rest of N.T. taken together. In the Fourth Gospel, which was probably written by some one connected with the author of Revelation, "seven" never occurs at all (though fairly frequent in the Synoptists). But the Gospel is permeated structurally with the idea of "seven," as might be expected from one accepting the tradition about (Rev. iii. 1) "the seven spirits of God." John records only seven "signs," a small number as compared with the greater number of the "mighty works" recorded by the Synoptists. Again in xii. 1 "Jesus, six days before the passover, came to Bethany," Westcott says, "St John appears to mark the period as the new Hexaemeron, a solemn period of 'six days,' the time of the new Creation. His Gospel begins and closes with a sacred week." But an ordinary reader might easily overlook the "sacred week" here, and still more easily that at the outset. For there it is (we may almost say) carefully disguised from those who are not on the alert for mysteries by the phrases (i. 29) "on the morrow," (i. 35) "on the morrow," (i. 43) "on the morrow"; (ii. 1) "on the third day": and the reader has to go through an addition of 1 + 1 + 1 + 3, before he realises that "those who see" are intended to "see" here a solemn period of six days of spiritual creation. Again, a searching analysis of the work is needed before one realises that the witness to Christ is, as Westcott shews again, of a sevenfold character¹.

[2625] As soon as this symbolism is recognised, we are led to enquire whether it may not be also latent elsewhere. Thus, the words I AM, though in their full sense occurring only once (viii. 58) are repeated elsewhere in Christ's words five times (directly or indirectly) before the arrest of Jesus (iv. 26, vi. 20, viii. 24, viii. 28, xiii. 19),¹ so as to make up six; and then at the arrest we have a single threefold testimony as follows:—xviii. 5—8 "He saith unto Antipas) xxiii. 36. Jn, alone of the Gospels, mentions "Scripture" in connexion with this incident. Very early writers connect "gall" with the "vinegar" in such a way as to shew that they regarded the action as predicted in Ps. lxix. 21. Jn does not mention "gall," and leaves it open to suppose that he may have included in "Scripture" the words Ps. xlii. 2 "My soul is athirst."

them 'I am [he]...' (6) When therefore he said unto them 'I am [he]...' (8) Jesus answered, I said unto you 'I am [he].'" The supposition of a sevenfold intention is somewhat confirmed by the fact that "I am" certainly occurs seven times in the sevenfold representation of His relationship to mankind: (1) vi. 35 etc. "I am the Bread of Life"; (2) viii. 12 etc. "I am the Light of the World"; (3) x. 7 etc. "I am the door"; (4) x. 11 etc. "I am the Good Shepherd"; (5) xi. 25 "I am the Resurrection and the Life"; (6) xiv. 6 "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life"; (7) xv. 1 etc. "I am the True Vine." Again, in the last words of Jesus, when He is reviewing the whole of His teaching, He uses seven times (xiv. 25; xv. 11, xvi. 1, 4, 6, 25, 33) the expression "These things have I spoken to you (ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν)" (which occurs nowhere else in the Gospel¹), and also, in connexion with promises (xiv. 13, 14, 26, xv. 16, xvi. 23, 24, 26), the phrase "in my name." There is also fair evidence for a sevenfold repetition of εἶν in the expression of the divine unity in the words of Jesus, first (x. 30) "I and the Father are one"; and then in prayer that men may be one in that unity (xvii. 11, 21 (twice)², 22 (twice), 23). Again, whereas the noun "love" is not mentioned at all by Mark and only once by Matthew and Luke, John uses it seven times, and always in the words of Jesus³. The promise "thou shalt, or, ye shall, see" occurs also seven times, almost always in reference to "glory" or resurrection⁴, and so does the prediction "the hour is coming"⁵.

[2626] In concluding the instances of repetition, we may add that the "Law" is mentioned six times (vii. 19 (twice), 23, viii. 17, x. 34, xv. 25) in the words of Jesus, an imperfect number as appropriate to the imperfect law as is the number "six" applied to the water-pots which were (ii. 6) for "the purification of the Jews." We

² [2625 b] The evidence of C for the omission of εἶν is here discredited by the fact that it omits it previously (against all the MSS.) missing the meaning.

might have expected perhaps that the Paraclete would have been mentioned "three" or "seven" times. But the mentions are four. Of these, the fourth is negative, xvi. 7 "If I go not away, the Paraclete will not come unto you," and possibly this may be intended to be excluded from the total. Westcott (p. xiv) reckons as five the quotations from Scripture in Christ's words; but if we add viii. 17 "It is written in your law, The witness of two men is true," the number is six. If we also add xix. 28 "In order that the Scripture might be perfected he saith 'I thirst,'" the number is seven¹.

[2627] What was said as to threefold must be repeated as to sevenfold repetition. Several instances of the latter are certain, but some are doubtful, e.g. the repetition of "love" which perhaps, instead of being taken as one group of seven, might be grouped as two pairs of three positive statements with one negation. The same word may be differently regarded by the author in different circumstances. Φανερώω applied to the Son in the Gospel is repeated thrice. But when applied to the Father and to the Son in the Epistle it is repeated seven times. Making every allowance for doubtful cases and different aspects, we find enough to assure us that the author of this Gospel was largely influenced by a habit of sevenfold grouping that affected his whole narrative as well as particular words and phrases in it.

¹ [2626 a] In xix. 28, W.H. print "I thirst" as a quotation from Ps. lxi. 21 εἰς τὴν δίψαν μου ἐπότισάν με ὁ θεός. But Jn may contemplate also Ps. xlii. 2 ἐδίψησεν ἡ ψυχὴ μου. The five quotations mentioned by Westcott are vi. 45 (Is. liv. 13), vii. 38 ("Even as the Scripture said, 'River of water...,'" on which Westcott remarks "there is no exact parallel. The reference is probably general"), x. 34 (Ps. lxxxii. 6), xiii. 18 (Ps. xli. 9), xv. 25 (Ps. xxxv. 19 and Ps. lxi. 4). Westcott is justified in excluding i. 51 ("the angels of God ascending.") on the ground that "Scripture," "law," "written," etc. do not occur in the context. But I do not understand why he includes vii. 38 and excludes viii. 17.

CHAPTER III

CONNEXION OF SENTENCES

§ 1. Self-corrections

[2628] One occasional Johannine characteristic, which might be alleged as being incompatible with the view that the author paid much attention to words or aimed at strict accuracy, is that he occasionally sets down what he himself, by subsequently repeating it accurately, admits to be inaccurate, e.g. iii. 32—3 “No one receiveth his testimony. He that [hath] received his testimony [hath] set his seal [to this] that God is true,” viii. 15—16 “Ye judge according to the flesh, I judge no one. Yea, and if I judge, my judgment is real and true.” Somewhat different is iv. 1—2 “When therefore the Lord recognised that the Pharisees [had] heard [the saying] that ‘Jesus is making more disciples and baptizing [more] than John’—and yet Jesus himself did not baptize, but his disciples [did].” This last statement may be defended as strictly accurate. The writer tells us, not what Jesus did, but what the Pharisees heard that He was doing—a very different thing. But this illustrates the evangelist’s way of putting before his readers the popular view, or roughly accurate view, and then correcting it. And this may explain iii. 33. In comparison with the world-wide acceptance that might have been expected, it might be said that “no one” accepted the testimony of the Logos. So, as to viii. 16, Christ came not to judge but to save the world: yet indirectly He would necessarily judge those that rejected Him, in so far as any moral ideal “judges” those that behold it and reject it.

¹ [2628 a] W.H. have βαπτίζει [ἡ] Ἰωάννης, but the omission of Η may be expl. by the similarity of ΗΗ coming together.

[2629] In this last passage there may have been a desire to subordinate the literal view of Christ as the future Judge, seated on the clouds of heaven, in order to give more prominence to (1581—5, 1714, 1859) the righteousness and present power of divine judgment. And this indicates that John's other so-called "in-accuracies" are really deliberate. The Pauline Epistles in various phrases describe "all" mankind as "concluded in unbelief," and John, in effect, may desire to say the same thing when he speaks of "no one" receiving the testimony of the Logos¹. Possibly, too, the evangelist was moved by the fact that Christ Himself frequently expressed a truth briefly and broadly at first and then "narrowed it down" afterwards. This manner of speaking is at all events manifest when He says "I go not up to this feast," and yet "went" (only not after the manner of "going up" expected by His brethren)², and "Ye will leave me alone and yet I am *not alone*³," and "My teaching is *not mine*⁴," and when He first says, concerning the Paraclete, "He will take of mine," and then explains that He has said "mine" because "All that the Father hath is *mine*⁵."

[2630] As compared with the first and the third of Christ's utterances about "requesting⁶" the Father (xiv. 16 καὶ ἐρωτήσω τὸν πατέρα καὶ ἄλλον παράκλητον δώσει ὑμῖν and xvii. 9 ἐγὼ περὶ αὐτῶν ἐρωτῶ) there is some difficulty in a second one (xvi. 26 ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου αἰτήσεσθε, καὶ οὐ λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι ἐγὼ ἐρωτήσω⁷ τὸν πατέρα περὶ ὑμῶν· αὐτὸς γὰρ ὁ πατήρ φιλεῖ ὑμᾶς). The first says "I will request the Father and he will give you another Paraclete," the third, addressed to the Father, says "I request concerning them," i.e. the disciples, the second, "I say not to you that I will request the Father concerning you, for the Father of himself loveth you." But if the context be examined, it will appear that our Lord is distinguishing between two stages of spiritual development for the disciples. He first says that, if the disciples love Him, they will keep His commandments even though they may have momentarily deserted Him, and He will "request" the Father to give them another Paraclete. Then He leads them to a higher stage, xvi. 23—6 "In that day ye shall request nothing from me.... These things have I spoken to you in proverbs"—which we might perhaps call metaphors, or parables—"the hour cometh when I shall no longer speak to you in proverbs but shall announce to you plainly about the Father. In that day ye shall ask-for-gifts (αἰτήσεσθε) in my name, and I say not [now] to you that I will request the Father about you; for the Father of himself loveth you...." Here He speaks of what He will not do after the Resurrection and after the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. And this is quite compatible with the fact that just before His arrest—while the disciples are still in the stage of "dark sayings" and without the Spirit—He pours forth one last "request" for them¹.

⁷ [2630 b] Chrys. reads οὐκ ἐρωτήσω and so does Cramer. SS has "I say not unto you that I will beseech my Father—but my Father himself hath loved you," a has "et ego rogabo propter vos."

[2630 d] Ἐρωτάω, in Alexandrian Greek of the 1st and later centuries, very freq. means "I ask whether you are pleased to do so and so," and is used in invitations to dinner and polite requests generally (Oxyr. Pap. i. no. 110 and 111 etc.). Hence ἐρωτηθεῖς (Oxyr. Pap. ii. no. 269) (perh. literally "being asked what your pleasure is") means "please" (A.D. 57). Comp. ib. i. no. 113 ἐρωτηθεῖς εὖ ποιήσεις ἀγοράσεις "I beg you to be good enough to...buy," ἐρωτηθεῖς ἀγόρασον, "I beg you to buy" (2nd century), iv. no. 744 ἐρωτῶ σε κ. παρακαλῶ σε (B.C. 1) etc.

[2630 e] From classical Gk no instances of ἐρωτάω, "ask a boon," are given by Steph., but the germ of it may perh. be traced in Eurip. Phenissæ 15, where the childless Laius ἐλθὼν ἐρωτᾷ Φοῖβον ἐξαίτεῖ θ' ἅμα i.e. he not only asks Apollo whether it is the divine will that he should have children, but also asks for the boon. There is a close connexion between "Is it thy will?" and "Let it be thy will." Jn uses αἰτέω concerning the disciples "asking" (not concerning Christ, except in the words of the Samaritan Woman iv. 9 (act.) and Martha xi. 22 (mid.)) but ἐρωτάω concerning the Son when He describes Himself as "requesting" that the Father's good will may be fulfilled for the Church (xiv. 16, xvi. 26, xvii. 9 (bis), 15, 20).

[2630 f] The distinction apparently drawn in xvi. 26 between αἰτήσεσθε and ἐρωτήσω invites comparison with 1 Jn v. 16 ἐάν τις ἴδῃ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ἁμαρτάνοντα ἁμαρτίαν μὴ πρὸς θάνατον, αἰτήσῃ, καὶ δώσει αὐτῷ ζωὴν, τοῖς ἁμαρτάνουσιν μὴ πρὸς

θάνατον. ἔστιν ἁμαρτία πρὸς θάνατον. οὐ περὶ ἐκείνης λέγω ἵνα ἐρωτήσῃ. This is preceded by the statement "If we ask a gift (αἰτώμεθα) according to his will he heareth us. And if we know that he heareth us [as to] whatsoever we ask as a gift (αἰτώμεθα), we know that we have our (lit.) askings [the things] that we have asked from him (ἐχομεν τὰ αἰτήματα ἃ ἡτήκαμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ)." It would be pedantry to express in a translation intended for general readers the precise differences between αἰτέω, αἰτοῦμαι, and ἐρωτάω: but it would be an insult to the writer to suppose that he did not discriminate between them. The impression left on the reader is that ἐρωτάω means asking with a question as to what God's will may be, "if it be thy will," "if it be possible."

[2630 g] If that is the distinction in Jn, the meaning of 1 Jn v. 16 (b) may be, "There is a sin [that tends] toward death. I am not [now] speaking about that, in order that he should ask [if it be possible, that it may be forgiven, or stopped before it be too late]." In other words, the writer distinguishes between two classes of sins. About one class of sins he says, in effect, λέγω ἵνα αἰτήσῃς. About the other—which would require ἐρώτησις not αἴτησις—he does not say λέγω ἵνα μὴ ἐρωτήσῃς. He simply says οὐ λέγω ἵνα ἐρωτήσῃς, "I am not at this moment enjoining such an ἐρώτησις, I am not now talking about that."

[2630 h] Comp. Hermas Vis. iii. 10. 1—6 ἡρώτων ἵνα μοι ἀποκαλύψῃ... ἕτερον δὲ σε ἐπερωτήσαι ἵνα σοι ἀποκαλυφθῇ... πᾶσα ἐρώτησις ταπεινοφροσύνης χρήξει... τὶ σὺ ὑπὸ χεῖρα αἰτείς ἀποκαλύψεις ἐν δεήσει; βλέπε μήποτε πολλὰ αἰτούμενος βλάβης σου τὴν σάρκα, where ἐρωτᾶν ἵνα expresses "request" for a revelation, and this "request" is afterwards called an "asking" or an "urgent asking." If we had before us the whole Christian literature of 50—150 A.D. we should probably find many such distinctions between verbs of praying. For example, δέομαι is never used by Mk, Jn, Heb., Pet., Jas, and Rev. Παρακαλέω, to mean "beseeching the Lord" (as in 2 Cor. xii. 8), is very rare in N.T. (apart from "beseeching" Christ to heal etc. in the Gospels). Jn consistently represents the Son, when praying to the Father, as ἐρωτῶν, not προσευχόμενος, nor δέόμενος, nor αἰτῶν, nor αἰτούμενος, nor παρακαλῶν. It is true that the Epistle says (1 Jn ii. 1) "If any man sin, we have a Paraclete"—("one called in to aid," "advocate," 1720 k)—"with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous"; but this does not mean that the Paraclete "beseeches (παρακαλεῖ) the Father. The Johannine doctrine is that the Son, when on earth, offered "requests" to the Father, but that, in heaven, "request" became unmeaning in the unity between the Father and the Son.

[2630 i] Westcott (on 1 Jn v. 16) says, "It is interesting to notice that ἐρωτᾶν is used in this sense of Christian prayer for Christians in a very early inscription in the Roman Catacombs: ΖΗΘΕ ΕΝ ΚΩ ΚΑΙ ΕΡΩΤΑ ΥΠΕΡ ΗΜΩΝ (Northcote and Brownlow, Roma Sotteranea, ii. 159)." It is much to be regretted that Westcott neither adds the evidence shewing that this inscription is "very early," nor gives any indication as to the rarity or frequency of ἐρωτάω in this sense in other "very early" inscriptions. I have not been able to find in Boeckh more than the following, which may be the one he has in view, "9673 Romae lapis nuper repertus in coemeterio Callisti. Edidit Rénier apud Perretum Les catacombes de Rome vi. p. 28 et 178, qui habet a Bonnettyo Annales de philosophie chrétienne iv. série, tom. ix. p. 111, quem librum inspicere mihi non licuit. Versus duos extremos citat etiam Wiseman Fabiola p. 147." The inscription is κατ[αθεσις] τη προ γ[α]λ[ανδων] ιουν[ιων] Αυγενδε ζησαις εν κω και ερωτα υπερ ημων. Boeckh makes no further remarks. Κατάθεσις, here abbreviated as κατ, is not given by Steph., L. S., or Sophocles, in the sense of "interment"—which it seems to have

§ 2. Parentheses

[2631] When a clause with “therefore (οὖν)” follows a parenthesis, the “therefore” ought to look back beyond the parenthesis to some preceding statement, e.g. iv. 7—9 “Jesus saith to her, ‘Give me to drink’ (for his disciples had gone away into the city to buy food). The Samaritan woman therefore saith unto him....” Here οὖν means “in consequence of Christ’s request.” But, if we remove the marks of parenthesis, it might seem that the woman uttered this because the disciples had gone away, and it is perhaps partly because of this ambiguity, and partly because of a feeling that the chronological order should be kept, that SS rearranges the whole text as follows:—

iv. 6—9 (Gk)

“Now (δέ) there was there Jacob’s spring. Jesus therefore... sat...over the spring. It was about the sixth hour. There cometh a woman from Samaria to draw water. Jesus saith to her, Give me to drink.—For his disciples had gone away into the city to buy food.... The woman of Samaria therefore saith to him, How dost thou—being a Jew—ask drink from me...?”

iv. 6—9 (SS)

“Now there was there Jacob’s spring of water, and Jesus came [and] sat over the spring.....And his disciples had entered that town that they might buy themselves food; and when Jesus sat down it was about the sixth hour, and a certain woman had come from Samaria to draw water. Jesus saith to her, Give me water to drink. That Samaritan woman saith to him Lo, thou art a Jew; how askest thou me for water to drink...?”

Here the Syriac once omits “therefore” and once renders it by “and.” It also connects with the context the detached or parenthetical “it was about the sixth hour” by means of a “when.” But the most important change is that SS places the parenthesis about the departure of the disciples earlier, in its chronological order.

here, and in 9598, 9610, 9649, 9651, 9660, 9663, 9675, 9831 (comp. 9661 κατεῖθη). It occurs also in Oxyr. Pap. 475. 31 “burial.” There are some hundreds of Christian sepulchral inscriptions given by Boeckh in the adjacent pages, and I have been unable to find any other that has ἐρώτα. It should be added that κατέθεσις generally occurs at or near the end of an epitaph (except where the epitaph states nothing but the fact of κατέθεσις and the date) and not, as here, at the beginning. If genuine, ἐρώτα would seem to be quite exceptional like μέμνησο [τοῦ σοῦ πατέρος] ib. 9865.

[2632] The arrangement of SS is chronological, but it is not Johannine. John does not accumulate his descriptions of scenery and circumstance at the beginning of a scene as in a stage direction, but prefers to give them in parentheses, each in its turn as it is wanted. Thus, after the words of Christ's mother, "Do whatsoever he may say unto you," John inserts "Now there were there stone waterpots...holding two measures or three"—but not till the insertion is made absolutely necessary as a preparation for Christ's following words, "Fill the waterpots with water¹." Again, it is not till after Christ's exclamation "I thirst," that we read "A vessel lay near full of vinegar." A sponge, therefore, full of the vinegar...they brought near to his mouth. When therefore he received the vinegar, Jesus said, *It is finished*²." In these passages, "the waterpots" and "the vinegar" would be unintelligible without what we may call the immediately preceding and parenthetical stage direction³.

³ [2632 a] SS is wanting for these two passages. But, so far as the faithful representation of Johannine connexion of sentences depends—as it does very largely—upon the faithful representation of the Johannine οὖν, we must pronounce SS worthless, as may be seen from its renderings of οὖν in ii. 18 om., ii. 20 om., ii. 22 "but," iii. 25 "now," iv. 1 "now," iv. 5 "and," iv. 6 "and," iv. 9 (see 2631), iv. 28 "and," iv. 33 om. Compare also the Gk and Syr. of xxi. 7:

Gk

SS

"Simon Peter therefore, having heard [that] 'It is the Lord,' girt himself with (lit.) the coat—for he was naked—and cast himself into the sea. But the other disciples came in the little boat,—for they were not far from the land, but about two hundred cubits off—dragging the net of the fish."

"Now Simon, when he heard it was our Lord, took his coat [and] put [it] on his loins \wedge and fell into the lake and was swimming and coming, because they were not far from the dry land. And the rest of the disciples were coming in the boat drawing that net \wedge ."

Here SS omits "for he was naked" and the curious addition "of the fish." It also places the parenthesis "for...land" earlier in the narrative, just as it did in the Samaritan Dialogue (2631).

[2632 b] In vi. 10 "Jesus said Make the men sit down.—Now ($\delta\acute{\epsilon}$) there was much grass in the place—The men therefore (οὖν) sat down," Syr. (Burk.) has "Go make the folk sit down [to meat] companies by companies. Now the green grass was plentiful in that same spot, and the folk sat down [to meat]," but SS "He saith to them: Make the folk sit down [to meat]. Now the green grass was plentiful in that same place. He saith to them: Go, make the folk sit down [to meat] on the herbage." Mk vi. 39 has ἐπέταξεν αὐτοῖς ἀνακλιθῆναι (marg. ἀρακλῖναι) πάντας, συμπόσια συμπόσια, ἐπὶ τῷ χλωρῷ χόρτῳ, which seems to have influenced the Syriac.

[2632 c] There are two parenthetic clauses, followed by "then therefore," in [2633] A parenthesis is frequently followed by a resumptive οὖν, which, in some cases, may mean "consequently" but in others little more than "well, then" (or "to return, then"): ii. 16—18 "Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise.—His disciples remembered that it is written, 'The zeal of thine house shall eat me up.'—The Jews therefore answered and said..."; iii. 23—5 "And they used to come to [John] and to be baptized.—For John had not yet been cast into prison.—There arose therefore a questioning...about purifying"; iv. 8—9 "Jesus saith to her, Give me to drink.—For his disciples had gone away...to buy food.—The woman therefore saith to him...." So probably we should regard as parenthetical all that comes between iv. 26 "Jesus saith to her I am [the Messiah]" and iv. 28 "The woman therefore left her waterpot...¹." In the following, however, the italicised words are probably not parenthetical, vi. 3—5 "Now (δέ) Jesus went up to the mountain and there he sat with his disciples. Now there was (ἦν δέ) near at hand the passover, the feast of the Jews. Jesus therefore having raised his eyes and having beheld that a great multitude was coming to him..." The mention of the passover may have a mystical meaning connected with what follows. Jesus is described as "raising his eyes" to the contempla-

xi. 12—14, "The disciples therefore said to him, 'Lord, if he is asleep he will be saved [from death].'—But (δέ) Jesus had spoken about his death. But (δέ) they supposed that about the falling asleep of slumber he was speaking.—Then therefore (τότε οὖν) Jesus said to them plainly, 'Lazarus is dead.'" SS renders δέ first by "now" and then by "and"; and, for "then therefore," it has "again," thus: "They say to him: 'Our Lord, if he sleepeth, he will live.' Now Jesus on [the ground] that Lazar was dead had said [it] to them, and they were supposing that of sleep he said it. Again Jesus said to them plainly, 'Lazar is dead.'"

[2632 d] In xix. 23 "The soldiers therefore...took his upper garments (and made four parts, for each soldier a part)—and the tunic. Now the tunic was without seam..." John passes rapidly over the "garments," for which there was no need to draw lots, to the "tunic," for which there was the need; and he twice mentions the "tunic," partly perhaps because the Synoptists had wholly omitted this detail. SS and D are wanting here. But this twofold mention of the tunic is avoided by most of the Latin and other versions by dropping "and the tunic." Thus they also avoid the parenthesis: e has "simili modo et tunicam. Erat autem ei tunica..." thus avoiding the parenthesis in a different way.

tion of the New Passover, of which a type was to be presented in the Feeding of the Five Thousand. In xi. 4—6 “‘This sickness is not unto death....’—Now (δέ) Jesus loved... Lazarus.—When therefore he heard that he was sick, he abode at that time two days in the place where he was....” οὖν may mean “well, then,” or it may mean that, because He knew that the sickness was “not unto death,” Jesus “consequently” abode where He was¹.

[2634] In some instances a δέ clause is followed by an οὖν clause that might express the consequence of the former, as in xviii. 1—3 “...Jesus went forth...where was a garden...But (δέ) Judas also... knew the place...Judas therefore...cometh.” In this case it is reasonable to take the δέ clause as not parenthetical. But in what follows, xviii. 5—6 “He saith to them ‘I am [he].’—Now (δέ) there stood Judas...with them.... When therefore he said to them, ‘I am [he]’ they went away backward and fell on the ground,” the δέ clause seems parenthetical, and the “falling” is described as the effect of the majestic and mysterious utterance “I am [he].” In the following, the οὖν clause may be regarded possibly as the sequel of the immediately preceding sentence but more probably as looking back past a parenthesis, xi. 12—14 “His disciples therefore said, Lord, if he is fallen asleep he will recover.—But (δέ) Jesus had said [the words] concerning his death. But (δέ) they thought that he was saying [them] about falling really asleep.—Then therefore Jesus said to them plainly, ‘Lazarus is dead².’”

[2635] After xi. 57 "He will surely not come to the feast.—Now (δέ) the chief priests...had given commandment...so that they might take him," a new section begins, xii. 1 "Therefore Jesus...came to Bethany." The δέ clause cannot here be called parenthetical: but it takes the reader behind the scenes to the previous plotting of the chief priests, after having exhibited on the stage the gossiping multitude. As to the οὖν clause it is perhaps not merely resumptive but describes Jesus as knowing the danger and "consequently" advancing to meet it. This view is supported by the sentence following the arrival of Judas with the soldiers, xviii. 4 "Jesus, therefore, knowing all things that were coming on him, went forth, and saith to them, 'Whom seek ye?'" In many cases opinion may be divided as to whether a δέ clause is, or is not, parenthetical: but it is certain that οὖν (far more frequently than δέ) introduces the more weighty words and deeds of Christ¹, and that an οὖν clause is often preceded by a parenthetical, explanatory, or subordinate statement.

[2635 (i)] A parenthesis on a very large scale—a great parenthetical work of Christ in the conversion of Samaria—may possibly be indicated by the extraordinary construction in iv. 1—3 ὡς οὖν ἔγνω ὁ κύριος...ἀφήκεν τὴν Ἰουδαίαν καὶ ἀπῆλθεν πάλιν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, on which Blass (p. 192) truly says that it "is at least remarkable, since the aorist denotes the journey as completed, whereas in verses 4 ff. we have an account of what happened on the way, and the arrival in Galilee is not reached till verse 45." The Diatessaron places iv. 3 a this [man] but Barabbas.—Now I should explain that (δέ) B. was a robber.—Then therefore [without more delay] (τότε οὖν) Pilate took Jesus and scourged [him]."

[2635 b] Δέ, when introducing a word or deed of Jesus, often follows an adv. phrase or participle, i. 38 στραφεὶς δέ, iv. 43 μετὰ δὲ τὰς δύο ἡμέρας, vi. 12 ὡς δὲ ἐνεπλήσθησαν, vi. 61 εἰδὼς δέ ὁ Ἰ., vii. 9 ταῦτα δὲ εἰπὼν, vii. 10 ὡς δὲ ἀνέβησαν, vii. 14 ἥδη δέ, etc. Such as the following are comparatively rare, ii. 24 αὐτὸς δέ Ἰ. οὐκ ἐπίστευεν αὐτόν, v. 17 ὁ δὲ ἀπεκρίνατο, vi. 3 ἀνῆλθε δὲ εἰς τὸ ὄρος, vi. 20 ὁ δὲ λέγει αὐτοῖς, Ἐγὼ εἰμι, viii. 59 Ἰ. δὲ ἐκρύβη etc.: xi. 41, xii. 23, 44 are exceptional and introduce acts or words of importance, but the rule remains as above.

early (sect. 6) immediately before the Baptist's imprisonment: "And [so] he left Judaea (Lk. iii. 19—20) And Herod...shut up John in prison. (Mt. iv. 12) And when Jesus heard that John was delivered up he went away (ἀνεχώρησεν, lit. retired) to Galilee." Long afterwards (sect. 21), omitting iv. 3 b, it has (after Mk vii. 31—7) iv. 4 "And while he was passing through the land of Samaria he came to one of the cities of the Samaritans," omitting the very important phrase in iv. 4 "it was necessary" (before "that he should pass through Samaria")¹. Origen ad loc. has a long discussion on iv. 35 "four months," shewing that various inferences were drawn, from this expression, as to the date of the Samaritan dialogue. Πάλιν in iv. 3 is omitted by A, and is only added in the margin by B. Its omission suggests motives based on chronology. Πάλιν makes it almost necessary to suppose that Christ, having come up from Galilee to Jerusalem for the first Passover recorded in this Gospel, was now "going away to Galilee again," i.e. back, without any very long interval, and certainly without any intervening visit to Galilee. It was "a return journey." By omitting "again," the Diatessaron leaves itself free to regard the Samaritan Dialogue as a much later event than the delivering up of John the Baptist.

[2635 (ii)] Chrysostom, quoting the passage at some length, has Ὡς οὖν ἔγνω ὁ Ἰησοῦς...ἀνεχώρησεν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, and he repeats ἀναχωρέω twice later on "Why, pray, did He retire (ἀνεχώρει)?"—using the same word as that in Mt. iv. 12 quoted above. The context shews why he favoured this reading. He points out that the Gospel was in the first instance offered to the Jews, and that it was Jewish rejection that caused Jesus to preach the Gospel to the Samaritans, as it caused the Apostles to preach to the Gentiles. The visit to Samaria, he says, "was a parergon of His journey²." This seems to give us a clue to the Johannine expression and arrangement. John might have written continuously that Jesus, finding that His success was being magnified at the cost of the Baptist, (iv. 3) "left Judaea and went away back to Galilee, (iv. 44) for Jesus himself testified that a prophet in his own country hath no honour." But he desires to insert a parergon, or at least what some might call by that name—the conversion of Samaria. This parergon he expresses by a long parenthesis. According to his custom he gives the reader an impression at first erroneous and then corrected. "He left Judaea and went away back to Galilee." Then follows the correction "But it was necessary that he should pass through Samaria": and every sympathetic reader of the Fourth Gospel would at once understand that "necessary" implied "the will of the Father" and that this "necessity" would issue in some divine consequence. If this view is correct, John's use of the aorist ἀπῆλθεν is remarkable but not erroneous.

² [2635 (ii) a] Δεικνύς ὁδοῦ πάρεργον αὐτὸν τοῦτο ποιούμενον, printed in Cramer ὥσπερ ἔργον αὐτὸν ποιούμενον τὴν τῆς Σαμαρείτιδος ὁδόν. In what precedes, Chrys. has ἀναχωρήσας γοῦν πάλιν τῶν αὐτῶν εἶχετο ἄν καὶ πρότερον. Οὐ γὰρ ἀπλῶς ἐπὶ τὴν Γαλιλαίαν ἀπήρχετο. This combines ἀναχωρέω and ἀπέρχομαι.

§ 3. Instances of doubtful connexion

[2636] In i. 43—5 "...and he findeth Philip. And Jesus saith to him, Follow me. Now (δέ) Philip was from Bethsaida, sprung from¹ the city of Andrew and Peter. Philip findeth Nathanael...", δέ probably introduces a reference to the previous discipleship of Andrew and Peter, as if to say, Now I ought to explain that Philip was connected locally with Andrew and Peter, and they may have mentioned him to the Lord, who accordingly came to "find" him². The Latin and Syriac versions vary as to the italicised words in vi. 64—5 "'But there are some of you that believe not.'—For Jesus knew from the beginning...who was to betray him.—And he proceeded to say (καὶ ἔλεγεν) For this cause have I told you that no one can come unto me except...", SS has "He saith to them Therefore I have said to you", a "et dicebat: propterea dixi vobis, Nemo...", e "et dicebat propterea quia," Chrysostom omits "you that (ὑμῶν ὅτι)." Perhaps some rendered καὶ ἔλεγεν διὰ τοῦτο, "and it was for this cause that he said [previously]": but, if that had been the meaning, the text would probably have been διὰ τοῦτο εἶπεν or διὰ τοῦτο εἰρήκει. "For this cause" appears to mean "Because of the fundamental difference between the unbelieving or selfish theory of things, and the believing or unselfish theory"; and this is implied in "there are some of you that believe not"; i.e. ye believe not in a Father but believe in your own worldly interests and in nothing else¹.

¹ [2636 a] On ἀπό and ἐκ here, see 2289—93. SS has "Now Philip, his kin was from Bethsaida, from the city of Andrew and of Simon."

³ [2636 b] vi. 65 καὶ ἔλεγεν διὰ τοῦτο εἰρηκα ὑμῶν ὅτι οὐδεὶς δύναται.... Comp. ix. 23 διὰ τοῦτο οἱ γονεῖς αὐτοῦ εἶπαν..., and especially xiii. 11—12 ἦδει γὰρ τὸν παραδιδόντα αὐτόν· διὰ τοῦτο εἶπεν ὅτι Οὐχὶ πάντες καθαροὶ ἐστέ.

[2637] In xviii. 10 "Simon Peter therefore having a sword drew it...", οὖν cannot be resumptive of anything said about Peter, as he is not mentioned in the preceding context. Nor does οὖν introduce a consequence of the preceding words, which are "...If therefore ye seek me let these depart"—that there might be fulfilled the word that he spake 'Whom thou hast given me of them I have lost none.'" Perhaps we may assume that the words "let these depart" implied that Christ Himself would not "depart" but surrendered Himself, and that Peter "therefore" intervened to prevent the surrender².

[2638] In xx. 10—11 "The disciples therefore went away to their own homes. But Mary was standing at the tomb. As therefore she was weeping, she glanced into the tomb," SS has "now" for the first "therefore" and "and" for the second, and makes one sentence of the whole. But W.H. regard the words "But Mary" as beginning a new section. Probably the first οὖν means "as the result of all that preceded," namely, the entering into the sepulchre. Οὖν is here nearly equivalent to μὲν οὖν, and as μὲν ends a book of Thucydides and δέ begins the next¹, so here οὖν ends the account of what the two disciples saw, and δέ introduces the weeping of Mary as a preparation for what she, in her turn, was destined to see. The effect of the particles is something of this kind: "So the upshot of it all was that the two disciples went back to their several homes. One indeed believed. But neither he nor Peter had any message of glad tidings to convey to the Eleven. So they went away, and that was all as far as they were concerned. But Mary on the other hand abode by the tomb in tears. While therefore she wept she received a vision of angels and then a manifestation of the Saviour Himself. And so she returned, not to her home but to the disciples, the first to proclaim the Gospel of the Resurrection."

² [2637 a] It is surprising that the Latin versions here retain "therefore"; but SS has "now," and D τότε. It should be added that, in the context, almost every sentence of narrative is introduced with οὖν as though indicating that the delivering up of Christ took place in the regular sequence of divinely decreed cause and effect: and the evangelist may regard Peter's impulsive action as a part of the whole foreordained series.

[2639] There is a parenthesis with asyndeton (according to W.H.) in the following, ii. 16—18 "'Take these things hence.....make not my Father's house a house of merchandise.'—His disciples remembered² that it is written, 'The jealousy for thy house shall eat me up.'—The Jews therefore answered and said to him...." The variations of the authorities that insert conjunctions to destroy the asyndeton indicate that W.H. are right. But the question arises, When did the disciples remember this? At once, or after Christ's resurrection? In favour of the former it may be urged that several authorities insert "at the time," or something to that effect, and that, if John had meant "after the resurrection" he would have inserted the words as he does in ii. 22 "When therefore he was raised from the dead his disciples remembered...." But on the other side it may be replied that (1) John may have assumed that the clause "when he was raised from the dead," which he is purposing to introduce immediately, will modify "remembered" in both cases; (2) the hypothesis that the disciples spontaneously called to mind a prediction (virtually) of their Master's death at the very outset of His career perhaps never entered the mind of the evangelist and is certainly very improbable; (3) John habitually represents the disciples as misunderstanding much, and as foreseeing nothing, that relates to Christ's sacrifice; (4) the meaning "remembered [in after times]" accords best with the two other passages that describe the disciples as applying Scripture to our Lord, so as to make a threefold mention of this "remembering¹."

[2640] The discussion of the Johannine οὖν in narrative cannot be quite satisfactory because it is not at present capable of illustration from contemporary or earlier writers. In LXX, from the beginning of Numbers to the end of Chronicles, the Oxford concordance does not give thirty instances of οὖν, and, of these, none are in narrative². In the Gospels, narrative οὖν is almost³—and in Revelation⁴ it is quite—non-existent. In classical and non-classical Greek the Thesaurus gives no examples that can be fairly said to establish precedents or parallels for the Johannine usage. But some quotations from a Byzantine writer in the Thesaurus shew a tendency to use narrative οὖν abundantly in the sense "I say," "to resume": and these, although much later than the Johannine period, preclude a critic from deciding that John's usage is a mere idiosyncrasy of the writer⁵. Whatever may be the causes of the usage, there can be no

⁴ [2640 c] The absence of οὖν narr. in Revelation is important because, like the Acts, it is largely made up of narrative, so that we might have expected narrative οὖν in abundance if it had been written by the hand that wrote the Fourth Gospel.

⁵ [2640 d] In the following, οὖν is repeated resumptively after clauses such as ἐξ ἐκείνου τοῦ χρόνου, Steph. v. 2391 "Mire Jo. Malalas p. 29, 19: Οἱ οὖν Σύροι Ἀντιοχείς ἐξ ἐκείνου τοῦ χρόνου ἀφ' οὗ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ἐλθόντες ἐξήτησαν τὴν Ἰὼ ποιοῦσιν οὖν τὴν μνήμην" neque enim delendum videtur alterutrum. Simplex sic est p. 59, doubt that the differences in the Greek Gospel between John's frequently repeated "and" and "but" and "therefore"—so often covered up by the Syriac and Latin translators—do help in a very remarkable manner to suggest relative importance and unimportance in the events of the Gospel; and the use of "therefore" often helps the reader to receive the impression that what Christ said or did was not an accident but a consequence, an effect proceeding from a cause, and that cause from a cause still higher, reaching to the First Cause of all.

16: Τὰ δὲ μεταγενέστερα βασιλεία Αἰγυπτίων, λέγω δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ Ναραχώ καὶ κάτω, συνεγράψατο οὖν ταῦτα Θεόφιλος· 101, 13: Καὶ οὐ παρεχώρησεν, ἀλλ' εὐθέως ἀπὸ τοῦ κόπου...συμβαλὼν οὖν μάχεται· 195, 4: Καὶ εἰσελθόντα πρὸς αὐτὴν ἅμα τοῖς...πρεσβευταῖς γνωρίσασα οὖν αὐτόν· 238, 4: Ἀκηκουῖα δὲ τοῦ...Χριστοῦ τὰ ἰάματα, ὅς...θεραπεύει, πρὸς αὐτὸν οὖν κἀγὼ...ἔδραμον· et similiter 362, 12; 380, 1. Ceterum imprimis part. οὖν frequentari ab scholiastis notavit Dobr. ad Aristoph. Pl. 973, p. 120, qui exx. illic citatis facile plurima ex schol. Aristoph. et aliis adjicere potuisset."

[2640 e] The foll. are not in narr., but they are useful as illustrating the various uses of οὖν: Fayûm Pap. 133 (4th century) καθ' αὐτὴν οὖν τὴν ὄψιν, μὴ πισθὲις οὖν τοῖς καρπῶναις, τὴν τρύγην ποιήσε, "so I say at sight of this—not listening, I say, to the fruit-buyers—make the vintage." Note also the strange use of οὖν at the beginning of the following letter, ib. 114 (A.D. 100) "L.B.G. to his son S. greeting. To repeat what I said (οὖν)—on receipt of my letter you will oblige me by sending Pindarus...to me at the city (εὖ οὖν πνήσας κομισάμενος μου τὴν ἐπιστολὴν πέμψις μιν Πινδαρον εἰς τὴν πόλιν)." This may perhaps be explained as a repetition of the phrase in a letter from L.B.G. to S. a few days before (ib. 113). "Be sure to send Pindarus...you will oblige me therefore immediately by sending him immediately (sic) (εὖ οὖν πνήσας ἐξαυτῆς πέμψις αὐτὸν ἐξαυτῆς)." The later of these two letters (no. 114) indicates that G. was vexed with his son for delaying—on the pretext that he was busy threshing—to send some fish: "Send the fish on the 24th or 25th for Gemella's birthday feast. Finally (οὖν) don't talk nonsense about your threshing." Two previous letters from Gemellus (111 and 112) after a long list of minute instructions, end thus μὴ οὖν ἄλλως πνήσης, "So, (or, finally) don't neglect these instructions," and the same formula occurs in 115, 118, and 119, besides being conjecturally supplied in 116. Note the curious spelling of ποιεῖν as πνεῖν.

APPENDIX I

TWOFOLD MEANINGS AND EVENTS

§ I. Our Lord's Sayings

[2641] It belongs to a Commentary, not to a Grammar, to illustrate in detail the double and mystical meanings that underlie large portions of the Fourth Gospel. But they may be briefly touched on here, as the recognition of them sometimes influences the grammatical interpretation or the textual reading, as, for example, will appear (2648) in relation to i. 28 W.H. "Bethany," R.V. txt "Bethany" but marg. "Bethabarah" or "Betharabah."

[2642] To begin with our Lord's sayings, John himself tells us that the words "Destroy this temple...¹" were misunderstood by all till after Christ's resurrection, and that the disciples understood "our friend Lazarus has fallen asleep²" to refer to literal sleep. Before the Feeding of the Five Thousand, Jesus says to Philip, "Whence shall we buy bread that these may eat³?" and though John does not say that this had a double meaning, he adds "But this he said, tempting him"—implying that the words did not mean what anyone, taking them literally, would have supposed them to mean. As regards the prophecy "A little while and ye behold me no more and again a little while and ye shall see me⁴," he says that the disciples were perplexed about it, and implies that they misunderstood it even after Christ's further comment. The utterance to the Lord's mother, "My hour is not yet come⁵," and the prediction to Peter "Thou

⁵ [2642 a] ii. 4. In 2230 it was said that this verse could present no doubt about its meaning to "contemporary" Greeks. This limitation contemplated Nonnus' interpretation of Christ's words to Mary τί ἐμοί καὶ σοί; which he shalt follow me hereafter¹," are not commented on, but the impression left on the reader is that neither of these utterances is supposed by the evangelist to have been understood at the time. The second of these, in a slightly varied form ("Follow me"), occurs again in a mysterious connexion later on, after the prediction "When thou shalt grow old, thou shalt stretch out thy hands, and another shall gird thee and carry thee whither thou wouldest not²," to which is added "This he said signifying by what manner of death he should glorify God." But it seems doubtful whether the prediction was understood at the time. Almost the last words of Christ uttered to the multitude are "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me³," and John adds expressly "This he said signifying by what manner of death he was destined to die"—namely, "lifted up" on the cross. No doubt, the evangelist included (here and elsewhere) the notion of "exaltation," or "ascension."

paraphrases as τί μοι, γύναι, ἡέ σοι αὐτῇ; Nonnus wrote in the fifth century, and he describes Mary at Cana thus:—

Ἐς εἰλαπίνην δὲ καὶ αὐτὴ
παρθενικὴ Χριστοῦ θετόκος ἔκετο μήτηρ, ἀχράντῳ παλάμῃ γαμῆς ψάουσα τραπέζης, παιδοτόκος φνυγόδεμνος, ἀεὶ μεθέπουσα κορείην.

It is probable that his translation of τί ἐμοὶ κ. σοί was influenced by poetic and theological feeling.

³ [2642 δ] xii. 32—4. "Lift up" implies (1) Gen. xl. 13 "exalting," (2) ib. 19 "executing." Is it not possible that there may be some connexion between the prediction that Christ would be "lifted up" and the prediction that He would "give" His "flesh" for the world? Comp. Gen. xl. 17—19 where the baker dreams that "the birds" eat bread from the baskets on his head and Joseph explains it, "Pharaoh shall lift up thy head from off thee and shall hang thee on a tree and the birds shall eat thy flesh from off thee." Thus, such a saying as "the crucified feeds many" would seem likely to be known to Jews from Jewish sources apart from the Greek sayings quoted above (2211 c), to which add Artemid. iv. 49 "To fancy oneself crucified signifies glory and wealth: glory, because the crucified is lifted higher [than others], wealth because he feeds many birds (πολλοὺς τρέφειν ὠλοῦς)." The same writer applies the phrase "he feeds many" to one condemned to fight with wild beasts in the arena, (ii. 54) "To fight with wild beasts is [a] good [sign] for a poor man, for he will be able to feed many (πολλοὺς γὰρ ἔξει τρέφειν). For indeed the man condemned to fight thus feeds the wild beasts from his own flesh (κ. γὰρ ὁ θηριομαχῶν ἀπὸ τῶν ἰδίων σαρκῶν τὰ θηρία τρέφει)." Τρέφω is used for feeding slaves in Par. Oxyr. iii. 489, ll. 9, 17, and in the phrase "board and clothing" for apprentices, ib. iv. 725, ll. 15, 45. "Pasco" is applied to the feeding of slaves by their masters and of crows by the slaves on the cross (Hor. Ep. i. 16. 48 "non pasces in cruce corvos," and see Juv. iii. 141, annot. Mayor).

But the multitude apparently recognise neither of these meanings. They reply "How sayest thou that the Son of man must be lifted up? Who is this Son of man?" The Gospel leaves us under the impression that all Christ's sayings were of the nature of "proverbs" till the Holy Spirit came. The very last saying of all is recorded to have given rise to a false impression about the disciple whom Jesus loved—namely, that "he would not die¹."

§ 2. The Sayings of the Disciples and of the Evangelist

[2643] Here there is perhaps only one saying of which it can be distinctly said that the speaker meant one thing and unconsciously predicted another, namely, the utterance of Peter, "Lord, I will lay down my life for thy sake²." Luke's version is, "I am ready to go with thee to prison and to death³." The latter was not true. The former proved true, though not in the way anticipated by the speaker. There is no double meaning in "Now speakest thou clearly⁴"—uttered by the disciples to their Master at the very moment when they had been warned that the time was yet to come when He would cease to speak in "proverbs"—but there is an irony. As regards the saying of Philip "We have found Jesus the son of Joseph, [Jesus] of Nazareth⁵"—if we were certain that John accepted the tradition of the birth at Bethlehem there would be, here too, a touch of gentle irony in representing Philip as thus deluded and as nevertheless believing. But John's meaning may be that Philip's view of facts on earth was not incompatible with belief that Jesus was the incarnate Son of God from heaven. Another saying of Philip is that "Two hundred pennyworth of bread" would not suffice to give even "a little" to the Five Thousand⁶. This, in view of the prevalence of inner mystical interpretations in this Gospel, may have a double meaning: but in any case it will be found that double meaning in the sayings of the disciples is not so frequent as in those of non-believers (2645).

[2644] There is little of double meaning or irony in the comments of the evangelist made in his own person. He prefers for the most part to exhibit the Jews or Pilate as the mouthpieces of Providence uttering condemnations on themselves or testifying to the Messiah;

or else to relate events in such a way as to suggest that while man after the flesh struts on the stage in front and says "I have authority," the hand of the real "authority," behind the curtain, directs all the puppet's movements. But under the head of evangelistic irony we may perhaps put down the statement that although many of the Jews in Jerusalem, beholding Christ's signs, "trusted in his name," Christ "did not trust himself to them¹." Later on, when he sums up the cause of Christ's being rejected by the rulers, there is no irony but merely grave condemnation in the words, "They loved the glory of men rather than the glory of God²."

[2644 (i)] As regards the double meaning in xix. 30 κλίνας τὴν κεφαλὴν it has been maintained elsewhere that the natural meaning is "rested the head," and that John intends, as the primary meaning (1456), "laying His head to rest on the bosom of the Father." Since that passage was written I have found the following in Origen's Latin commentary on Matthew (xxvii. 50 ἀφῆκεν τὸ πνεῦμα) "If we have understood the meaning of 'bending the head' (inclinare caput) ...let us be urgent so to keep our own lives that in our departure we too may be able...to deliver up our spirit even as Jesus, who bent the head and took His departure in the act of resting it as it were on the lap of the Father who could cherish it and strengthen it in His bosom (sicut Jesus, qui inclinavit caput et quasi supra Patris gremium illud repausans exiit, qui poterat illud in sinu suo favere et confortare)."
And he proceeds to repeat "inclinasse caput super gremium Patris," and "inclinare caput super gremium Dei."

§ 3. The Sayings of Others

[2645] Caiaphas is expressly asserted to have said, "It is expedient for you that one man should die for the people," under the influence of the spirit of prophecy³, because Jesus "was destined to die for the nation, and not for the nation only but also that he might gather together into one the children of God that were scattered abroad." Similarly unconscious utterance of divine truth by unworthy and sinful agents is implied, though not stated, about other sayings indicating the sovereignty of Jesus and the destruction of the Jews. Thus Pilate writes the title "King of the Jews." The chief priests—who are uniquely called on this occasion "chief priests of the Jews¹—say, “Write not ‘King of the Jews.’” But Pilate replies, “What I have written, I have written.” Elsewhere the Pharisees predict, in effect, the conversion of the world to Christ, “Behold, the world hath gone after him².” And, to one writing thirty years after the fall of Jerusalem, the following, in spite of the conditional clause, would read like an unconscious prophecy, “If we let him alone thus, all will believe in him, and the Romans will come and take away both our place and our nation”³. In the days of the descendants of Gideon, the trees of the field chose the bramble to be their king, and fire was to come out from the bramble upon them⁴; so, in the Fourth Gospel, the Jews cried, “We have no king but Caesar⁵,” and fire came out from Caesar to destroy their city. Other ironies may probably be found in Pilate’s exhibition of “the [ideal] man” with the saying, “Behold the man⁶!” and in the sayings of the multitude, “Surely he will not come up to the feast,” “Who is this Son of man?” “Will he go to the dispersion of the Greeks and teach the Greeks⁷?” As to Pilate, the whole of the Dialogue between him and Christ inside the Praetorium, and between Pilate and the Jews outside it, reads like an ironical drama on the subject of “False Authority, or the Ruler that is a Slave.” But on this subject enough has been said elsewhere (1562—94) to illustrate the Johannine irony latent in Pilate’s words, “I have authority to release thee and I have authority to crucify thee⁸.”

§ 4. Events

[2646] On two occasions Christ “was hidden” from the Jews. In both, a literal meaning is intended, but a spiritual meaning also is almost certainly included. In both cases apparently the “hiding” takes place in the Temple⁹, and in the context of both there are mentions of “light” and “blindness” which imply that the Shechinah is being described as withdrawn first for a time, then finally. The Jews, it is said, came up to the passover—the passover of the crucifixion—“to purify themselves”¹: at the same time they discuss the question of Christ’s venturing to come up to the Feast, and decide that He will “surely not come.” They speak as spectators, neither for, nor against, Christ. But this mention of “purifying” prepares the way for the hypocrisy of their rulers, who, soon afterwards, “defile themselves” (as Matthew’s Gospel implies²) by letting slander “go forth out of their mouth” (“if this man were not an evil-doer we should not have delivered him up unto thee³”) and yet “entered not into the palace that they might not be defiled”⁴.

[2647] Of a different kind are certain arrangements and connexions of events that indicate a recognition of the mysterious ways in which the circle of things comes round, and history repeats itself, yet with the strangest vicissitudes⁵. Thus it is implied (2624) that the public life of Christ opens with a six days’ work preparing the way for the Feast at Cana when the wine was changed to water, and that it closes with a six days’ work preparing the way for the Passover, the sacrifice of the Paschal Lamb, whence issued the water and the blood. The typical meaning of the Feast at Cana is indicated by the words “my hour is not yet come” in the former narrative, compared with the words “the hour is come,” which precede the latter⁶. Again, in summing up Christ’s work before the seventh and greatest “sign” (the raising of Lazarus) it is said, “He went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John was at the first baptizing...and they said, ‘John indeed did no sign, but all things whatsoever John spake of this man were true’.”⁷

[2648] This last passage represents Jesus—after being rejected by the Jews, who try to stone Him—as retreating, so to speak, before achieving His crowning victory: and He goes back “into the place where John was at the first baptizing,” i.e. where the Gospel began. This place the Fourth Gospel—alone of the Gospels—has previously described by name, “Bethany beyond Jordan”⁸; and now, after mentioning this retirement, it proceeds to describe a summons to another "Bethany" ("a certain man was sick, Lazarus of Bethany"). To this Bethany, which might be called "Bethany on this side Jordan," Jesus now journeys and raises Lazarus from the dead. The third and last mention of this "Bethany this side Jordan" is the following: "Jesus therefore, six days before the Passover, came to Bethany¹." At the first Bethany He was baptized for the work of His life on earth: at the second Bethany He is described as being anointed for His death and sacrifice.

[2649] Among minor interesting repetitions is the twofold use of ἐμβλέψας, where John the Baptist is said to have "looked intently on Jesus" before pronouncing Him to be the Lamb of God, and, a few verses afterwards, Jesus "looked intently" on "Simon son of John" before saying, "Thou shalt be Cephas," i.e. Peter or Stone². Perhaps the evangelist regarded both the Baptist and the Messiah as perceiving by divine intuition what was in those whom they severally "looked on." Another interesting repetition (with variation) occurs in the first words of Jesus as Preacher of the Gospel and in His first words after He has risen from the dead. To Andrew and Andrew's nameless companion the Lord says, "*What seek ye*³?" After the life of the incarnate Son is closed on earth, and when the disciples have gained through sorrow and tears new insight into what that life has been, the voice of the risen Saviour utters, as its first words, to Mary, "Why weepest thou? *Whom seekest thou*⁴?" There are passages in O.T. and Philo that indicate how this question might be traditionally regarded as one of mystical meaning⁵.

[2649 (i)] Concerning the retirement beyond Jordan, x. 40 καὶ ἀπῆλθεν πάλιν¹ πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, Alford refers to i. 28, but Westcott says "the reference is probably to some recent and unrecorded visit. The events of i. 28 are too remote." Both seem to assume that πάλιν means "again." But πάλιν means (1) "back" locally, as well as (2) "again" *temporally*², and John frequently has (1) with verbs of Logos. So here the incarnate Logos puts to the two companions the question, "What seek ye?" The probability of a mystical meaning is increased by the occurrence, in the context (i. 38), of the phrase "Come and ye shall see" (1598).

[2649 c] In Genesis, the answer of Joseph to the "man" is "I seek my brothers," and the "man" guides him so that he may find them. So, concerning the two companions, it is said that "Andrew first findeth his own brother," and it is implied that Andrew's companion does the same.

[2649 d] It is worth noting (1) that Elenchos, the Convictor, is supposed by Philo to put this question to every wandering soul, who may answer it wrongly or rightly, and (2) that the question (xviii. 4, 7) "Whom seek ye?" is put—in a very different sense and in very different circumstances—to Judas and his companions when arresting Jesus. These men are quite ready with an answer. They are the "darkness," in one sense apprehending the light, but in another sense "not apprehending it." They want "Jesus of Nazareth." The answer to this is I AM, which causes them to "fall to the ground." Then, when they persist in their hostility, they are allowed to "apprehend" the Logos by binding Him and leading Him away as a prisoner.

[2649 e] Origen (Huet ii. 83 C—D) points out that the question addressed to Christ "Where abidest thou?" implies that they "long to behold the habitation of the Son of God" and that their "seeking" implies that they will "find." To the two companions Christ does not say at once where He "abides," but only, "Come, and ye shall see." Elsewhere Christ says (2263 e—f), "The slave abideth not in the house for ever, the Son abideth [in the house] for ever," meaning in the home, or bosom of the Father. In Luke, Jesus (in the days of His youth) says (Lk. ii. 49) "Wist ye not that I must needs be in my Father's [abiding-place]?" If it be admitted that "Come and ye shall see!" means, in its inner sense, "Come unto me and ye shall experience the peace of those at home with God," then there is a parallelism between this promise and the fuller revelation to Mary Magdalene about that home: xx. 17 "Go unto my brethren and say to them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father and my God and your God."

motion. Luke scarcely ever uses *πάλιν*¹. Matthew uses it rarely in comparison with Mark, John more frequently than either². Matthew and Luke frequently deviate from Mark's phrases with *πάλιν*³. One reason may have been that, when used with verbs of motion, πάλιν is ambiguous, since it may mean (1) "coming back to one's home, or to a place recently left," (2) "coming a second time to a strange city." Another reason may have been that the Greek word sometimes represented a Semitic original that might have various meanings⁴. At all events in xviii. 33 εἰσῆλθεν οὖν πάλιν does not mean "entered a second time" (for no previous entry has been mentioned): but, "went back," into the palace, comp. xx. 10 "went back (ἀπῆλθον πάλιν) to their homes": and in the present passage John seems to shew that he means "back" by adding "to the place where John was at the first baptizing," as if to say that the Saviour, before working His greatest sign, went back to the place where He had begun the Gospel. These passages make it probable that others should be similarly translated, e.g. iv. 3 "went away back (ἀπῆλθεν πάλιν) to Galilee," iv. 46 "he came back therefore (ἦλθεν οὖν πάλιν) to Cana of Galilee" (i.e. on the eve of working a new "sign" He came back to the place where He had worked His old and first "sign"), vi. 15 "he retreated (lit.) back (ἀνεχώρησεν πάλιν) to the mountain." He had not "retreated" before; He had "sat" there; now He retires "back" to the mountain.

[2649 (ii)] Πάλιν coming at the beginning of a sentence, without any mention of motion in the preceding sentence, naturally means "again" in the sense of "a second time." But πάλιν with a verb of motion may mean either "a second time" (as in "he came to London

¹ [2649 (i) c] Only thrice, Lk. xiii. 20, xxiii. 20, and vi. 43 οὐδὲ πάλιν δένδρον σαπρὸν, "nor, on the other hand, does a bad tree..."—not a freq. use of πάλιν. If this was derived from a Græco-Hebraic document, we should suspect that the original was πᾶν, "not any tree." See the parall. Mt. vii. 17—19.

² [2649 (i) d] Mk about 27 times, Mt. about 16, Jn about 40.

again”) or “back” (as in “turn again, Whittington”). In John, the general rule is that πάλιν after a verb of motion means “back,” but πάλιν before a verb of motion may mean either “back” or “again” and the meaning depends on the preceding context. In xiv. 3, where Christ has previously said, “If I go [away],” πάλιν ἔρχομαι, coming in the middle of a sentence, is best rendered “I come back.” So, too, in xvi. 28 ἐξῆλθον ἐκ τ. πατρὸς κ. ἐλήλυθα εἰς τ. κόσμον· πάλιν ἀφίημι τ. κόσμον..., though πάλιν comes at the beginning of a clause, the meaning is not “a second time I leave the world,” but “reversely, or returning back, I leave the world,” referring to what precedes. In xi. 7—8 ἄγωμεν εἰς τὴν Ἰ. πάλιν...πάλιν ὑπάγεις ἐκεῖ; the meaning of the first πάλιν seems to be “back-again”; and in the reply, the second πάλιν may have a temporal meaning, the local adverb being ἐκεῖ emphatic: “A second time dost thou go there (1527)?” In the description of Pilate’s going to and fro between Jesus in the palace and the Jews outside, it has been shewn above that πάλιν at least once means “back,” but once it may mean “a second time,” xviii. 33 foll. εἰσῆλθεν οὖν πάλιν (back)...(38) πάλιν ἐξῆλθεν (a second time went out)...(xix. 4) (ἐξῆλθεν πάλιν ἔξω) went out again outside [or, went out back to the Jews outside]...(9) εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸ π. πάλιν (went into the palace back again, or again).”

[2649 (iii)] In xiii. 12 (W.H.) ὅτε οὖν ἔνιψεν...καὶ ἔλαβεν τ. ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ καὶ ἤνεπεν, πάλιν εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, the punctuation of W.H. txt would connect πάλιν with εἶπεν, “said to them a second time.” But W.H. marg. ἤνεπεν πάλιν “lay down in his place again” is far more in accordance with Johannine usage and is probably supported by Origen (ad loc. τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ δειπνοῦντος ἀναλαβὼν, “resuming the appearance of one at a meal”), by Chrysostom (ἀνέλαβε τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ καὶ κατεκλίθη), and by Nonnus (παλινορσος ἐὸς ἐνδυνε χιτῶνας Καὶ παλάμης ἀγκῶνα παλινδίνητον ἐρείσας...εἶπεν...). This punctuation is also supported by a and b (e and f leave the connexion doubtful).

APPENDIX II

READINGS OF CODEX VATICANUS NOT ADOPTED BY WESTCOTT AND HORT

[2650] Where W.H. deviate from B, the following list reproduces B's text¹. Adjacent to each reading of B is placed W.H.'s text in round brackets together with W.H.'s signs (ʹ ʹ and []) of doubtful readings. Where readings agreeing with B are placed by W.H. at the foot of their page, the fact is indicated by "marg. as B." The context is given in some cases rather fully, because it often supplies manifest evidence as to the reasons for W.H.'s deviation. For example, the reader will soon discover that the scribe's error of repeating c twice, or of inserting o after c, or after e, occurs so often as to make him in some cases an unsafe guide as to the article. The list was compiled from Tischendorf's edition of B (Leipsic, 1867).

[2651] Since the compilation, I have compared Tischendorf's edition, in a few instances, with Danesi's photograph of B. The results indicate some apparent errors in the text (or omissions in the notes) of the former, given below. It must be premised that the original writing of B has been coarsely inked over by a subsequent scribe, who has sometimes altered the text. For example, in i. 18, the photograph shews εω at the end of a line as part of εωρακεν, but the ω shews signs of having been originally o, and Tischendorf prints εορακεν and calls attention to the ω as a correction. This he also does elsewhere, not only in ix. 37 where ω is written above o, but in cases where (occasionally) the correction, if it exists, is not visible to a non-expert. This being the case, readers of Tischendorf and of the photograph naturally assume that the former will either reproduce in his pages the exact text of the latter with all its errors or else, in his notes, will call attention to the reading shewn by the photographic text as a correction of the original text. We are all the more entitled to expect this because Tischendorf, as a rule, agrees exactly with the photograph even where the text contains a palpable error, as in Jn v. 7 προς for προ and Mk vi. 48 περιπατων for περιπατων.

[2652] In these circumstances I have thought it worth while to call attention to the following discrepancies between the photograph and Tischendorf, as to which Tischendorf is silent. I have included cases where the photograph shews a correction above the line, e.g. βασιλειει with c above, printed by Tischendorf βασιλευσ ει without note. Probably Tischendorf has commented on these and other differences elsewhere, but it is important to the possessor of the edition of Tischendorf above described that he should be aware of its deficiencies. The omission of c before ε, as in βασιλειει, is a common error of B, illustrating the tendency of the scribe to drop, or repeat, such letters as o, c, θ, and ε, as in Mk vi. 22 where Tischendorf rightly gives B's error in his text ειελθογης, adding, in a note, that the corrector has changed it to εισελθογης. This bears upon the evidence of B in readings where the question turns on the insertion or omission of the article, ο, in juxtaposition with similar letters. There may be other deviations in Tischendorf. These are merely what came under my notice in examining a few passages in the Fourth Gospel.

§ 3. List of Readings

[2654]² Chap. i. 4 το φως και (f. τὸ φῶς τῶν ἀνθρώπων καί), 9 αληθεινον³ (f. ἀληθινόν), 12 ελαβαν (f. ἔλαβον), 13 ανθρωπων (f. αἱμάτων), ουδε εκ θεληματος σαρκος αλλ⁴ (f. οὐδὲ ἐκ θ. σ. οὐδὲ ἐκ θελήματος ἀνδρὸς ἀλλ'), εγενηθησαν (f. ἐγεννήθησαν), 14 χαριτος αληθειας (f. χ. καὶ ἀ.), 18 εορακεν (Tisch.) (f. ἑώρακεν), 21 συ ουν τι Ηλειας ει (f. Τί ὄυν; [σὺ] Ἡλείας εἶ; marg. Τί οὖν σύ; Ἡλείας εἶ;), 23 εφει (Tisch.) (f. ἔφη), 27 ουκ ειμι εγω αξιος (f. ὁ. ἐ. [ἐγὼ] ἄξιος), 35 ειστηκει (f. ἱστήκει), 41 ευρεσκει (f. εὕρισκει), 48 προ του σαι (f. π. τ. σε).

Chap. ii. 1 τη τριτη ημερα (f. τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ τρίτῃ, marg. as B), 6 τρις (f. τρεῖς), 17 εστιν γεγραμμενον (f. γεγρ. ἐστίν), 19 και τρισιν

¹ [2653 δ] Tisch. has no footnote, but says in Introd. p. xli. "τινα η ut M²; male M¹ τινα ην." The photograph has clearly ΤΙΝΔΗΝ.

² [2654 α] Om. = "omits"; f. = "for," e.g. "ελαβαν (f. ἔλαβον)" means that B has ελαβαν for W.H. ἔλαβον. This Appendix does not, as a rule, include the corrections of B mentioned by Tisch. as made by subsequent scribes. In some cases where Tisch. has been found to differ from the photograph and may be presumed to have differed because he thought he detected the original lettering under the coarse "inking over" of a secondary scribe, "Tisch." is inserted to indicate the fact.

ημεραις (f. καὶ [ἐν] τρ. ἡμ.), 23 ἐν τῷ πάσχα τῇ εορτῇ¹ (f. ἐν τ. πάσχα ἐν τῇ ἐ.).

Chap. iii. 4 λέγει πρὸς αὐτὸν Νεικ. (f. λ. πρ. ἀ. [ὁ] Ν.), 5 ἀπεκριθὲν οἱ ἰς (f. ἀ. [ὁ] Ἰησ.), 8 ἀλλὰ οὐκ (f. ἀλλ' οὐκ), 23 ἦν δὲ καὶ οἱ ἰω. (f. ἦν δὲ καὶ [ὁ] Ἰω.), 27 οὐδὲ ἐν αὐτῷ (f. οὐδὲν ἐάν), 28 εἶπον ἐγὼ οὐκ εἰμι ἐγὼ οἱ ἰσ (f. εἶπον [ἐγὼ] Οὐκ ἐ. ἐ. ὁ χρ.), 34 οὐ γὰρ ἐκ μέτρου διδωσιν² (f. οὐ γ. ἐκ μ. δ. τὸ πνέυμα).

[2655] Chap. iv. 1 ἰς πλείονας μαθητάς...καὶ βαπτίζει Ἰωάννης (f. Ἰησ. πλ. μαθ....βαπτίζει [ἦ] Ἰωάννης), 3 ἀπηλθὲν εἰς τὴν Γ.³ (f. ἀπῆλθεν πάλιν εἰς τ. Γ.), 5 οἱ ἔδωκεν Ἰακώβ τῷ Ἰωσήφ (f. ὁ ἔδ. Ἰ. [τῷ] Ἰ.), 6 οὕτως ἐπὶ (f. οὕτως ἐπὶ), 9 οὐ γὰρ συνχωρεῖται Ἰουδαίοις⁴ Σαμαρείταις (f. [οὐ γὰρ σ. Ἰουδαῖοι Σ.]), 15 μὴδε διερχομαι (f. μ. διέρχωμαι), 17 εἶπεν αὐτῷ (f. ἐ. [αὐτῷ]), 40 συνήλθον (Tisch.)⁵ οὐν πρὸς αὐτὸν οἱ Σ. ἡρώτων (f. ὡς οὐν ἦλθον πρὸς αὐτὸν οἱ Σ. ἡ.), 42 ἐλεγον (f. ἔλεγον [ὅτι]), τὴν λαλίαν σου (f. τὴν ἰσὴν λαλίαν, marg. as B), 46 ἦλθεν οὐν πάλιν ἐν Κανά τῆς Γ. (f. ἦλθ. οὐν π. εἰς τὴν Κ. τῆς Γ.), 51 λεγονταῖς⁶ (f. -τες), 52 τὴν ὥραν ἐκείνην (f. τ. ὥραν παρ' αὐτῶν), εἶπον (f. εἶπαν), ὥραν ἐβδόμην ἀφῆκεν αὐτὴν⁷ οἱ πυρετος (f. ὥραν ἐ. ἀ. αὐτὸν ὁ π.), 54 τοῦτο δὲ πάλιν (f. τοῦτο [δὲ] π.).

Chap. v. 2 Βηθσαιδα (f. Βηθζαθά, marg. as B), 5 τριακοντα οκτώ (f. τρ. [καὶ] ὀκτώ), 7 πρὸς⁸ ἐμοῦ (f. πρὸ ἐμοῦ), 14 αὐτὸν⁹ ἰς (f. ἀ. [ὁ] Ἰησ.), 15 ἀνγγεῖλεν (f. εἶπεν, marg. as B), 19 ἀπεκρίνατο οὐν καὶ

³ B marg. ins. πάλιν (see 2635 (i)).

⁴ B has repeated the first c of σαμαρειταις as the last c of ιουδαιοις (see 2652).

⁶ Comp. i. 48 σαι for σε (where, however, σαι comes just above another σαι and might have been copied from the latter) and vi. 24.

⁷ Did the scribe take αὐτὴν as agreeing with ὥραν "the seventh hour precisely"?

ελεγεν (f. ἀπεκρ. οὖν [ὁ Ἰησοῦς] κ. ἔλεγεν), 35 ἀγαλλιασθῆναι¹ (Tisch.) (f. ἀγαλλιαθῆναι), 44 του μονου ου² (f. τ. μόνου [θεοῦ] οὐ), 45 εστιν ο κατηγορων υμων προς τον πατερα³ Μωυσης (f. ἔστιν ὁ κ. ὑμῶν M.), 47 πιστευετε⁴ (f. ῥπιστεύετε, marg. as B).

[2656] Chap. vi. 12 περισσευοντα (f. περισσεύσαντα), 15 ερχεσθε (2653 a) (f. ἔρχεσθαι), 17 ουπω προς αυτους εληλυθει ο ις (f. οὐπω ἐλ. ῥπ. ἁ. ὁ. Ἰησ., marg. οὐπω ἐλ. Ἰησ. π. αὐτούς), 19 ως σταδιους (f. ὡς στ.), 22 περα⁶ της (f. πέραν τῆς), 23 εκ της⁷ Τιβεριαδος (f. ἐκ T.), 24 ζητουνταις⁸ (f. ζητοῦντες), 25 και μη⁹ ευροντες αυτον περαν της θαλασσης (f. καὶ εὐρόντες ἁ. π. τ. θ.), 30 ινα ειδωμεν (f. ἵνα ἴδωμεν), 36 εωρακατε με (f. ἐ. [με]), 43 μετα¹⁰ αλληλων (f. μετ' ἀλλήλων), 44 προς¹¹ εμε (f. ῥπρος με, marg. as B), 46 εορακε (Tisch.) (2651) (f. ἐώρακεν), παρα θυ¹² (f. π. [τοῦ] θεοῦ), εορακεν (Tisch.) (f. ἐώρακεν), 50 φαγη και μη αποθνησκη¹³ (f. φ. κ. μ. ῥαποθάνη, marg. as B), 51 ζησεται εις (f. ζήσει εἰς), 52 την σαρκα αυτου φαγειν (f. τ. σ. [αὐτοῦ] φ.), 53 αυτοις ις¹⁴ (f. ἁ. [ὁ] Ἰησ.), φαγεται (f. φάγητε), 60 ειπον (f. εἶπαν), 64 αλλ εσιν (f. ἀλλὰ εἰσίν).

² Θεοῦ being written ΘΥ might be inserted by some MSS. and omitted by others, between -ογ and ογ. (See also 1895 and 2664.)

³ [2655 δ] Perh. rep. by B from what precedes (μὴ δοκεῖτε ὅτι ἐγὼ κατηγορήσω ὑμῶν π. τὸν πατέρα). SS omits π. τ. π. in both clauses.

⁴ The variation might arise from c inserted or omitted before ε.

⁵ c is dropped before c.

⁷ This is the first mention of Tiberias. On the article with names, see 1967 foll.

⁸ See above, i. 48, iv. 51.

⁹ [2656 δ] Perhaps the scribe meant "and because they had not found him on the east side of the sea, they now ask him how he had come from the east to the west." In xv. 7, μὴ is ins. where it is very difficult to make sense of it (see 2660 δ).

¹⁰ Comp. iii. 8 ἀλλὰ οὐκ.

¹¹ B has c and ε together.

¹² An error might arise from the similarity of τογ and θυ.

¹³ On this, see 2530.

Chap. vii. 1 περιπατει $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ (f. π. [ὁ] Ἰησ.), 3 σου τα εργα α ποιεις (f. [σοῦ] τὰ ἔργα ἃ ποιεῖς, marg. τὰ ἔργα σου ἃ ποιεῖς), 4 ζητει αυτο¹ εν παρησια ειναι (f. ζητεῖ αὐτόν² (marg. αὐτό) ἐν παρρησίᾳ εἶναι), 6 παρεστιν³ ετοιμος (f. ἐστιν εἰτοιμος), 12 αλλοι δε (f. ἄλλοι [δέ]), 22 ουκ οτι (f. οὐχ ὅτι), και σαββατω (f. κ. [ἐν]³ σαββάτῳ), 23 ει περιτομην λαμβανει ο⁴ ανθρωπος (f. εἰ π. λ. [ὁ] ἄνθρωπος), χολαται⁵ (f. χολᾶτε), 28 διδασκων ο $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ (f. δ. [ὁ] Ἰησ.), 37 ειστηκει⁶ (f. ἰστήκει), προς εμε (f. πρὸς με), 38 ει⁷ εμε (f. εἰς ἐμέ), 39 του πνευματος ο (f. τ. π. οῦν⁷, marg. δ), ουπω γαρ ην πνευμα αγιον δεδομενον (f. ὁ γ. ἦν πνεῦμα), 40 ελεγον οτι (f. ἔ. [ὅτι]), 42 ουκ η (f. οὐχ ἡ), 43 σχιμα (f. σχίσμα), 47 απεκρ. ουν οι Φ. (f. ἀπεκρ. οὖν [αὐτοῖς] οἱ Φ.).

[2657] Chap. viii. 12 ελαλησεν $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ (f. ἔ. [ὁ] Ἰ.), 14 η μαρτυρια μου αληθης εστιν (f. ῥάλ. ἔ. ἡ μ. μου⁷, marg. as B), 15 κατατα⁸ την σαρκα (f. κατὰ τ. σ.), 16 εγω και ο πεμφας με πατηρ (f. ἔ. κ. ὁ π. με [πατήρ]), 25 ειπεν αυτοις $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ ⁹ (f. ἔ. ἂ. [ὁ] Ἰ.), 28 ειπεν ουν ο $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ οτι οταν¹⁰ (f. ἔ. οὖν ὁ Ἰ., Ὄταν), ο πατηρ μου (f. ὁ πατήρ), 34 αυτοις $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ ¹¹ (f. ἂ. [ὁ] Ἰ.), δουλος εστιν της αμαρτίας¹² (f. δ. ἐστιν [τῆς ἁμαρτίας]), 39 αυτοις $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ ¹³ (f. αὐτοῖς [ὁ] Ἰ.), εποιετε (Tisch.) (2653) (f. ποιεῖτε¹⁴, marg. as B), 41 ειπον (f. εἶπαν), 42 αυτοις $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ ¹⁴ (f. ἂ. [ὁ] Ἰ.), ει ο $\theta\varsigma$ ο¹⁵ πατηρ υμων ην (f. εἰ ὁ θεὸς π. ὁ ἦν), 52 ειπον (f. εἶπαν), θανατον ου μη θεωρηση εις τον αιωνα¹⁶

¹ [2656 d] D and Syr (Burk.) also read αὐτό (but SS αὐτός), Alford says that E has αὐτόν. It is a case where ΔΥΤΟC if genuine would precede ε.

² Perh. repeated from (vii. 6) οὐπω πάρεστιν.

³ Ἐν, temporal, is omitted by B in ii. 19, 23 and xviii. 39 (2715 c).

⁵ See above i. 48, iv. 51, vi. 24, 53.

⁶ Comp. above, i. 35, and see 2661 c.

⁷ c dropped from εἰC before ε in εμε.

⁸ [2657 a] Meaningless rep. of syll., comp. below, (xi. 11) ταυταυτα and the instances quoted by W.H. ii. 234, Mk ix. 25 εγω εγω επιτασσω (f. ἐγὼ ἐπιτάσσω), Acts xviii. 17 τουτωντων τω (for τούτων τῷ).

⁹ This is written ΔΥΤΟC at the end of a line and $\bar{\iota}\varsigma$ at the beginning of the next. See 2656 c.

¹⁰ Ὅτι "recitativum" is inserted here, as in vii. 40. But here the archetype may have written ΟΤ twice (2657 a), ΟΤΟΤΑΝ, corrected by B to ΟΤΙΟΤΑΝ.

¹¹ ΔΥΤΟCΙC as usual.

¹³ The facts are as in viii. 25 above.

(f. οὐ μὴ γεύσῃται θάνατον εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα), 56 ἵνα εἰδῇ (f. ἵνα ἴδῃ), 57 εἶπον (f. εἶπαν), εορακες (Tisch.) (f. ῥάρακας, marg. ῥάρακέν σε)¹, 59 ἰς ἐκρυβῇ² (f. ἰ. δὲ ἐκρύβῃ).

Chap. ix. 2 ἡ οἱ οἱ γονεῖς (2653) (f. ἡ οἱ γονεῖς), 4 ἡμας δεῖ ἐργάζεσθε³ (f. ἡ δ. ἐργάζεσθαι), 7 ἐρμηνευετέ⁴ (f. ἐρμηνεύεται), ἀπηλθεν βλεπων (f. ἀπῆλθεν οὖν καὶ ἐνίψατο καὶ ἦλθεν βλέπων⁵), 9 ἀλλ ὁμοιος (f. ἀλλὰ ὁμοιος), 10 πως ἠνεωχθησαν (f. πῶς [οὖν] ἦ.), 16 ἄλλοι δε (f. ἄλλοι [δέ]), 22 εἶπον (f. εἶπαν), 26 εἶπον (f. εἶπαν), 27 τι οὖν παλιν θελετε ακουειν (f. τι πάλιν θ. ἀ., marg. as B), 28 εἶπον (f. εἶπαν), Μωσεως⁶ (f. Μωυσέως), 31 ἀλλα εαν (f. ἀλλ' εἰάν), 36 καὶ τις εστιν, εφη, κυριε (spelt κῆ)⁷ (f. ἀπεκρίθη ἐκείνος [καὶ εἶπεν] Καὶ τίς ἐστιν, κύριε, marg. as B), 37 (2651) εορακας (f. ῥάρακας), 40 εἶπον (f. εἶπαν), 41 αυτοις ἰς⁸ (f. ἀ. [ὁ] ἰ.).

[2658] Chap. x. 1 ἀμην ἀμην υμιν λεγω (f. ἀ. ἀ. λ. ὑμῖν), 6 (Tisch.) τινα ἡ⁹ α ελαλει αυτοις (f. τίνα ἦν ἂ ἐ. ἀ.), 7 εἶπεν οὖν παλιν ἰς ἀμην ἀμην υμιν λεγω (f. εἶπεν οὖν π. [ὁ] ἰ., ἀ. ἀ. λέγω ὑμῖν), 18 ταυτην¹⁰ it inexactly, but, according to B, exactly. SS has viii. 51—2 “...death he shall not taste for ever... dost thou say, ‘He that keepeth my word shall not taste death?’” Apparently these two high authorities both err by conforming inconsistent passages, but B conforms the second to the first, SS the first to the second. On misquotations in this Gospel, see 2544 foll.

¹ Comp. xvii. 7 (B) ἐδωκες: SS has “Fifty years old thou art not and A. hath seen thee?” Σ has ἐράρακέν σε.

³ In vii. 23 χολαται was for χολᾶτε, and here -ε is generally taken as a late inaccuracy for -αι, but see 2428 b foll.

⁴ Tisch. prints ἐρμηνευεται, but the photogr. clearly has -τε with superlinear αι. See 2653 and note on ix. 4 above.

⁶ But correctly spelt Μωσει afterwards in the same verse.

⁷ [2657 d] Nonnus has ἀνὴρ δ’ ἡρέεγο φωνήν, Κοίρανε, τίς πέλεν οὗτος, indicating that he had before him κε (for καὶ) τίς ἐστιν; and that he read κε as κῆ i.e. κύριε: Σ actually has εἶπεν κῆ τις ἐστὶ with κ added above the line. Possibly the misunderstanding of καὶ, as requiring an additional verb, caused the addition of εἶπεν (“answered and [said]”).

⁸ ΔΥΤΟΙCΙC.

⁹ [2658 a] Inserted above, because, if true, the reading might be of great importance. But the photograph has clearly ΗΝ (2653).

¹⁰ [2658 b] B om. την next to την, comp. below xiii. 7 με for μετα before τα, xiv. 10 λεγω om. after εγω.

εντολὴν (f. ταύτην τὴν ἐ.), 23 περιεπατεῖ ἰς (f. π. [ὁ] Ἰ.), 24 ἐκκύλευσαν (f. ἑκκύλωσαν, marg. as B), εἶπε¹ ἡμῖν (f. εἰπὸν ἡμ.), 25 ἀπεκριθὴ αυτοῖς ἰς² (f. ἀπ. αὐτ. [ὁ] Ἰ.), Εἶπον ὑμῖν καὶ οὐκ ἐπιστευσατε (f. ἐ. ὑ. κ. οὐ πιστεύετε), 34 ἀπεκριθὴ αυτοῖς ἰς (f. ἀπ. αὐτ. [ὁ] Ἰ.), 39 ἐζητοῦν παλιν αὐτὸν πιασαί (f. ἐξ. [οὖν] αὐτ. πάλιν πιάσαι, marg. ἐξ. [οὖν] πάλιν) αὐτ. πιάσαι).

Chap. xi. 11 ...ἐν αὐτῷ ταυτα εἶπεν (f. ἐν αὐτῷ. ταῦτα εἶπεν), 12 εἶπον οὖν (f. εἶπαν οὖν), 15 ἀλλ' αἰνοῦμεν (f. ἀλλὰ ἀγ.), 20 Μαρία δὲ (f. Μαριάμ δέ, marg. as B), 21 Εἰ ἡς ὡδε (f. Κύριε, εἰ ἡς ὡδε, marg. as B), 24 ἀναστήσεται ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει³ ἐν τῇ (f. ἀ. ἐ. τ. ἀναστάσει ἐ. τ.), 27 ἐγὼ πιστευώ⁴ ὅτι (f. ἐ. πεπίστευκα ὅτι), 37 εἶπον (f. εἶπαν), 38 ἐμβριμώμενος (f. ἐμβριμώμενος), 39 τεταρτεὺς⁵ (f. τεταρταῖος), 44 λέγει ἰς αυτοῖς (f. λέγει [ὁ] Ἰ. αὐτ.), 46 εἶπον (f. εἶπαν), 52 ἀλλὰ ἰνα (f. ἀλλ' ἵνα), 54 παρησια (f. παρρησία).

[2659] Chap. xii. 3 ἡλεῖψεν τοὺς ποδας αὐτοῦ (f. ἡ. τ. π. [τοῦ] Ἰ.), ἡ δὲ οἰκία ἐπλησθη ἐκ τῆς οσμῆς (f. ἡ. δ. ὁ. ἐπληρώθη ἐκ τ. ὁ.), 4 λέγει δὲ Ἰουδᾶς (f. λέγει [δὲ] Ἰ.), 9 ἦλθον (f. ἦλθαν), 10 ἐβουλευσαντο δὲ καὶ οἱ ἀρχ. ἰνα καὶ (f. ἐ. δὲ οἱ ἀρχ. ἵνα καὶ), 12 ἀκουσαντες ὅτι ἐρχεται ὁ ἰς (f. ἀ. ὅτι ἐρχεται Ἰησ.), 13 (Tisch.) ἐκραυγασαν⁶ Ὡσαννα (f. ἐκραύγαζον Ὡσ.), 18 διὰ τοῦτο ὑπηντήσεν αὐτῷ καὶ ὁ ὄχλος (f. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὑπήντησεν αὐτῷ ὁ ὄχλος), 21 προσήλθον (f. προσήλθαν), 28 πατέρ⁷, ¹ [2658 c] Comp. xiii. 24 εἰπέ. On aor. imp. in -ον see 2437—9. Comp. Mt. iv. 3 εἰπὸν (Tisch. εἰπέ), Lk. iv. 3 εἰπέ: but Mt. viii. 8, Lk. vii. 7 (a humble request) εἰπέ. Mk. xiii. 4 εἰπὸν ἡμῖν πότε ταῦτα ἔσται is par. to Mt. xxiv. 3 εἰπὸν (Tisch. εἰπέ) ἡμῖν. Lk. xxii. 67 εἰ σὺ εἶ ὁ χρ. εἰπὸν ἡμῖν is exactly parall. to the present passage, and prob. the original had εἰπὼ (for εἰπὸν) copied by B as εἶπε.

² From this point the reader will not be reminded that B's omission of ο between αὐτοῖς and Ἰησοῦς may be connected with the abbrev. spelling of the latter, giving ἀγτοῖς ἰς, as here and ix. 41, x. 34 etc. In x. 7, 23 the omission of ὁ before Ἰησοῦς cannot be thus explained.

³ Mechanical repetition of ἀναστη- for ἀναστα-.

⁴ [2658 d] The phot. has πιστεῦκα, but there are traces of ω under κα. Tisch. prints πιστενω and adds note "pro πιστενω ipse *substituit πεπιστευκα."

⁵ [2658 e] On the interchange of ε and δι see i. 48, iv. 51, vi. 24, 53, vii. 23, ix. 4, xiv. 13, xv. 16.

⁶ [2659 a] The photograph has ἐκραυγάζον, with slight indications of erasure under ζ, and Tisch. says "ex ἐκραυγασαν B³ fecit ἐκραύγαζον."

⁷ [2659 b] The phot. clearly has πατήρ here with the accent on η though it has πάτερ in the previous verse with the accent on α. On the possible difference between the two when used as vocatives, see 2052—3. There is no trace of correction or erasure in the photograph; and Tisch.'s silence indicates that he has printed πατήρ as πατερ by error.

δοξασον μου¹ το ονομα (f. π. δ. σου τὸ ὄ.), 29 ο οχλος ο εστως (f. ὁ [οὖν] ὄ. ὁ ἐ.), 43 μαλλον υπερ την δοξαν (f. μ. ῥῆπερ τ. δ., marg. as B) 46 ινα ο πιστευων (f. ινα πᾶς ὁ π.).

Chap. xiii. 7 γνωση δε με² ταυτα (f. γ. δ. μετὰ ταῦτα), 9 λεγει αυτω Πετρος Σιμων³ (f. λ. α. Σ. Π.), 10 ουκ εχει χρειαν ει μη τους ποδας νιψασθαι (f. οὐκ ἔ. χ. [εἰ μὴ τ. π.]⁴ νίψασθαι), 14 B repeats twice ει ουν εγω ενιψα υμων τους ποδας ο κς και ο διδασκαλος, 18 επηρεν⁵ εμε την

⁴ [2659 e] Ν omits (as R.V. marg.) the words bracketed by W.H. "save the feet." But the omission may be thus explained. The context is:—

ΟΥΚΕΧΙΧΡΕΙΑΝΝΙ
ΨΑCΘΑΙ.

Now εἰ "if" in this ms. (Ν) is sometimes written ι (Mt. vi. 30, 2 Cor. ii. 2 corr. p.m., Lk. xii. 28). Suppose it to have been written so here in the archetype of Ν thus:—

ΟΥΚΕΧΙΧΡΕΙΑΝΙ
ΨΑCΘΑΙ.

The ordinary error of homoeoteleuton would explain how the scribe mistook the final ΝΙ in the second line for the final ΝΙ in the first, and omitted the second line. Then it would be natural to divide the words as ΧΡΕΙΑ ΝΙΨΑCΘΑΙ taking the former as ΧΡΕΙΑ, i.e. χρεῖαν. The spelling of ΕΙΜΗ as ΙΜΗ would facilitate the corruptions Η and ΗΜΗ which some mss. present. If "save the feet" is inserted, there is perhaps an allusion to the Levitical "washing (νίπτω) of the hands and feet of the priests (Ex. xxx. 19, 20, 21) following the "bathing" (Ex. xxix. 4) by which they had been consecrated. And, in the context, the expression "ye are clean, but not all," suggests a parallelism between Ιν and Εζρ. vi. 20 "all of them were clean as one [man]." Ιν is describing a preparation for the New Passover, and Εζρα a preparation for the old one. It must be admitted, however, that Origen not only twice omits εἰ μὴ τοὺς πόδας but argues on the omission (ad loc., Lomm. ii. 406—7). He inserts the clause in his (Latin transl.) comm. on Lev. (Lomm. ix. 181) but nothing in the context is based on the insertions, comp. 2079 c.

πτερναν (f. ἐπῆρεν ἐπ' ἐμέ τ. π.), 21 ἀμην ἀμην ὑμιν λεγῶ ὅτι (f. ἁ. ἁ. λέγῳ ὑμῖν ὅτι), 23 ὃν ἡγαπα ἰς (f. ὃν ἡ. [ὁ] Ἰ.), 26 ἀποκρίνεται οὖν ἰς... βαβας οὖν ψωμιον (f. ἀποκρ. οὖν [ὁ] Ἰ...β. οὖν [τὸ] ψ.), 28 τοῦτο οὐδεὶς ἐγνώ (f. τοῦτο [δὲ] οὐδ. ἔ.), 37 λέγει αὐτῷ ο Πέτρος (f. λ. ἁ. [ὁ] Π.).

[2660] Chap. xiv. 6 λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ ἰς (f. λέγει αὐτῷ Ἰησ.), 9 λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ ἰς (f. λέγει αὐτῷ [ὁ] Ἰησ.), 10 οὐ πιστεύσεις² ὅτι (f. οὐ πιστεύεις ὅτι), τα ρήματα α ἐγὼ³ ὑμιν ἀπ ἐμαντοῦ οὐ λαλῶ (f. τ. ῥ. ἁ. ἐγὼ λέγῳ ὑμῖν ἀπ. ἐ. οὐ λ.), 11 δια τα ἐργα αὐτοῦ πιστευετε μοι (f. δ. τ. ἔ. «αὐτὰ» π., marg. as B), 13 ὅτι ἀν αἰτῆται⁴ ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι μου (f. ὅτι ἂν αἰτήσητε¹ (marg. αἰτήτε) ἐν τῷ ὀ. μου), 14 εἰαν τι αἰτήσητε με ἐν τῷ ο. μου (f. εἰαν τι ἁ. [με] ἐν τ. ὀ. μ.), 16 ἵνα μεθ' ὑμῶν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα ἡ (f. ἵνα ἡ μεθ' ὑμ. εἰς τ. ἁ., marg. as B).

and to be one of a group of errors (xiii. 7—21) shewing the scribe in an unusually careless mood. But carelessness would not explain the insertion of εἰ μη τοὺς ποδας in xiii. 10, as to which B is probably correct.

¹ [2660 a] Here, and in xiv. 9, xviii. 37, B ins. ο (where W.H. om. or bracket it) before ἰς. In xx. 21 B has ο ἰς where W.H. have [ὁ Ἰησ.].

² Perhaps c was inserted as redupl. of ε (2650).

⁵ Οὐδὲ ἐν at the end of the sentence would resemble οὐδὲ ἐν adopted by W.H. in i. 3, where ND have οὐδέν. Comp. οὐδὲ εἰς in xv. 13 (B).

⁶ [2660 b] Comp. vi. 25 where μὴ is ins. Here, if the archetype spelt εἰ as ι, confusion might be caused by ΕΑΝΜΙΝΗΤΕ with ΜΙ repeated by clerical error ΕΑΝΜΙΜΙΝΗΤΕ. In the same verse (xv. 7) B, alone of the uncials, reads ΑΝ for ΕΑΝ. If ΕΑΝ is right, this (and perh. xxi. 25) would be an instance, exceptional in John though frequent in the Synoptists, of εἰαν, for εἰαν, with relative. But the reading is doubtful, for N reads ὅσα εἰαν, A δ εἰαν θέλετε, e "quod vultis." Ὅσα εἰαν is read by NC as ὅσα εἰαν in xi. 22, and ὅσα itself is elsewhere confused with εἰ or δ. Perhaps here the original was ΟΑΝ or ΟΑΔΑΝ, corrected by B to ΟΑΝ, by N to ΟΑΕΑΝ, and by others to ΟΕΑΝ. The tendency to read ὅσα εἰαν would be increased by its frequency in Mt. (vii. 12, xviii. 18 (δὲς), xxiii. 3 etc.). [In I Jn iii. 22, W.H. print δ εἰαν αἰτῶμεν (with B) without alternative.]

⁸ Comp. οὐδὲ ἐν in xv. 5 (B).

⁹ On the interchange of -αι and -ε, see 2658 e.

Chap. xvi. 2 πας ο αποκτεινας¹ δοξη (f. π. ὁ ἀ. [ὑμᾶς] δόξη), 13 οσα ακουσει² λαλησει (f. ὅσα ᾿ακούει λαλήσει, marg. as B), 18 ουκ οίδαμεν (f. οὐκ οἶδαμεν [τί λαλεῖ])³, 25 παρησια (f. παρρησία).

[2661] Chap. xvii. 7—8 παντα οσα εδωκες⁴ μοι...τα ρηματα α εδωκες μοι (f. π. ὅσα ᾿εδωκάς (marg. δέδωκάς μοι...τὰ ρ. ἀ ᾿εδωκάς (marg. δέδωκάς μοι), 11 Πατηρ⁵ αγιε (f. πάτερ ᾰγιε), ινα ωσιν εν καθως και ημεις (f. ἵνα ὦσιν ἐν καθὼς ἡμεῖς), 12 οτε ημεν⁶ μετ αυτων (f. ὅτε ἡμην μετ⁷ ἀ.), 15 ουκ ερωτω ινα αρης αυτους εκ του⁷ πονηρου (f. οὐκ ἔρ. ἵνα ᾰρ. αὐτ. ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου ἀλλ⁷ ἵνα τηρήσης αὐτοὺς ἐκ τ. π.), 17 αγιασον αυτους εν αληθεια (f. ἀγ. αὐτ. ἐν τῇ ἀλ.), ο λογος ο σος η αληθεια⁸ εστιν

[2660 d] Winer-Moulton (p. 99) recognises ἀκούσω in Mt. xii. 19, xiii. 14, Rom. x. 14 (Rec.), Jn xvi. 13, but adds, “Ἀκούσομαι, however, is the more common future in the N.T. especially in Luke, see Acts iii. 22 (vii. 37), xvii. 32, xxv. 22, xxviii. 28 (Jn v. 28).” But Acts iii. 22 is a quotation from Deut. xviii. 15, and Acts vii. 37 is an interpolation from Acts iii. 22. Acts xvii. 32 and xxv. 22 contain the words of Athenian philosophers and a Roman Governor—whom Luke could hardly represent as using the active future. It is antecedently probable that Luke would generally prefer the middle future, when writing in his own person or in that of St Paul (Acts xxviii. 28); but Acts xxviii. 26 reproduces ἀκούσετε from Is. vi. 9. Mt. xii. 19 has ἀκούσει τις, where Is. xlii. 2 (LXX) has ἀκουσθήσεται; indicating a preference for the active fut., even against LXX. If we follow B as to the text of Jn it will not be true to say that “ἀκούσομαι is the more common future in the N.T.” The truth seems to be that Matthew and John prefer the active whereas Luke prefers the middle.

³ [2660 e] In xvi. 18, some auth. om. ἔλεγον οὖν, some om. δ λέγει, SS has, after “unto my Father,” simply “What is then this ‘A little’ that he saith?”

⁴ Comp. ἐόρακες in viii. 57.

⁵ [2661 a] Contrast xvii. 5 (B) συ πατερ, D συ πατηρ with xvii. 11 (B) πατηρ αγιε, (D) πατερ αγιε, and see 2052—3, also 2659 b.

⁷ Error of homoeoteleuton, caused by repetition of ἐκ τοῦ.

⁸ [2661 b] B's (probable) errors both come at the end of lines—where the letters might have been originally small and obscure in the archetype. Ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, “in truth,” might mean little more than “truly.” Ἡ ἀλ. as a predicate, “thy name is the truth,” would be contrary to the usage of Ps. cxix. 142 ὁ λόγος σου ἀλήθεια, ib. 151 πᾶσαι αἱ ὁδοὶ σου ἀλήθεια. B's txt would contain a kind of play on “truth”: “Sanctify them not in mere name and not with mere external purifications but in truth. Thy word is the truth [of which I speak].”

(f. ὁ λ. ὁ σὸς ἀλ. ἐστιν), 18 B repeats twice καγω απεστειλα αυτους εις τον κοσμον, 19 και υπερ αυτων εγω αγιαζω εμαντον (f. καὶ ὁ. ἀ. [ἐγὼ] ἀγ. εμ.), 24 την δοξαν την εμην ην εδωκας μοι (f. τὴν δ. τὴν ἐ. ἦν [δέδωκας]⁷ μοι, marg. as B).

Chap. xviii. 2 *συνηχθη ἰς μετα των μαθητων αυτου εκει*¹ (f. σ. ἰ. ἑκεῖ μετὰ τῶν μ. αὐτοῦ), marg. as B), 3 εκ των αρχ. και των Φ. (f. ἐκ τῶν ἀρχ. καὶ [ἐκ] τῶν Φ.), 5 εγω ειμι ἰς ἰστηκει δε (f. ἐγὼ εἰμι (marg. + Ἰησοῦς) ἰστήκει δέ...), 7 ειπον (f. εἶπαν), 15 γνωστος ην (f. ἦν γνωστός), marg. as B), 17 *ου τω*³ (f. οὖν τῷ), 20 παρησια (f. παρρησία), 36 *ηγωνιζοντο ἰνα*⁴ (f. ἦγ. ἀν ἰνα), 37 απεκριθη ος ἰς (f. ἀπ. [ὁ] ἰ.), 39 *απολυσω υμιν τω*⁶ πασχα (f. ἀπ. ὑμ. [ἐν] τῷ π.).

[2662] Chap. xix. 5 εξηλθεν ουν ἰς (f. ἐξ. οὖν [ὁ] ἰ.), *ιδου*⁷ ανθρωπος (f. ἰδὸν ὁ ἀνθρ.), 12 λεγοντες αν τουτον (f. λ. Ἐὰν τοῦτον), 17 *ο λεγετε*⁸

² [2661 c] Hitherto B has had ειστηκει (i. 35, vii. 37) not ιστηκει (as also in xx. 11), but here (xviii. 5) and in xviii. 16, 18, xix. 25 the text has had ιστηκει and a corrector has prefixed ε. In consequence of the initial ι here, the original scribe, by an error of repetition, has probably added ι, and it has been taken to mean ἰς i.e. Ἰησοῦς. B's habit of repeating syllables makes its testimony for Ἰησοῦς (against almost every authority, but a has "Jesus autem") of very little value. Moreover there is some antecedent probability that ἐγὼ ειμι might be intended to convey a double meaning (2220—8) which would be destroyed by inserting Ἰησοῦς.

⁶ For the omission of ἐν before the dative of time, see above, ii. 19, 23, vii. 22, and 2715 c.

⁷ [2662 a] The omission of ο between γ and α cannot easily be explained—unless indeed the scribe felt that the article implied contempt (1960). Read in the light of prophecy, the phrase "Behold a man" might suggest Zech. vi. 12 ἰδὸν ἀνὴρ, referring to the future Builder of the Temple.

εβραιστί Γολγοθ[·] οπου (f. ὁ λέγεται Ἑβρ. Γολγοθά[·] (marg. [ὁ] Ἰ.).

Chap. xxi. 3 εξηλθον (f. ἐξῆλθαν), 10 and 12 λεγει αυτοις ις (f. λ. ἀ. [ὁ] Ἰ.), 12 ουδεις εντολμα (Tisch.)³ (f. οὐδεὶς ἐτόλμα), 17 και ειπεν κυριε (spelt κε) παντα συ οιδας (f. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ κύριε πάντα σὺ ὁ.), 24 ουτος εστιν ο μαθ. ο και μαρτυρων (f. οὗτος εἰ. ὁ μ. ὁ (marg. ins. καὶ) μαρτυρῶν).

§ 4. Pause-spaces in B

[2663] Pauses in B are often represented by spaces of varying size. W.H. frequently disagree from these, e.g. they make no pause before i. 15 Ἰ. μαρτυρεῖ, i. 18 θεὸν οὐδεὶς ἐώρακεν, ii. 19 ἀπεκρίθη Ἰ., ii. 20 εἶπαν οὖν οἱ Ἰουδ., iv. 28 ἀφῆκεν οὖν τὴν ὑδρίαν, iv. 45 ὅτε οὖν ἦλθεν εἰς τὴν Γαλ., v. 5 ἦν δέ τις ἄνθρωπος, v. 17 ὁ δὲ ἀπεκρίνατο αὐτοῖς, vi. 3 ἀνῆλθεν δὲ εἰς τὸ ὄρος, vi. 7 ἀπεκρίθη αὐτῷ Φιλ., vi. 15 Ἰ. οὖν γνούς, vi. 47 ἀμὴν ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, vi. 51 ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ζῶν, vii. 6 λέγει οὖν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰ., vii. 33 εἶπεν οὖν ὁ Ἰ., vii. 43 σχίσμα οὖν ἐγένετο, viii. 13 εἶπον οὖν αὐτῷ οἱ Φαρ., viii. 17 καὶ ἐν τῷ νόμῳ δὲ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ, viii. 18 ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ μαρτυρῶν, viii. 51 ἀμὴν ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν. In all these (except ii. 20, vi. 47, vii. 43, viii. 17, 18, 51, where space is left for only one letter) space is left for one and a half or more letters. The scribe seems to have used pause-spaces for two purposes, (1) to call special attention to some of Christ's weightier sayings, (2) to indicate that the evangelist is passing to a new aspect of an old subject—often after some parenthesis or digression. In particular the scribe is fond of making pauses before an οὖν clause, and he does this (where W.H. have none) not only in the cases indicated above (iv. 28, 45 etc.) but also before viii. 24 εἶπον οὖν ὑμῖν, ix. 24 ἐφώνησαν οὖν, xii. 19 οἱ οὖν Φαρ., xii. 28 ἦλθεν οὖν φωνή, xiii. 6 ἔρχεται οὖν, xix. 5 ἐξῆλθεν οὖν, xix. 6 ὅτε οὖν εἶδον, xx. 6 ἔρχεται οὖν. Perhaps the scribe regarded οὖν in some of these cases as similar in meaning to μὲν οὖν, "Well, then," "And now, to proceed" etc., so that it came well at the beginning of a new section.

ON PRECEDING PARAGRAPHS

On ΜΟΝΟΣ (1895)

[2664] On v. 44 τὴν δόξαν τὴν παρὰ τοῦ μόνου [θεοῦ], Origen's Greek comment (correctly given by Huet's (i. 392) text and Lommatzsch's footnote) omits θεοῦ, though the Latin translator inserts it. Origen De Orat. 19 (Lomm. vol. xvii. 162) quotes the text fully πῶς δύνασθε..... παρὰ τοῦ μόνου θεοῦ οὐ ζητεῖτε, with θεοῦ, but proceeds to comment on it without θεοῦ, as τὴν κυρίαν δόξαν καὶ ἀληθῆ τὴν ἀπὸ [reading ἀπό for παρά, as also in the quotation above mentioned] τοῦ μόνου τὸν τῆς δόξης ἄξιον.....δοξάζοντος, which rather suggests that θεοῦ may have been added in the quotation by the scribe. Codex D, though it has θγ at the end of a line, has a little interval between it and the preceding word. Euseb. P. E. 653 b has, καὶ ὁ σωτήριος δὲ λόγος φησί· Δόξαν τὴν παρὰ ἀνθρώπων ζητεῖτε καὶ τὴν δόξαν τὴν παρὰ μόνου τοῦ ἐνὸς οὐ ζητεῖτε¹. See also 2724—6 on αὐτὸς μόνος.

¹ [2664 a] As regards xvii. 3 τὸν μόνον ἀληθινὸν θεόν (comp. Rom. xvi. 27 μόνῳ σοφῷ θεῷ, Jude 25 μόνῳ θεῷ σωτῆρι, Rev. xv. 4 μόνος ὁστος) it seems in accordance with the Gk usage in Herod. i. 25 μόνος δὴ...ἐξεύρεν, Judith xi. 8 μόνος ἀγαθός (sc. εἶ), and it is paraphr. by Nonnus, "Ὅφρα σε γινώσκωσι θεὸν μόνον ἐλπίδα κόσμου, i.e. ὅτι μόνος εἶ "that thou alone art the hope of the world." The Heb. "only," applied to God, is a declinable phrase, adverbial in meaning, but adjectival in form, meaning "by himself, herself, themselves" etc. When applied to God, it is rendered by adj., μόνος, in LXX. Μόνον in 2 Chr. xviii. 30 ἀλλ' ἢ τὸν βασ. Ἰσρ. μόνον, Esth. i. 16 οὐ τὸν βασ. μόνον, may theoretically be adv., but it may be adjectival, "the king alone," as when applied to God. There is no instance where this Heb. word can be safely said to be rendered in LXX adverbially, exc. Gen. xlvii. 26 χωρὶς τῆς γῆς τῶν ἱερέων μόνον: and even here A has μόνων corresponding to the Heb. "of the priests by themselves." In LXX, μόνος, when applied to God in prayer, mostly comes at the end of its clause 2 K. xix. 15 σὺ εἶ ὁ θεὸς μόνος, ib. 19 σὺ κύριος ὁ θεὸς μόνος, comp. Ps. lxxxvi. 10, Is. xxxvii. 20 etc.,

On πρῶτός μοι (1896—1901)

[2665] On i. 15 πρῶτός μου (1900) comp. Philo ii. 366—7 ὅπερ γὰρ πόλεως βασιλεὺς, τοῦτο καὶ κώμης ὁ πρῶτος, καὶ οἰκίας ὁ δεσπότης, καὶ νοσοῦντων ἰατρός, καὶ στρατοπέδου μὲν στρατηγός, ναύαρχος δ' ἐπιβατικοῦ..., also Inscr. Gr. 5754 Δ(ούκιος).....ἱππεὺς Ῥωμαίων, πρῶτος¹ Μελιταίων καὶ πάτρων..., and Acts xxviii. 7 (referring, like the inscription, to Malta) τῷ πρώτῳ τῆς νήσου. These facts shew that, in the first century, “the headman,” or “patron,” of a village or district might be officially known as the “First.” And the extract from Philo indicates that, as a soldier or sailor might say “my general” or “my captain,” so a provincial villager might say “my First” meaning “my Patron,” or “Patronus.” All these terms might be used metaphorically. The context in Philo deals with true and false sovereignty (like the Johannine Parable of the Shepherd) and likens the village chief, or “First,” not only to a King but also to a Physician. This but note Dan. iii. 45 Theod. σὺ εἰ κύριος θεὸς μόνος καὶ ἑνδοξος, LXX σὺ εἰ μόνος κύριος ὁ θεὸς καὶ ἑνδοξος. It probably combined the notions of (1) unity, (2) unapproachableness or uniqueness. Nonnus, in v. 44, has Μοῦνον παγγενέταο θεοῦ.

[2664 δ] xi. 52 οὐχ ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἔθνους μόνον is paraphr. by Nonnus οὐ περὶ μοῦνον ἔθνεος, adjectivally. This late position of adverbial μόνον (though Steph. gives only Lycurg. p. 151, 7 as an instance) is freq. in Epictetus, comp. i. 6. 17, i. 9. 4, i. 19. 17 etc., and even i. 28. 13 ἀπολώλει ἡ Ἰλιάς οὐ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ Ὀδύσεια (? οὐ μόνον δέ). It occurs also in Mk vi. 8 εἰ μὴ ῥάβδον μόνον (not μόνην), Mt. v. 47 τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς ὑμῶν μόνον, xxi. 19 εἰ μὴ φύλλα μόνον (where Mk om. μόνον). Lk. nowhere uses the adv. μόνον exc. in viii. 50 μόνον πίστευσον: but a bracketed passage in Lk. xxiv. 12 has τὰ ὀθόνια μόνον, where (1804) the parall. Jn xx. 3—11 speaks of “linen cloths,” with “apart” in the context. Schweig. Index to Epict. says about μόνον “Saepe adverbium hoc ponitur ubi adjectivum expectasset: verbi causa, μόνον ταῦτα, non μόνον i. 9. 5 n.: ἐφ' ἡμῶν μόνον dant MSS. i. 6. 12 ubi vulgo μόνων.”

¹ [2665 α] The omission of the article meets the very natural objection that we should expect the article before πρῶτος meaning “the first man,” or “the chief.” Comp. Ox. Pap. 299. 4 (late 1st cent.) Διονυσίῳ προσ(τ)άτῃ Νεμερῶν, and edd. n. “cf. 239. 11, 290. 21. The προστάτης κώμης was probably the village ‘sheikh’ and chief of the πρεσβύτεροι or council of elders.” Comp. Tebtun. Pap. 120, 122, 129 (B.C. 97 or 64). In the 6th cent., we find Ox. Pap. 155. 11 “to my master, John, the all-magnificent comes and my patron (προστάτῃ) from Theophilus, citizen.” In all these instances the article is omitted before προστάτης.

[2665 δ] In Mk xii. 28 πρώτη πάντων, the text varies greatly, and the genitive is generally taken as partitive. In Aristoph. Av. 468, ἐμοὶ πρώτων means “[kings over] me in the first place.” The way for πρῶτος κώμης would be prepared by such expressions as Aristoph. Eg. 6 πρῶτος Παφλαγόνων (with a play on the phrase), ib. 130 ὃς πρῶτος ἔξει τῆς πόλεως τὰ πράγματα, ib. 325 πρῶτος ὦν. Polyb. has the pl. i. 31. 5 ἐξέπεμψαν αὐτῶν τοὺς πρώτους ἀνδρας.

increases the probability that the Fourth Gospel might use the phrase to represent in vernacular Greek the Baptist's recognition of Jesus as his Rabbi, or Superior, or Head.

[2666] The words πρῶτος or πρώτιστος were Hebraized. Levy quotes a saying that an earthly ruler, differing from God, puts his name first and then his title: "N. N. the Augustulus, N. N. the Protata" which Levy renders "der Prior." Also, in connexion with Mordecai and Haman, a proclamation uses the phrase "Proté of the Jews," "*der Vornehmste der Juden*¹." Origen, Josh. Hom. i. 5 (Lomm. xi. 16) quotes xv. 18 "odit vos hic mundus quia me priorem vestrum odio habuit," which may mean "your prior, primate, or chief," and, at all events, does not mean "before it hated you." Nonnus paraphrases πρῶτός μου ἦν in i. 15 as μεν ἦν πρώτιστος, but omits it in i. 30. In xv. 18, Nonnus has Υμείων ὅτι μᾶλλον ἐπεσβολήσιν ἐλέγχων Πρῶτον ἐμὲ στυγέσκε, which seems to combine (1) "Hated me above you, or, more than you," (2) "Hated me first."

[2667] In favour of the rendering πρῶτός τινος "before anyone" there has been urged the occurrence of σοῦ πρῶτός εἰμι in an ancient papyrus². But the phrase is not used independently there. It occurs in a "magical" papyrus containing the name Iao and describing a contest between two Æons. Iao is mentioned by Irenaeus and Origen³ in connexion with very early heresies, and it is described by the former as a magic word the pronouncing of which plays a prominent part in the Valentinian system; but, more particularly, "the little Iao" is connected in the Pistis Sophia with the birth of John the Baptist which was (according to the Pistis Sophia) brought about by Christ⁴. In the contest described by the Papyrus, the Gospel comparison between the Baptist and Christ is transmuted into a conflict between a lesser and a greater Æon, with

² See the Classical Review xv. 437, a paper by Dr J. H. Moulton who adds (in the Expositor x. 133) "The phrase σοῦ πρῶτός εἰμι (second or third century) shews that in this word [viz. πρῶτος] it was the superlative which ousted the comparative and not vice-versa as elsewhere."

³ Iren. i. 4. 1, Orig. Cels. vi. 31.

a curious confusion of the Synoptic ἰσχυρότερός μου and the Johannine πρῶτός μου, only with σου for *μου*¹:—"Having seen that he was mightier than himself he withstood him saying, I am [born] (?) before thee (σοῦ πρῶτός εἰμι)²." Another reminiscence (apparent in the Papyrus) of John the Baptist seems to point to the Johannine distinction between Christ as the Word and the Baptist as "a Voice." The Papyrus describes the begetting of these two Æons by God through various sounds, and then God decides the superiority of the rivals not according to the date of birth but according to the sound from which they were born: "Thou art from sound (ἡχοῦς): but he is from utterance (φθόγγου)³. So utterance is better than sound." The writer may take σοῦ πρῶτος to mean "I was born before thee," or "I am thy elder brother [and therefore thy better]"⁴. But whatever his meaning might be, he could but help us as an interpreter, and not a very intelligent one, writing about a century and a half after the evangelists. Similarly, but much more intelligently, Theobald or Pope might help us to interpret Shakespeare; but they would not be independent witnesses testifying to Elizabethan usage. The indices of the Egyptian Papyri (1898—1904) indicate no instance of πρῶτος with genitive.

On the emphasis of adverbs (1902)

[2668] The initial adverbial phrase in iv. 31 ἐν τῷ μεταξύ ἡρώτων αὐτὸν οἱ μαθηταί is emphatic, not only because of its position but also because of its extreme rarity. Μεταξύ is almost non-existent in LXX. In the Gospels elsewhere it occurs only as a preposition (4). Here Syr. (Burk.) and SS have "now" or "and," ὅ "postmodum autem," d, e, "inter haec," f "inter haec autem." Hesychius explains μεταξύ as ἐξαίφνης (conj. ἐξῆς), μετ' ὀλίγον, ἀνὰ μέσον, and μ. means "afterwards" in Acts xiii. 42 εἰς τὸ μ. σάββατον, Clem. Rom. 44 (bis),

¹ Mk i. 7, Mt. iii. 11, Lk. iii. 16, Jn i. 15.

Barn. 13 etc.¹ But Jn appears to use the phrase in its classical sense "in the intervening [time]," namely, between the departure of the Samaritan woman (iv. 28 ἀπῆλθεν) and the anticipated arrival of the Samaritan men, who "were coming" (iv. 30 ἐξῆλθον ἐκ τῆς πόλεως καὶ ἤρχοντο). The appropriateness of the phrase will not be understood till we perceive that the context deals with the thought of "intervening time." Jesus has just sown the seed of the Gospel in Samaria. The Samaritans, who are speedily to bring forth the harvest—confessing (iv. 42) "This is of a truth the Saviour of the world"—are on their way to the Saviour. "During the interval" Jesus utters His doctrine about the interval between the sowing and the harvest:—"Say ye not, 'it is four months'? Nay, the harvest is ready."

On βασιλεὺς and ὁ βασιλεὺς (1966)

[2669] On the difference between i. 49 "King of Israel" and xii. 13 "the King of Israel" see 2233—4, where it is shewn that all the Gospels agree that Pilate asked Christ whether He was "the king of the Jews," but the fourth Gospel alone implies that Christ refused this title, while accepting that of "king." The LXX has βασιλεὺς Ἰσραὴλ predicatively in 1 K. xxii. 32 φαίνεται β. Ἰ. οὗτος, ib. 33 οὐκ ἔστιν β. Ἰ. οὗτος (and 2 Chr. xviii. 31—2), but the absence of the article is not distinctive there, for the context contains 1 K. xxii. 31 καὶ βασιλεὺς Συρίας ἐνετείλατο. Jn does not shrink from using the article with a predicate concerning Christ: but in all such cases the article implies uniqueness in the universe (not like Mk vi. 3 οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τέκτων;), as "the light of men," "the light of the world," "the good shepherd," "the way," "the truth" etc. In x. 2 "He that entereth through the door is shepherd (ποιμὴν ἔστιν) of the sheep," R.V. has txt "the shepherd," marg. "a shepherd." But "the good shepherd" comes later, and the intention here seems to be to prepare the way for it by something intermediate between "a shepherd" (which might suggest "one of many shepherds") and "the [ideal] good shepherd" presently to be mentioned.

On the article with ἱεροσόλυμα (1970)

[2670] John is the only writer in N.T. that uses the article with the declinable name ἱεροσόλυμα, ii. 23, v. 2 (where it may be intended to "carry the reader back" to Jerusalem mentioned in v. 1, and may be explained as "anaphoric"¹), x. 22 ἐγένετο τότε τὰ ἐγκαίνια ἐν τοῖς Ἰ. (v.r. ἐγένετο δὲ τὰ ἐ., and ἐν Ἰ.), xi. 18 ἦν δὲ Βηθανία ἐγγὺς τῶν Ἰ. In the last of these passages the article perhaps emphasizes the local meaning:—"near the city walls," "near the [city of] Jerusalem." Similarly, in the first two books of Maccabees, "Jerusalem," though used without the article more than 20 times, is used with it in 2 Macc. xi. 8 πρὸς τοῖς Ἰ. "hard by the [walls of] Jerusalem," and xii. 9 "so that the flashes of the light were visible up to the [walls of] Jerusalem (εἰς τὰ Ἰ.), two hundred and forty furlongs." In John, the context is local in v. 2 ("near the sheep pool") and in x. 22 (which mentions "Solomon's porch"). In ii. 23 the name cannot very well be "anaphoric" to ii. 13 which seems rather too far off for that hypothesis. Perhaps the meaning is "When he was [with the multitude of the pilgrims assembled] inside the [walls of] Jerusalem at the Passover, many believed on him²."

On the article with Κεδρῶν (1970)

[2671] The article (τῶν) in xviii. 1 (R.V. txt) "He went forth... over the brook Kidron" (marg. "ravine of the (τῶν) cedars")—on which Blass (p. 315) says that the text is "in \aleph BCD etc. stupidly corrupted"¹—may certainly be explained, and possibly justified, by the following considerations. The exact meaning of the Hebrew name "Kidron" is unknown; but it is generally connected with Kedar "dark"—an epithet that might easily be given, from natural causes, to a ravine or to the torrent in it. According to Hor. Heb. i. 85 (and ib. on Jn xviii. 1) the ravine had come to be used as an open sewer, and, in the Talmud, Kedar signifies "dung." These two facts might suggest for the name an unsavoury origin against which some might be glad to protest by deriving it from the Greek κέδρος, which was adopted as a late Hebrew word². Accordingly a Talmudic tradition describes two "cedars" of portentous size on the neighbouring mount of Olives. This hill ran down to the Kidron, and cedars on the slope might be supposed to give the name to the ravine³.

[2672] In the mss. of the LXX the accent of the word varies, and (being of little authority) will be omitted in the following quotations (as also all distinctions between κ and K); but it is important to note that the LXX always spells the name with ε. The first place where it occurs describes the passage of David across Kidron, and the mss. vary as follows, 2 S. xv. 23 (lit. Heb.) "and all the people passing and the king passing in the torrent Kidron and all the people passing on the face of the way of the wilderness," B καὶ πᾶς ὁ λαὸς παρεπορεύοντο ἐν τῷ χειμάρρῳ τῶν κεδρων καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς διέβη τὸν χειμάρρουν κεδρων...⁴, A κ. π. ὁ λ. παρεπορεύοντο καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς παρερχόμενος ἐν τῷ χειμάρρῳ τῶν κεδρων..., Luc. κ. π. ὁ λ. διεπορεύετο καὶ ὁ β. διεπορεύετο ἐν τῷ χειμάρρῳ κεδρων...⁵. There

² [2671 a] Levy Ch. ii. 347 α has κέδρος, and Levy iv. 249 α has κέδρινον.

is no v. r. in 1 K. xv. 13 ἐν τῷ χειμ. τῶν κεδρων (but Luc. om. τῶν). Elsewhere τῶν is omitted before κεδρων (1 K. ii. 37, 2 K. xxiii. 6 etc.) as it is also before "Arnon," "Kishon" etc. when they are preceded by the word "torrent" or "ravine" (χειμάρρους)¹. It looks as though some tradition connecting "Kidron" with "cedars" has left its influence on one or two passages where that ravine is mentioned, and especially the one in which David is described as passing over it *in sorrow*², so that it is described by some as "the ravine of the cedars."

[2673] In Josephus, κεδρων (which occurs nine times) is never clearly an indeclinable noun and is sometimes clearly declinable³. This proves nothing as to the sense he attached to the name, for it is in accordance with his custom of making "Arnon" and "Sihon," etc. as well as "Simon," declinable. But it is significant that he often attaches to κεδρων the word "called." Now it is the custom of this historian to speak of "the mountain called of Olives," "the tomb called the Potter's," "the camp called of the Assyrians," in such a way as to suggest that the Greek word connected with "called" is to be translated, as explaining the origin of the place-name. This leads to the conclusion that according to analogy he intends his readers to translate κεδρων by "cedars" and not to transliterate it as "Kedron." It may mean κέδρων "of cedars" or κεδρών "cedar-grove": but in either case, *it must be translated*⁴. It may be noted also that

Josephus—when describing the flight of David from Jerusalem—though he does not mention κεδρων, uses ἐλαιων as a declinable noun (Ant. vii. 9, 2) διὰ τοῦ Ἐλαιῶνος ὄρους “through the mountain [called the] place of olives.” Blass (pp. 32, 64, 85) would emend Ἐλαιῶνος both here and in Acts i. 12. But there is good reason to think that Ἐλαιῶν, the Latin Olivetum, or Olive-grove, might be a form that recommended itself both to Josephus and to Luke, when writing in an elevated style, in preference to the more popular name “mount of olives.”

[2674] If John had written τὸν χειμ. κεδρων, meaning “the brook Kidron,” without explaining it as he explains “Siloam,” “Gabbatha,” “Golgotha” etc., (1) he would have gone contrary to his usage by introducing a place-name with the definite article without explaining it; (2) he would have adopted a Hebraic construction contrary to his usage; (3) he would have gone the way to mislead Greek readers (who would naturally suppose it to mean “cedars”). But by writing τῶν κεδρων without explanation (1) he writes intelligibly for Greeks, (2) he adopts the exact language of the LXX describing the exile of David from Jerusalem, (3) he falls in with a seemly tradition (possibly Jewish as well as Greek) that the name meant “the torrent, or of representing the names of places with the meanings of their names e.g. Gen. xxvi. 33 ἐκάλεσεν τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ὀρκος, Josh. v. 3 ἐπὶ τοῦ καλουμένου τόπου Βουνὸς τῶν ἀκροβυστιῶν. See 2680 c.

¹ [2673 c] In Ant., the only other mention is xx. 8. 6 πρὸς ὅρος τὸ προσαγορευόμενον ἐλαιων ἔρχεσθαι where Niese om. ἔρχεσθαι but adds that two MSS. insert it. Hudson inserts it without comment, and it is needed to complete the sense. Hence we may read ἐλαιῶν ἔρχεσθαι as Niese reads in iv. 5. 1 Ἀρνῶν ὅς (2673 d). But Joseph. Bell. ii. 13. 5 and v. 2. 3 has τὸ ἐλαιων καλούμενον ὄρος, v. 3. 5 ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐλαιων ὄρους (v.r. καλουμένου ὄρους), v. 12. 2, vi. 2. 8 τὸ ἐλαιων ὄρος—agreeing with the use of the LXX and of Mk-Mt., who all say “mount of Olives.” It may be taken as certain that Josephus never regards ἐλαιων as an indeclinable noun, for he dislikes and avoids such nouns as far as possible—as may be seen from his use of Σιναιὸν ὄρος (never Σινά), Γαλάθης or Γαλαδηνή (never Γαλαὰδ exc. as a personal name), and from his avoidance (or mention as declinable nouns) of the names “Canaan,” “Hor,” “Horeb,” and “Seir.” Note also the way in which he introduces Gerizim (Ant. iv. 8. 44) δυοῖν ὄροιν, Γριζαίου (with v.r.) μὲν τοῦ..., only by degrees falling into the use of the indeclinable form. These facts illustrate the divergence between Acts i. 12 ἀπὸ ὄρους τ. καλουμένου ἐλαιωνος (a declinable noun) and Lk. xix. 29, xxi. 37 πρὸς (or εἰς) τὸ ὄρος τὸ καλούμενον ἐλαιων, where a declinable noun is out of the question, as it would have to be accus. ἐλαιωνα. The former is Luke’s own use, the latter is that of Synoptic Tradition.

ravine, of the cedars." This reading is also supported by the best MSS.¹

On ἄλλος and ἕτερος (1972)

[2675] On v. 32 ἄλλος ἐστὶν ὁ μαρτυρῶν (1972) Blass (p. 180) most appropriately quotes Aesch. Suppl. 230 f. καὶ ἐὶν δικάζει...Ζεὺς ἄλλος. See Lightf. (Gal. i. 6—7) "ἄλλος adds, while ἕτερος distinguishes," and "ἕτερον implies a difference of kind, which is not involved in ἄλλος," "ἄλλος is another as 'one besides,' ἕτερος another as 'one of two'"; and from this notion of "two," often implying contrast, ἕτερος sometimes comes to mean "different." If ἄλλος means "another of the same kind" here, it has a bearing on the relation between the Speaker and God, who is the "other." But there is some difficulty in proving that John observes the distinction, as he uses ἕτερος only once, xix. 37 "another (ἑτέρα) scripture saith." He has previously quoted one scripture from the Law (Ex. xii. 46 "not a bone shall be broken") and he may mean that "a second and independent scripture" from Prophecy predicted the "piercing." Heb. v. 6 καθὼς κ. ἐν ἑτέρῳ λέγει is not a certain parallel (R.V. "as he saith also in another [place]") for Westc. ad loc. alleges no instance of τόπω omitted, and Clem. Rom. viii. ἐν ἑτέρῳ τόπῳ ("in another [or, second] passage") suggests that τόπῳ would have been inserted had that been the meaning; moreover Chrys. ad loc. (τίς ἐστι κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχ.; οὐδεὶς ἕτερος...οὐδένα ἂν ἔχοι τις ἕτερον δεῖξαι) rather suggests that he took ἕτερος to mean "other [than Christ]." The use of ἕτερος and ἄλλος is different in different authors; e.g. in Dan., LXX freq. has ἄλλος and ἕτερος whereas Theod. has ἕτερος freq., ἄλλος never. In Is. lxxv. 15 "another name," i.e. different, LXX has καινόν, Aq. and Sym. ἕτερον. In N.T., the Petrine and Johannine Epistles never use ἕτερος, and Jude only uses it once (verse 7) in the phrase "strange flesh," according to the LXX use of the word in "strange gods" etc.

[2676] The Pauline Epistles observe the distinction pointed out by Lightf. on Gal. i. 6 εἰς ἕτερον εὐαγγέλιον, ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο, "to a different Gospel, which is not another [of the same kind]...." So Rom. ii. 1 "thou judgest thy neighbour (τὸν ἕτερον)," ii. 21 "thou that teachest some one else (ἕτερον without τόν)," vii. 3 "if she become [wedded] to a new husband (ἀνδρὶ ἐ.)," 4 "that you should become [wedded] to a new [husband] (εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς ἐτέρῳ)," vii. 23 "But I note a new-and-strange (ἕτερον) law in my members," viii. 38—9 "nor [evil] angels, nor principalities, nor powers,...nor any other [however new and strange] created thing (κτίσις ἑτέρα)." There is perhaps a play on ἕτερος in xiii. 8—9 "he that loveth his neighbour (τὸν ἕτερον) hath fulfilled Torah; for the [command], Thou shalt not commit adultery...and every other [however separate and distinct] (ἑτέρα) commandment is summed up in this," where perhaps there is also an allusion to the fact that the second half of the Decalogue (which deals with man's duty to man) was recognised as (Philo ii. 189, 201 etc.) ἡ ἑτέρα πεντάς, "the second and distinct Pentad." And perhaps Chrysostom is right here in saying that the Apostle means that the love of man includes the love of God. It would be possible similarly to go through the other Pauline Epistles (excluding the pastoral ones) and to shew that ἕτερος always has a shade of difference from ἄλλος, e.g. in 2 Cor. xi. 4 ἄλλον Ἰησοῦν...πνεῦμα ἕτερον...εὐαγγέλιον ἕτερον "another Jesus...a different [Holy] Spirit...a different Gospel." Even in 1 Cor. xii. 8—10 where ἐτέρῳ twice intervenes between ἄλλῳ, the writer means "one...another...some one else...another...someone else," and he omits δέ after ἐτέρῳ to gain emphasis by abruptness.

[2677] These details support Lightfoot's view of Gal. i. 6 against that of Blass, who sees (p. 318) "no distinction." They also shew that each author must be judged by himself. Perhaps in Lk. and Acts the use varies according to the documents compiled by the author. In Lk. xvi. 18 γαμῶν ἑτέραν means (as in Rom. viii. 3) "marrying a new wife," but the parall. Mk x. 11, Mt. xix. 9 have ἄλλην. John, being a peculiarly discriminative writer, probably means (xix. 37) "a different and independent prophecy" or a "second prophecy" (not "another of the same kind"). In Jn v. 43 ἐὰν ἄλλος ἔλθῃ, we might have expected ἕτερος as in Mt. xi. 3, Lk. vii. 19 "Are we to expect a different [deliverer]?" but Jn means "If another come [professing to be of the same kind as myself]," like the Pauline (2 Cor. xi. 4) ἄλλον Ἰησοῦν. On Lk. vii. 19 ἕτερον προσδοκῶμεν perh. softened to Lk. vii. 20 ἄλλον προσδοκῶμεν see 1856.

On the accusative of time (2013)

[2678] In Mk xiii. 35 ὁψὲ ἢ μεσονύκτιον (v. r. -ίου) ἢ ἀλεκτοροφωίας, it is usual (Swete ad loc. and Blass p. 311) to take μ. as accus. But it would be difficult to explain the abrupt change from accus. to genit. More probably μ. is adverbial. See Wetst. ad loc. who first quotes Phrynichus as saying that μεσονύκτιον is "poetic," and then Theocr. xiii. 69, xxiv. 11, in both of which passages the word is adverbial (μεσονύκτιον, in the latter, being illustrated by Kiessling from Anacr. iii. 1 μεσονυκτίοις ποθ' ὥραις). This adverbial use distinguishes Mk from Lk., who (like Lucian and Plutarch) uses μ. as a noun, Lk. xi. 5, Acts xvi. 25, xx. 7¹.

On the article used vocatively (2051)

[2679] As regards xx. 28 Ὁ κύριός μου (in the confession of Thomas) it must be noted that the vocative with ὁ in idiomatic Greek differs in tone and usage from the vocative with the Hebrew article. The latter is frequently solemn and addressed to God; the former is often vernacular and imperious as being addressed to a slave, or to a policeman, or to a nameless person in a crowd, or to some one whose name the speaker humorously affects to have forgotten².

² [2679 a] Aristoph. Ach. 54 "the police [there, off with him]," οἱ τοξόται, Ran. 40 ὁ παῖς, and 521, ὁ παῖς, ἀκολούθει lit. "the boy [in attendance]," Xen. Anab. i. 5. 16 (in a hasty and uncereemonious speech dispensing with the usual ἀνδρες) Κλέαρχε καὶ Πρόξενε καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι οἱ παρόντες "Ελληνες, οὐκ ἴστε ὅτι ποιεῖτε. Perh. too we should follow Steph. in reading ὁ (not with Stalb. ὦ) in Plato Symp. 172 "Mr Phalerian (ὁ Φ.), said he, you there (οὗτος, Apollodorus!" Athen. xiii. 580 D Μειράκιον, ὁ καλός, φησί, addressed to a young butcher with a play on the word καλός (sometimes written up in the streets as a sign of affection). Blass p. 86 quotes Aristoph. Acharn. 242 πρόθ' εἰς τὸ πρόσθεν ὀλίγον ἢ κληφόρος which sounds better than the regular and formal (Dind.) πολὺν 's τὸ πρόσθεν...: but something would depend on the degree of respect attached to the young lady. This idiom is of a piece with the appellative οὗτος, the French "chose," and English slang equivalents.

When Mark uses this vocative in the Hebrew sense, he is careful to prefix the Aramaic original¹. When he uses it imperiously, he does not insert the Aramaic². In expressing the solemn vocative of "Father," divergences would naturally arise in Greek. The Aramaic is Abba, the article, or vocative case, being in the suffix. This might be expressed by (1) πάτερ, (2) ὁ πατήρ, or (3) πατήρ (setting aside Hebraic ᾱ as meaning in LXX something different from the Greek ᾱ). The first of these (supplemented by ἡμῶν in Mt.) has been adopted in the Lord's Prayer, the second (supplemented by Ἀββᾶ) in Mk; John, as we have seen (2052—3), uses both (1) and (3) and appears to distinguish between them.

[2680] These facts should keep the reader's mind open to the possibility of exceptional Johannine usage as to the vocative of κύριος. The vocative κύριε occurs repeatedly in the Egyptian papyri, and it is also used in Talmudic Hebrew and Aramaic, meaning "my lord" or "sir," besides being applied (2049 foll.) to God in the LXX and elsewhere. It might, therefore, imply no special reverence; and Mark puts ῥαββί, but never κύριε, into the mouths of the disciples addressing Jesus³. In the healing of the leper, where Matthew and Luke have κύριε, Mark omits it⁴. The Matthew-Luke tradition represents Christ as condemning those who say to Him Κύριε, Κύριε, without doing His commandments⁵. Origen, in a comment on Jn xiii. 13 ὁμείψ φωνεῖτέ με 'Ο διδάσκαλος καὶ 'Ο κύριος, remarks on the uselessness of ² [2679 ε] Mk ix. 25 τὸ ἄλαλον καὶ κωφὸν πνεῦμα (Mt.-Lk. om.), Delitzsch does not ins. the Heb. article. Lk. has the vocative article in xii. 32 μὴ φοβοῦ τὸ μικρὸν ποίμνιον, and a quasi-vocative article in vi. 25 οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, οἱ ἐμπεπλησμένοι, but xi. 39 νῦν ὑμεῖς οἱ Φ...καθαρίσετε seems rather appositional than vocative. Μακάριοι οἱ πτωχοί is followed in Mt. v. 3 by αὐτῶν but in Lk. vi. 20 by ὑμετέρη, as though vocative; and a corresponding difference continues in the contexts.

⁴ Mk i. 40, Mt. viii. 2, Lk. v. 12.

some utterances of Κύριε, Κύριε, and he adduces 1 Cor. xii. 3 εἰπεῖν Κύριος Ἰησοῦς, and speaks of τὸ καλῶς εἰπεῖν τῷ Σωτῆρι τὸ Ὁ διδάσκαλος. He leaves on us the impression that he does not regard ὁ διδάσκαλος as a Hebraic vocative, but as a title used in the nominative: "Ye address me [using] the [title] Teacher and the [title] Lord¹," and that this seems to him more weighty than the ordinary vocative κύριε, which might mean merely "Sir." He is, of course, writing not about the difference of cases but about the difference of spirit: yet he seems to assume that the Johannine ὁ κύριος, though not predicatively used, implies a confession of lordship.

[2681] In the Apocalypse, κύριε, ὁ θεός is thrice used² vocatively. In Rev. iv. 11 ἄξιός ἐστι, ὁ κύριος καὶ ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν—where A.V. follows an inferior text with simply κύριε—the rendering (in view of the non-existence of ὁ κύριος as a vocative anywhere and the threefold κύριε ὁ θεός in this very book) seems to be "Thou, [being] our Lord and our God, art worthy"; but it differs very little from a vocative.

[2682] Returning to the confession of Thomas, most readers will feel that the ordinary vocative κύριέ μου would have been comparatively common-place, and that it would also have almost required to be followed by some appeal for help, or some ascription of praise. Thomas's silence is far more effective. We have also to consider that the Saviour has previously approved of the appellation ὁ διδάσκαλος καὶ ὁ κύριος: and there is an appropriateness in His leading them on from that to the still higher ὁ κύριος καὶ ὁ θεός. It has been noted above (2680 b) that, where Matthew has ὁ λέγων μοι, Κύριε, Luke has the rare or unique με καλεῖτε, Κύριε, apparently meaning καλεῖτε λέγοντες. Similarly, John might use εἶπεν αὐτῷ in the sense of ἐκάλεσε or εἶπε φωνῶν. These facts favour the view of R.V. (against the one suggested in 2051) that καί means "and" (not "also") and that the meaning is "Thomas said to him [the words] 'My lord—and my God³.'"

On ix. 30 ἐν τούτῳ γάρ (2068)

[2683] In ix. 30 ἐν τούτῳ γάρ τὸ θαυμαστόν... a, b, and SS omit γάρ. D, e and Walton's Syriac have οὖν. A and others have ἐν γάρ τούτῳ. Also e must have read τοῦτο for ἐν τούτῳ (and Scrivener's Adversaria mentions τοῦτο as a Gk reading). Τό before θαυμαστόν is omitted by AD and others. Diatess. has "From this is the wonder." Blass (p. 275) remarks that the words are "equivalent to an interrogative οὐ γάρ ἐν τούτῳ." This suggests that οὐ interrogative may have been dropped by most mss. but may have been read by D and e as οὖν supplanting γάρ. But οὐ γάρ interrogative, though good classical Greek, does not occur in John, who frequently uses it in statement (iii. 17, 34, iv. 9, xii. 47 etc.). Nonnus has Τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι τὸ θαῦμα πολὺ πλεόν ὅτι περ ὑμῶν ὅς τις ἄγνωστος, shewing that he read γάρ¹. Did he also read τοῦτο with e, and, if so, ἐν as ἕν meaning "unique," "preeminent"? Comp. Epict. i. 17. 13 ἄρ' οὖν τοῦτο ἐστι τὸ μέγα καὶ τὸ θαυμαστόν...; "Is this, then, the great [object], the wonderful [ideal]...?"

On ὁ δέ, ἡ δέ (2071)

possible that in xx. 28 the original was ΕΙΠΕΝΑΥΤΟΤΟΟΚΥΡΙΟΣ and that the second το has been omitted. Τό, when thus or similarly used, and also when prefixed to interrogations, is very liable to corruption, as in Mk ix. 23, Mt. xix. 18, Lk. i. 62, xix. 48, Gal. iv. 25, 1 Thess. iv. 1 etc.

[2682 b] Nonnus has Θωμᾶς δ' ὑπερόμνητις ἀμοιβάδα ῥήξατο φωνήν, Κόλρανος ἡμέτερος καὶ ἐμὸς θεός, where the change of pron. ("our...my") is rather startling. But perhaps he felt that "my Lord" was liable to be confused with "my lord," which means little more than "Sir." "My God" could not be thus misunderstood: and the sing. "my" was preferable here as it expressed Thomas's personal conviction that his "lord" was also "God." I do not however think that Nonnus means "our Lord [is] also my God" as suggested in 2051.

[2683 b] The translation given above is that of the editors, except that they have omitted a rendering of γάρ in each case, and I have inserted it together with a conjectural addition of the ellipsis implied. Note also (1) εἴρηχεν (sic) used for εἶπεν once at least, if not twice, (2) the use of οὔτε...ἀλλά.

In iv. 32, v. 17, vi. 20, R.V. has "But he [Jesus] said," in vii. 41 "But some said," in xx. 25 "But he [Thomas] said"—because in all these cases there is adversativeness. Besides iv. 32, v. 17, vi. 20, it is used once more (xxi. 6 R.V. "and he said") of Jesus, in His reply to the saying of the disciples that they have taken no fish. Perhaps it would be best to render it "but," so as to suggest adversativeness: "They said, We have taken nothing [and were on the point of desisting from fishing], but he said, 'Cast the net...and ye shall find fish.'" Then all the four passages where John uses ὁ δέ concerning Jesus will represent Him as correcting or comforting the disciples or opposing the Jews.

On ἥπερ (2092)

[2685] ἥπερ occurs emphatically with μάλλον in Xen. Conv. i. 15 οὔτε γὰρ ἔγωγε σπουδάσαι ἂν δυνάμην μάλλον ἥπερ ἀθάνατος γενέσθαι, "I could no more be serious than become immortal," implying "I could not possibly become immortal." For Eustathius on Iliad i. 117 see Steph. ἥπερ.

On ἵνα (2093)

[2686] John's predilection for ἵνα does not appear to be sufficiently recognised in Blass's remarks (p. 223) (a) "John, Matthew, and Mark employ it very freely. Luke much more rarely especially in the Acts," (p. 321) (b) "Probably even in the Gospels its insertion is often the work of scholiasts": (c) "in Jo. v. 36 read τελειῶσαι with Tert.," (d) "in xi. 31 κλαῦσαι (without ἐκεῖ) with Syr. Lew. and Chrys.," (e) "[in] xi. 55 [read] ἀγνίσαι with Chrys.," (f) "[in] xii. 20 [read] προσκυνῆσαι with Syr. Lew. and Chrys."

[2687] To begin with (a). Since John employs ἵνα about (1726) as often as Mk, Mt. and Lk. all together¹, it is reasonable to expect, in him, many uses of it that would seem suspicious in the other evangelists but (b) are not to be suspected, in his Gospel, of being "the work of scholiasts." (c) As regards Tertullian's rendering of v. 36 ἵνα τελειῶσω (Prax. 31) "consummare," it should be noted that whereas the Latin versions agree with the Greek order, Tertullian disagrees; and it is quite possible that he wrote "dedit ut consummarē," and that the dropping of "ut" after "-it" has led to the reading "consummare¹." Chrysostom twice quotes the verse with ἵνα², Nonnus paraphrases it as ὄφρα τελέσω. The ancient Latin translations have "ut." John himself repeats this very phrase with ἵνα. Why should all these witnesses weigh less than a possibly corrupt text in Tertullian? (d) In xi. 31, it is true that SS renders εἰς τὸ μνημεῖον ἵνα κλαύσῃ ἐκεῖ. ἡ οὖν M. "to the grave...to weep: and she Mary"; but this, besides being slight evidence, may be the result of textual corruption³. In any case Chrys. does not quote this passage without ἵνα, but merely refers to it in a paraphrase, "all began to follow her as though she were going away to weep (ὡς κλαῦσαι ἀπερχομένη)." Nonnus has ὄφρα. (e) In xi. 55 ἀνέβησαν... ἵνα ἀγνίσωσιν ἑαυτούς it is true that Mrs Lewis renders SS freely by "to," but SS has "[in order] that" and Mr Burkitt has "that." Chrysostom condenses and paraphrases three verses thus (xi. 55—7) πολλοὶ δὲ ἐκ τῆς χώρας ἀνέβησαν ἀγνίσαι ἑαυτούς. καὶ ἔδωκαν παραγγελίας οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ Φ. ἵνα πιάσωσιν αὐτόν. Nonnus has ὄφρα. (f) In xii. 20 ἦσαν δὲ Ἕλληνες τινες ἐκ τῶν ἀναβαινόντων ἵνα προσκυνήσωσιν ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ, SS has "to," and Chrysostom has ἦσαν δὲ τινες τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἀναβάντες προσκυνῆσαι εἰς τὴν ἑορτήν. This is the nearest approach to evidence of an original infinitive. But it is quite unconvincing. It simply shews that Chrysostom would himself prefer the inf. to ἵνα after verbs of motion and that he sometimes lapses into it when he quotes freely or paraphrases. As regards SS, or any translation, its evidence, on this point, may be very slight. Comp. i. 27 ἄξιος ἵνα λύσω (2104 a) where there is no suspicion of any various reading. The Latin versions mostly have "dignus solvere," Vulg. "ut solvam," mm "ut solvere" (sic); but it would be absurd to deny that John wrote ἵνα, although the parallel Synoptists have ἱκανός with infinitive.

³ [2687 d] It is pretty certain that SS has read ἐκεῖ as though it were ἐκεῖν i.e. "she." This explains its omission of "there." Reading the context thus incorrectly, the translator may have dropped ἵνα after ἰον and taken κλαγῆ as κλαγαῖ to make sense.

On viii. 56 ἡγαλλιάσατο ἵνα (2097)

[2688] On viii. 56 ἡγαλλιάσατο ἵνα ἴδῃ, Blass (p. 225) says "the meaning can only be 'to long with ecstasy' 'to rejoice that he should see': and he compares Herm. Vis. iii. 8. 1 (misprinted iii. 8. 7) περιχαρὴς ἐγενόμην τοῦ ἰδεῖν, and iii. 10. 6 περὶ τούτων περίλυπος ἡμῶν λίαν τοῦ γινῶναι, also (p. 321) Libanius (A.D. 350) Apol. Socr. § 68 τέρπειτο ἰδεῖν 'in the prospect of seeing.' But, according to this view, Herm. Vis. iii. 10. 6 ought to mean "I was very sorrowful that I should know," or "in the prospect of knowing," which is the opposite of what is meant. In both passages of Hermas, περιχαρὴς and περίλυπος appear to be used like πολλὴν χαρὰν (or λύπην) ἔχων followed by a genitive governed by the implied noun. Comp. (if the text is correct) Joseph. Ant. xix. 2. 3 περιχαρὴς κ. ἐλπίδος κ. φρονήματος. In any case, these instances afford little guidance as to the way in which John would use ἀγαλλιᾶσθαι ἵνα. Nonnus has ἰδεῖν ἡγάλλετο¹, which Steph. (162 c) quotes, in about seven columns of instances, as the sole instance of an inf. with this verb. Steph. also gives (ib.) one instance of the accus., but in that and in every other case the verb refers to past or present causes of joy and never means "look forward with joy to the future." In John, some reference to the future is needed, because of the following words, "and he saw." We can hardly suppose that John meant "Rejoiced because he saw, and he saw."

[2689] The probable explanation is that ἡγαλλιάσατο—which may be here conveniently rendered "exulted" to distinguish it from ἐχάρη "rejoiced"—expresses the Jewish tradition that Abraham was filled with a divine "strength"¹ and "joy in believing"²; in order that, in accordance with the divine decree, he might receive the reward of the vision of the Day of the Lord³. Origen expressly

¹ [2689 a] Comp. Rom. iv. 20 "he (i.e. Abraham) was strengthened (ἐνεδυναμώθη) in, or by, faith (τῇ πίστει)," Heb. xi. 11 "By faith also Sarah herself received strength (δύναμιν)."

² [2689 b] Comp. Rom. xv. 13 "Now may the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing."

[2689 d] The thought runs through the whole of the Bible that "exultant joy" in God is a gift from God, or a virtue to be practised: but the word (which Steph. does not quote from any source but LXX or Christian writings) does not occur (in any form) in the LXX till 2 S. i. 20 R.V. "lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph" (LXX ἀγαλλιάσωνται, but Aq. and the rest, γαυριάσωσι). When ἀγαλλιάσθαι occurs as rendering Hebrew, it is restricted (with six exceptions) to the Psalms (about 50) and Isaiah (10). In 3 Macc. ii. 17, as in 2 S. i. 20, it is used in a bad sense, being perh. used like ἀγάλλομαι "plume myself," "boast." It represents 7 (not 8, as Oxf. Conc.) Hebrew words including "sing," "boast," etc., but Aq. appears to have restricted it to "exultation" in a good sense. In N.T. the verb (with the exc. of Mt. v. 12 ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, parall. Lk. vi. 23 σικτήσατε) is restricted to Lk., Jn, Acts, 1 Pet. and Rev. Consequently, although the Pauline Epistles emphatically inculcate the virtue or duty of "rejoicing," we might easily miss the connexion between this and the "exultation" of Abraham: but the Apostle certainly regards "joy" or "rejoicing" as a gift—like "faith" and "hope"—to be used with a view to the ultimate seeing of the truth "face to face." Paul, like John, would maintain that we are to "exult," that we may "see" Christ's "day."

[2689 e] The non-use of ἀγαλλιάσθαι in the Pentateuch perhaps prevented Philo from using the word largely (if at all); but he (i. 602—3) dwells on the "laughter" of Abraham (Gen. xvii. 17) "Then Abraham fell upon his face and laughed—" reminding us that "Isaac" means "laughter," that the soul, so to speak, "rejoices before joy," and that "hope anticipates the coming good and indicates it to the soul that is to be its permanent possessor." Philo's Quaest. in Gen. (on Gen. xvii. 17) says that the "falling on the face" implied "an act of adoration and an excess of divine ecstasy" and also an act of confession, and adds "jure autem risit exultans de promissione magna spe adimpletus." Compare Rom. iv. 18—21 ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ἐπίστευσεν εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸν πατέρα πολλῶν ἐθνῶν...δοὺς δόξαν τῷ θεῷ καὶ πληροφορηθεὶς.

says that Abraham was not one of those who “desired to see” the Day of the Lord—and he adds that Abraham “rejoiced” in offering up his son Isaac—a sacrifice universally recognised as a type of the crucifixion¹. Irenaeus also couples the ἀγαλλίασις of Abraham with that of Mary the Lord’s mother²: and probably it is implied that in both cases this exultant and ecstatic belief was a gift from God with a view to (ἵνα) the fulfilment of divine purpose. The Epistle to the Romans (iv. 18) says the same thing in different words, when it declares that Abraham “believed to the intent that [in accordance with God’s will] he might become (εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτόν) the father of many nations¹.” John elsewhere uses the very exceptional passive form (ἀγαλλιαθῆναι) concerning the Pharisees, who were willing (?) “to be gladdened,” for a season, in the light of John the Baptist².

² [2689 g] Irenaeus iv. 5. 3—4 has “...exultavit ut videret..., et gavisus est.” Quid enim? “Credidit Abraham Deo...(Rom. iv. 3, Gen. xv. 6),” and “Propheta ergo cum esset A. et videret in Spiritu diem adventus Domini et passionis dispositionem...exultavit vehementer. Non incognitus igitur erat Dominus Abrahae cuius diem concupivit videre.” Either this is inconsistently translated or Irenaeus halted between two meanings, “exultare,” and “concupiscere.” The translator also renders ἐχάρη first “gavisus est” and then “exultavit vehementer”—or else Irenaeus interchanged ἐχάρη and ἡγαλλιάσατο. The context speaks of Abraham as “following the Logos...in order that (ἵνα) he might find his abiding city (πολιτευθῇ) with the Logos” and as “willingly (προθύμως)” giving up his son as a sacrifice to God, “in order that (ἵνα) God also might be pleased to give His son as a sacrifice for us.” There is a suggestion (though no more) that Irenaeus took ἵνα ἴδῃ to mean “in order that [Abraham] might see [the Incarnation and the Sacrifice of Christ typified in the sacrifice of Isaac].”

[2689 h] Elsewhere Irenaeus paraphrases thus, iv. 7. 1 “Abraham...concupivit eam diem videre, uti et ipse complecteretur Christum: et per Spiritum prophetiae eam videns exultavit,” where the last word seems to confuse ἡγαλλιάσατο and ἐχάρη. He passes at once to Simeon’s utterance (“viderunt oculi mei salutare

tuum”) and that of Mary, “Magnificat...et exultavit,” and concludes “Bene igitur Dominus noster...dicens, Abraham pater vester exultavit ut videret diem meum et vidit, et gavisus est” (quoted similarly in ii. 22. 6).

[2689 i] This mention of the Magnificat (Lk. i. 47) ἡγαλλίασεν τὸ πνεῦμά μου raises the question whether ἡγαλλίασεν (or -σε), read by all mss. there, means something different from ἡγαλλιάσατο. The active is not found in LXX anywhere, nor in N.T. elsewhere exc. in 1 Pet. i. 8 (where B has preserved it), and Rev. xix. 7 χαίρωμεν καὶ ἀγαλλιῶμεν (where several authorities have ἀγαλλιῶμεθα). 1 Pet. and Rev. may have used the active in a special sense as will be seen below (2689 l). But that Lk. should use it thus is improbable, as he has the middle thrice (in Lk. and Acts together) and applies it once to Christ Himself. A Greek tradition printed as Origen’s in connexion with his Latin comment on Lk. i. 47, says τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα αὐτῆς ἡγαλλιάσατο...εἶτα ἡγαλλιάσατο τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτῆς, and Cramer prints a comment, διὸ καὶ ἡγαλλιάσατο τὸ πνεῦμά μου. This may be the true reading. If ἡγαλλίασα came at the end of a line and τοτο πνευμα at the beginning of the next, it would be very natural that the first το should be dropped, and α changed to ε for sense.

² [2689 k] On v. 35 ἡβλήσατε ἀγαλλιαθῆναι πρὸς ὥραν ἐν τῷ φωτὶ αὐτοῦ, Chrysostom says “they merely admired (ἐθαύμασαν) for a season,” Cramer has ἀπεδέξαντο πρὸς ὥραν, SS “ye wished to make your boast for the hour in his light,” Nonnus ἐφαιδρύνασθε...ἀγαλλόμενοι. Clem. Alex. (815) substitutes ἀγαλλιαθῶμεν for ἀγαλλιασώμεθα in quoting Ps. cxviii. 24. In many Christian writers (e.g. Chrys. on Gal. vi. 17 ἀγάλλεται τραύματα περιφέρων, but Vulg. ἀγαλλιάσεται) there is much confusion between ἀγάλλομαι “boast [of what is my own],” and ἀγαλλιάομαι “rejoice, or, sing praises [to the glory of God].” Field (on Ps. xxxiii. 1) has πανταχοῦ τὸ ἀγαλλιάσθε, ὁ μὲν Ἀκύλας, αἰνεῖτε, ὁ δὲ Σύμμαχος, εὐφημεῖτε, ἡρμηνεύουσιν: and it is true that Aq. substitutes “praise” for the LXX ἀγαλλ. when the word means “jubilate,” e.g. Ps. v. 11, xx. 5, xxxiii. 1. This shews that, in the second century at all events, students of the Bible gave thought

Here he uses the middle, probably with some general allusion (as Chrysostom says)¹ to the "day" of the Lord's sacrifice, and, if so, with a special allusion to the Psalmist's words, "This is the day that the Lord hath made, Let us exult and be glad in it²." But the principal allusion seems to be to the "laughing" of Abraham before the birth of "Laughter" i.e. Isaac, when he lay prostrate, adoring the goodness of God, abased (as Philo says) in the flesh, but lifted up in the spirit, rapt into the seventh heaven, in order that he might

to this particular word, and prepares us to believe that some, without going with Aquila so far as to change the word, might change its form, representing the mere passive feeling of joy by ἀγαλλιαθῆναι or other passive forms, but the active outburst of ecstatic joy—expressing itself in responsive praise and magnifying of God for His mercies—by active or middle forms.

[2689 l] This may explain 1 Pet. i. 6—9, which should perhaps be punctuated thus, ἐν ᾧ ἀγαλλιάσθε—ὀλίγον ἄρτι, εἰ δέον, λυπηθέντες... ἵνα τὸ δοκίμιον... ἐν ἀποκαλύψει Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ—ὃν οὐκ ἰδόντες ἀγαπάτε, εἰς ὃν ἄρτι μὴ ὁρῶντες πιστεύοντες δὲ ἀγαλλιάτε (so B and Orig.) χαρὰ ἀνεκλαλήτῳ καὶ δεδοξασμένῳ, κομιζόμενοι τὸ τέλος τῆς πίστεως, σωτηρίαν ψυχῶν. Here sense requires (1) a marked difference between ἐν ᾧ ἀγαλλιάσθε and εἰς ὃν πιστεύοντες ἀγαλλιάτε, (2) a climax in the latter. "Some Latin fathers and inferior Vulg. mss.," says Hort, take the former (ἀγαλλιάσθε) as fut. "exultabitis." But a better meaning may be expressed in the foll. paraphrase, "In whom ye are made to rejoice—in spite of your momentary sufferings, which shall result to your good in the day of the final revealing of Jesus Christ—whom, I say, not having seen, ye love, to whom even now, though not seeing, yet believing, your hearts go out in ecstasy with a joy ineffable and divinely glorified." The Apostle speaks of the "rejoicing" of the Christian first from a passive, then from an active, point of view. The active joy is called "glorified" because it is purified from all thought of self, as the rejoicer merges himself in God—like Abraham (Rom. iv. 20) "giving glory to God."

[2689 o] Clem. Alex. 973 gives a Valentinian quotation of viii. 56 stopping at τὴν ἡμέραν τὴν ἐμὴν, and continuing thus, τὴν ἐν σαρκὶ παρουσίαν. ὅθεν ἀναστὰς ὁ κύριος εὐγγελισατο τοὺς δικαίους τοὺς ἐν τῇ ἀναπαύσει καὶ μετέστησεν αὐτοὺς... apparently referring it to Abraham in Hades waiting to be liberated by the Saviour.

*see—and help all mankind to see—the vision of the Father sacrificing Himself in the sacrifice of the Son*¹.

On ἵνα with indicative (2114)

[2690] The instances of ἵνα with fut. in John are so few that no safe inference is possible as to any difference of meaning. In vii. 3 ἵνα...θεωρήσουσιν (v.r. -ήσων) there may be an intention to blend purpose with assured result. In xvii. 2 ἵνα...δώσει (v. r. δωση, δωσω etc.) compared with Lk. xx. 10 ἵνα δώσουσιν and 1 Cor. ix. 18 ἵνα θήσω, it is possible that the use of the future may have been facilitated by the tendency to substitute for forms of the 2nd aorist active (see Blass, p. 43) forms of the 1st aorist active in -σα, which resembled forms of the future. It would be an anachronism to suppose in N.T. the late Gk aorists ἔδωσα² and ἔθησα: but, long before these forms came into use, there might be a tendency to avoid the 2nd aorists of verbs in -μι, because of their perplexing irregularity and erroneous use as in Ox. Pap. cclxix. col. ii. 8—12 (A.D. 57) εἰάν σοι δῶ (for δῶ) τὸ ἀργύριον δὲς (for δὸς) αὐτῷ ἀποχὴν, καὶ εἰάν σοι εὐ[ρ]ης ἀσφαλὴν (sic) δὲς (for δὸς) αὐτῷ τὸ ἀργύριον ἐνέγκαι μοι, and Fayûm cix. 4 τοὺς τρεῖς στατήρες (sic) οὓς εἶρηκέ σοι Σέλευκος δῶναι (for δοῦναι) μοι ἤδη δὸς Κλέωνι. It is probable that ἵνα with particular futures that had an aorist subjunctive sound would come into use long before ἵνα became customary with the future in general. But the future after ἵνα would also displace, at a comparatively early date, irregular and rare forms of the subjunctive.

On St Paul's autograph (2114)

[2691] As regards the interchange of ο and ω in a passage written or partly written by St Paul's own hand, compare the Fayûm Papyri 110 foll., which gives several letters from one

Gemellus¹. The first of these is dated A.D. 94. In this the spelling

[2691 b] As regards N.T., in Philem. 18—19 "If he...oweth thee ought, put that to mine account; I Paul have written (R.V. write) it (ἔγραψα) with mine own hand, I will repay it," the aorist probably refers to "put...account" (repeated, in effect, in "I will repay it"); and ib. 21 ἔγραψά σοι refers to all that precedes. In Rom. xv. 15, ἔγραψα refers (Fritzsche) to previous portions of the letter. In 1 Cor. v. 9—11 ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ...νῦν δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, both aorists—however τῇ ἐπ. may be explained—appear to refer to something previously written; and this is certainly true of 1 Cor. ix. 15 (οὐκ ἔγραψα δὲ ταῦτα, which refers to ib. 3—14), 2 Cor. ii. 3, 4, 9, vii. 12. The past meaning of the aorist is made all the more probable because St Paul frequently uses γράφω or γράφομεν (1 Cor. xiv. 37, 2 Cor. i. 13, xiii. 10, Gal. i. 20, 2 Thess. iii. 17, 1 Tim. iii. 14) when he really means the present "I am writing." In 1 Pet. v. 12, ἔγραψα comes at the close of the epistle and means (as R.V.) "I have written." In 1 Jn ii. 13, 14 (bis), 21, 26, v. 13, ἔγραψα is to be distinguished from ib. i. 4 γράφομεν and ii. 1, 7, 8, 12, 13 (bis), γράφω, and Westcott—who rightly regards ἔγραψα as a true aorist—supposes, between the two tenses in ii. 13, "a pause in thought if not a break in the composition of the letter." Even without that hypothesis, the aorist causes no difficulty, "I write (pres.) unto you, children, because...[Another reason why] I wrote (aor.) unto you, children, [was] because..." In any case, ἔγραψα in these Johannine passages means (R.V. txt) "have written" or (R.V. marg.) "wrote." Ἐπέστειλα (R.V. "I have written") occurs at the close of the Epistle to the Hebrews (xiii. 22).

[2691 c] Lightf. refers to the "epistolary" use of ἔπεμψα. This aorist, in Acts xxiii. 30, occurs at the end of a letter in which Claudius Lysias says, in effect, to Felix, "Along with this letter I have sent you a prisoner." It occurs also in 2 Cor. viii. 18, 22, ix. 3, Eph. vi. 22, Col. iv. 8 about sending "brethren" or friends, who, in all cases, bring the Apostle's letter with them. Similarly, in an English letter, many would prefer to say "I have enclosed, or, enclose, a cheque" (though strict logic would require "I shall enclose") meaning "you will find that I have enclosed." If we were to say "I shall enclose, or, shall send, a cheque," it might often lead the reader to suppose that a cheque would be sent later on. The same objection would apply to πέμψω in a Greek letter. We cannot argue from this obviously convenient use of ἔπεμψα that letter-writers would adopt an obviously inconvenient use of ἔγραψα—inconvenient, because it would merely is excellent. In the second we have ὠδοῦ for ὁδοῦ, [κ]όμῃ for κώμῃ and λέγον for λέγων, in five consecutive lines, and similar substitutions occur in later letters. The reason for the difference is that the first letter was written for Gemellus by a scribe, but the second and following ones by Gemellus himself: and he himself regularly confused ο and ω. In the LXX, comp. Gen. iv. 5 "his countenance fell," LXX συνέπεσεν τῷ προσώπῳ, Aq. ἔπεσε τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ, Josh. xv. 8 LXX ἐπὶ νότου, A νότου, Sir. xliii. 26 LXX εὐωδία for ⲚC εὐοδία etc. In Gal. vi. 8—12, beside the interchanges of ο and ω mentioned in 2114, B clearly shews ἡλικούς for πηλίκους, a very minute π being perhaps inserted above the line, and περιτεμεσθαί occurs at the beginning of the line for περιτέμενσθαι. The photo-represent the same thing as the epistolary γράφω, which is very frequent, whereas the epistolary πέμπω nowhere occurs in N.T.

[2691 d'] Chrys. on Gal. vi. 11 takes ἔγραψα to refer to "the whole letter." He and a "vir...eruditus" mentioned by Jerome—but Wetst. and Migne give Jerome's evidence very differently (2785 foll.)—regarded the "large letters" as the uncouth handwriting of one unaccustomed to write Greek. Theodorus, on the other hand, thinks that the Apostle, "being on the point of sharply attacking (μέλλων καθάπτεσθαι) his adversaries, used larger letters [than usual] emphasizing [the fact] that he himself neither blushes nor denies what was being said (ἐμφαίνων ὅτι οὔτε αὐτὸς ἐρυθριᾷ οὔτε ἀρνείται τὰ λεγόμενα)." The "vir...eruditus"—about whom Jerome adds (Migne) "miror quomodo rem ridiculam locutus sit"—was not improbably Chrysostom himself, though Migne dissents from this conclusion. In any case, Jerome's own explanation is quite unsatisfactory, as he translates πηλίκους as though it were πολούς. As to the view of Theodorus, favoured by Lightfoot, that "large letters" might correspond to our underlining, no evidence for it is alleged by Lightfoot, nor has any been (so far as I know) adduced from the numerous papyri discovered since Lightfoot wrote. Lucian's two mentions of "great letters" refer only to placards and public inscriptions (i. 750 Herm. 11, ii. 903 De Gymnas. 22).

[2691 e] A man writing, contrary to his custom, in "large letters," could not reproduce the peculiarities of his handwriting in a natural manner. But St Paul says "See with what large letters I have written with my own hand" in such a way as to suggest that they could recognise his handwriting, as in 2 Thess. iii. 17 "the salutation of me Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle, thus I write." It is probable that this "token" was written in large letters, and that St Paul, on the very rare occasions when he wrote Greek at all, always wrote thus. But the special peculiarity about the autographic writing to the Galatians was that it extended to a passage of some length. Some of this almost certainly preceded the word ἴδετε. Perhaps (as Chrysostom maintained) it extended to the whole of the epistle. If so, we need not, of course, adopt the view that the writer "gloried in his imperfect knowledge" (2788); he may be referring to the laborious "large letters" as a proof that he loved the Galatians. When forced to rebuke them more bitterly than he had rebuked any other church, he would not rebuke them through the hand of an amanuensis.

graph also shews something wrong in the accentuation of χειρί and perhaps in the following ο, of ΧΕΙPIO. It may be urged that Gemellus, though a man of means, was not highly educated, whereas St Paul, as a youth, perhaps studied at Tarsus. But Augustus is said by Suetonius to have been a bad speller (2790). And if a Roman Emperor, why not a Jew—who probably had little practice in Greek writing during his training under Gamaliel in Jerusalem, and who certainly wrote Greek, for the most part, through an amanuensis? On iv. 45 καὶ αὐτοὶ γάρ (2167) [2692] In iv. 45 καὶ αὐτοὶ γάρ ἦλθον, why is special emphasis apparently laid on αὐτοί? Καὶ γὰρ αὐτοί, “for they also,” would have emphasized the pronoun; but καὶ αὐτοὶ γάρ seems to give a special emphasis. Does it mean “even the despised Galilaeans”? Chrys., in his comments, suggests this view, calling attention to the contempt with which they were regarded by the Jews. But he omits αὐτοί (though Migne’s Latin translation supplies it). Origen (ad loc.), besides quoting with αὐτοί, appears to attempt to explain it thus, Πλὴν ἔξεστι Γαλιλαῖον ὄντα ἐορτάζειν ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις γινόμενον, ὅπου ὁ ναὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ θεωρεῖν πάντα ὅσα ἐποίει ἐκεῖ ὁ Ἰησοῦς... Ἀρχὴ γὰρ ἡ ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις ἐορτὴ τοῖς Γαλιλαίοις ἐστὶ τοῦ καὶ δέξασθαι τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐλθόντα πρὸς αὐτούς. This seems to mean, “Though the Galilaeans were at a distance from Jerusalem and somewhat despised, it was quite lawful for them [as distinct from the Samaritans mentioned in the preceding chapter] to keep the Feast in Jerusalem and [hence possible for them] to behold Christ’s works there... [And this is essential to the narrative] for the Feast in Jerusalem was, in effect, the beginning of the Gospel for them.” He proceeds to argue that the Galilaeans would not have received Jesus if they had not gone up to the Feast in Jerusalem. Nonnus inserts αὐτοί, calling the Galilaeans ἐσμὸς θεοστοργῶν and adding Καὶ γὰρ ἐς ἱερὸν ἡμᾶρ ἐπεστιχώωντο καὶ αὐτοί. Steph. 521 B—D gives freq. instances of καὶ γάρ but none where the phrase is broken by an intervening noun or pronoun.

On ὅπως ἄν (2173)

[2693] ὅπως ἄν, in the Psalms, is the regular equivalent of the Heb. “in order that,” “for the sake of,” when used with verb, Ps. ix. 14, xxx. 12, xlviii. 13, li. 4, lx. 5, cviii. 6 etc. The same Heb. is rendered by Aq. (fragm. ed. Taylor) in 2 K. xxiii. 24 ὅπως where LXX has ἵνα (before ἀναστήσῃ). In Proverbs, the same Heb. (occurring thrice) is rendered once εἰ γάρ, twice ἵνα, and in Job (occurring twice) once καὶ τότε, and once ἢ ἴνα. In Egypt. Pap. Indices ὅπως with subjunct. is mostly confined to petitions but occurs twice (Oxyr. 532. 13, Fayûm 121. 10) in private letters.

On ὅτι = ὥστε (2186)

[2694] Ὅτι is equivalent to ὥστε, "so that" in xiv. 22 Κύριε, τί γέγονεν ὅτι ἡμῖν μέλλεις ἐμφανίζειν σεαυτὸν καὶ οὐχὶ τῷ κόσμῳ; The Diatessaron, it is true, renders this "What is the purpose of thy intention to shew thyself..." But this indicates the reading τί ἐστὶν ὅτι, the reading of D, SS (Chrys. has 1st τί ὅτι, and 2nd τί ἐστὶν ὅτι;). Nonnus has Κοίρανε, πῶς τεὸν εἶδος ὁμοφρονέων ἀναφαίνεις Μούνοισι σοῖς ἐτάροισι καὶ οὐ θηήτορι κόσμῳ; Theoretically, τί γέγονεν ὅτι might be rendered, "Why hath it come to pass that...?" But ὅτι, "so that," is very common in O.T. in such phrases as "What is man that...?" (Heb. ii. 6, qu. Ps. viii. 4), "What have I done that...?" and this is probably the meaning here: "Lord, what [new thing] hath come to pass so that thou dost purpose...?" It is one of the very few certain instances of ὅτι "so that," in N.T.² The Thesaurus quotes no instances of ὅτι meaning ὥστε except from Scholiasts on Theocritus³. This Johannine instance of ὅτι in interrogation is quite distinct from the Byzantine and post-Christian use of it after τοσοῦτος etc. (2697).

On ὅτι μή (2187)

[2695] On iii. 18 ὁ μὴ πιστένων ἤδη κέκριται ὅτι μὴ πεπίστευκεν εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ μονογενοῦς υἱοῦ τοῦ θεοῦ⁴, Blass says (p. 255) that it

² [2694 b] In Mk iv. 41, Mt. viii. 27, Lk. viii. 25, ὅτι may have been used by the writers to mean "such that," or "for indeed." In Lk. iv. 36 ὅτι (which has caused v.r. in parall. Mk i. 27) prob. means "because" or "for indeed."

⁴ [2695 a] Syr. Curet. (Burk.) "But he that believeth not is guilty, in that he believed not in the name of the only Son of God," SS "and he that believeth not in him is judged on [the ground] that he believed not in the name of the approved Son (sic)."

is the only exception to the rule of using οὐ—"unless indeed the late form οὔτι μή should be taken as an indication of the spuriousness of the subordinate clause which is omitted by Chrys. and is very tautological." But οὔτι μή is found in Joseph. Ap. i. 23 διήμαρτον οὔτι μὴ ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἡμῶν βίβλοις ἐνέτυχον, and Epict. iv. 4. 8 ὅταν γὰρ ἐσθίης, ἄχθῃ οὔτι μὴ ἀναγινώσκεις (besides later writers such as Justin Martyr and Lucian), so that the construction, relatively to John, can hardly be called "late." Chrys., it is true, omits the words, but the context indicates that he merely omits them because they seemed to him unnecessary for the purpose of his comment. Nonnus paraphrases them fully. Origen appears to have read them, if we restore a missing μή in a passage distinguishing between "believing in him" and "believing in his name¹." Origen's argument is condensed, but it seems to be this: "Christ says 'He that believeth in me is not judged,' but not 'He that believeth in my name is not judged.' He does not go on to say 'He that believeth not in me hath been judged already' [He says simply 'he that believeth not, meaning 'believeth not in any way']: for perhaps 'he that believeth in His name,' does at all events (μὲν) believe; wherefore he does not deserve to 'have been judged already,' though inferior to him that 'believeth in Him.'" From this it appears probable that Origen assumed in this context the existence of a negative clause about "not believing in the name," though he does not quote it. He actually quotes it in his commentary (Latin) on the Epistle to the Romans². In his commentary on the Psalms he stops short, as Chrys. does, at the word κρίνεται, but it is for brevity; and there he adds "But I understand the words 'he that believeth not' to stand for 'he that disbelieveth'." This may partly explain John's exceptional use of μή. It may be taken as a sort of alpha privative. "The disbeliever (ὁ μὴ-πιστεύων)" is condemned because "he has disbelieved (μὴ-πεπίστευκεν)." But the precedent μὴ πιστεύων occurs also in 1 Jn (2187) where ὅτι οὐ follows; so that it does not suffice as a complete explanation.

² [2695 c] Lomm. vi. 99 "Omnis qui credit in me non judicabitur. Qui autem non credit, jam judicatus est quia non credit in nomine unigeniti Filii Dei." Both in Gk and Latin, Origen has "He that believeth in me" (for "believeth in him"). So has Irenaeus v. 27. 2. The reason is, that all three quotations are preceded by "The Lord said," or words to that effect, and "The Lord said, 'He that believeth in him'" would be liable to misunderstanding as meaning "He that believeth in God." But the quotations afford an instructive illustration of the manner in which a saying about "the Son of God" or "the Son of man" might be altered to a saying in the first person.

On ὥς (2201)

[2696] ὥς, "donec," is mentioned in Steph. (p. 2108 A) only as an unsatisfactory rendering in Odyss. iii. 301 where ὥς "when," or ὥς "thus," is to be preferred. It certainly seems to mean "while" (less probably "as") in Ignat. Smyrn. 9 ὥς [ἔτι] καιρὸν ἔχομεν, 2 Clem. Rom. 8 ὥς οὖν ἐσμὲν ἐπὶ γῆς, 9 ὥς ἔχομεν καιρόν. But two of these three passages appear to be quotations of Gal. vi. 10 ὥς καιρὸν ἔχομεν (prob. a misspelling (2114, 2691) of ἔχομεν) R.V. "as we have opportunity"; and, even if the quoters regarded ὥς as equivalent to ἕως, it by no means follows that they were right. In the Indices of the Egyptian Papyri ἕως is fairly frequent, but not ὥς except once in ὥς ἄν. In Lk. xii. 58 ὥς γὰρ ὑπάγεις (R.V.) "as thou art going" there is apparently no notion of "as long as" till Luke adds ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ (Mt. v. 25 ἕως ὅτου εἶ...ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ)—i.e. "[being still] in the way." In modern Greek (Blass p. 332), ὥς is said to be used for ἕως in such a phrase as ὥς ἔτι ζῶ, but in non-modern Greek, there appears to be no evidence at present for such a usage of ὥς with indicative except that given above. In Gal. vi. 10, there seems to be a reference to the preceding words: "Let us not faint, for in its own [i.e. the harvest's] appointed time (καιρῷ γὰρ ἰδίῳ) we [workmen] shall reap the harvest if we faint not. Well then as we [workmen] have an appointed time (ἄρα οὖν ὥς καιρὸν ἔχομεν, not -ομεν) let us work..." In view of the exceptional misspellings in the context of Gal. vi. 10 the conclusion is uncertain, but probably ὥς is not used for ἕως, and the passage means either "as we have an appointed time¹," or "according as we have opportunity."

² [2696 a] ὥς ἄν is prob. (Steph.) for ἕως ἄν "as long as" in Soph. Ajax 1117 ὥς ἄν ἦς οἶδς περ εἶ in view of Plato Phaedr. 243 E ἕως περ ἄν ἦς δς εἶ, and comp. Soph. Phil. 1330, Œd. Col. 1361 and possibly (Steph.) Hippocr. 418. 5 μὴδ' ὥς ἄν

On οὕτως...ὥστε (2203)

[2697] Concerning iii. 16 οὕτως γὰρ ἡγάπησεν...ὥστε τὸν υἱὸν τὸν μονογενῆ ἔδωκεν Blass (p. 224) says "the correct reading in place of ὥστε is ὅτι, which is doubly attested by Chrys. (in many passages) and Nonnus § 78, 6." But Chrysostom, while quoting the whole text with ὅτι, comments thus, οὕτως ὑμᾶς ἡγάπησεν ὥς ὑπὲρ τῶν δούλων δοῦναι τὸν υἱόν. Subsequently, he says ἅπερ ἐπήγαγε λέγων ὅτι τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ τὸν μονογενῆ ἔδωκεν. Here ὅτι should prob. be printed as "recitativum"; but its use suggests how easily ὅτι τὸν υἱόν might creep into the text in the place of ὥστε τὸν υἱόν when the words were quoted. Moreover this use of ὅτι after οὕτως, τοσοῦτος etc. does not appear to exist till quite late. We must carefully distinguish between (1) the LXX use of ὅτι "so that" (2694) after questions and negations, and (2) the Byzantine or post-Christian use of ὅτι, "so that," after τοσοῦτος etc.¹ To impute to John the idiom οὕτως...ὅτι may have been natural for Chrysostom or for a scribe of Chrysostom's text, but for John himself (so far as evidence is alleged) it would apparently have been an anachronism. Οὕτως...ἵνα "so greatly...that" he might have written, along with Epictetus²:

v.r. μη δε ως. But these are all with pres. subjunct., and must be carefully distinguished from ὥς ἂν with aorist subjunct. "whenever," or "when," which occurs in Herodotus, Cebes (Steph.), Josh. ii. 14, iii. 8, 13 etc. Tebt. Papyr. xxvi. 1. 2 (B.C. 114) ὥς ἂν ἀναγνῶτε, and in 1 Cor. xi. 34, Phil. ii. 23. Rom. xv. 24 ὥς ἂν πορεύωμαι is either quite exceptional "when I am taking my proposed journey," or "provided that I journey." In vernacular English, "as long as" sometimes means "provided that."

[2696 ε] In xii. 35—6 περιπατεῖτε ὥς τὸ φῶς ἔχετε... ὥς τὸ φῶς ἔχετε πιστεύετε, the repetition, and the reversed order of the words accord (2554) with Johannine usage. Blass's suggestion (p. 332) to read (with N) 1st ἕως and 2nd ὥς would not accord with it so well.

² [2697 δ] Comp. Epictet. ii. 2. 16 οὕτω μωρὸς ᾗν ἵνα μὴ ἴδῃ...; ii. 22. 9 σαίνοντα...ἀλλήλοις ἑν' εἰπῆς (so as to make you say) Οὐδὲν φιλικώτερον, iii. 1. 12 τί but not οὕτως ὅτι. As to Nonnus, Passow reads οὕτω...ἵνα, with ὅτι as a rejected reading.

On ἄν with indicative (2213)

[2698] On ἄν with indic. in hypothetical sentences Blass says (205) "the insertion of ἄν is not obligatory," and he refers to viii. 39, xv. 24, xix. 11 and Gal. iv. 15. But in viii. 39 it is maintained (2079) that B has preserved the right reading, and that ἄν is not omitted. In xv. 24 οὐκ εἴχοσαν, xix. 11 οὐκ εἶχες—and, we may add, xv. 22 οὐκ εἴχοσαν—the phrase is always of one kind and negative, and does not afford a basis for a general statement that ἄν is not obligatory. In Gal. iv. 15 μαρτυρῶ γὰρ ὑμῖν ὅτι, εἰ δυνατόν, τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ὑμῶν ἐξορύξαντες ἐδώκατέ μοι, the Apostle describes hyperbolically the past affection of the Galatians by a reference to stories like that told by Lucian (ii. 548, Τοξ. 40) of friends cutting out their eyes for friendship's sake. Perhaps ἄν is omitted (though the writer may have been combining in his mind (1) "If it had been possible, you would have cut out your eyes," (2) "If I may say so, you did cut out your eyes"), but in any case the sentence is exceptional.

εἶδεν ἐν ἐμοὶ ὁ Ἐ. ἵνα...περιτῇ; "what did E. see in me so as to make him neglect me?"; iii. 12. 10 οὕτω προβήσῃ ἵνα...εἴπῃ "you will make such progress as to be able to say" etc. But in i. 19. 13, ii. 3. 3, and iii. 22. 63, placed by Schenkl under τοιοῦτος ἵνα with query, ἵνα (see context) is probably not dependent on τοιοῦτος but means "in order that." In the Pauline Epistles, ἵνα may possibly mean "so that" in 1 Thess. v. 4 "ye are not in the darkness that (ἵνα)," but it is more in accordance with Pauline thought and usage to take it as meaning "it is not ordained for you that." And in 1 Cor. ix. 24 οὕτως τρέχετε ἵνα almost certainly means "Thus, as I have described, must ye run in order that ye may attain." The notion of an overruling Providence, or of an ordained conflict, is also probably present in Gal. v. 17 ταῦτα γὰρ ἀλλήλοις ἀντίκειται ἵνα μὴ ἂν ἐὰν θέλητε ταῦτα ποιῆτε, where Chrys.'s paraphrase is ἵνα μὴ συγχωρῆς τῇ ψυχῇ πορεύεσθαι ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτῆς ταῖς πονηραῖς, shewing that he took ἵνα to mean "in order that." But Cramer prints a comment of "another," who says τὸ γὰρ ἵνα οὐκ ἐπὶ αἰτίας εἶπεν ἀλλ' ὡς ἀκόλουθον κατὰ τὸ οὐκ εἰδῶμα.

[2697c] In the Egypt. Pap. ὥστε τινι occurs about money received by, or given to, someone "as for someone else," in Oxy. vol. iii. 529, 582, Fayûm xvii. 2, and ὥστε with the infin., in wills and contracts, meaning "on condition of doing" (as in classical Gk). Other notable uses are Oxy. vol. iv. 743 (B.C. 2) ὥστ' ἂν τοῦτό σε θέλω γεινώσκειν, "wherefore I should like you to understand," Tebtun. lviii. 35 (B.C. 111) ὥστ' ἂν σὺν τοῖς θεοῖς καταστοχήσασιν αὐτοῦ "wherefore (D.V.) we shall probably secure him" [This is quite distinct from ὥστ' ἂν in the phrase "so that the damage might be estimated at" (Tebt. xxxviii. 25, xxxix. 33 etc.)], Fayûm xxiv. 15 (A.D. 158) ἐπιστολῆς...ὥστε αὐτοὺς ἀνέρχεσθαι, "a notice... ordering them to return."

Winer quotes ix. 33 οὐκ ἠδύνατο, but this is negative. In Rom. vii. 7 τὴν ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔγνων εἰ μὴ διὰ νόμου, τὴν τε γὰρ ἐπιθυμίαν οὐκ ᾔδουν εἰ μὴ ὁ νόμος ἔλεγεν, the meaning of the first clause is "I did not recognise sin except through Law..." and then the second clause says, in effect, "I did not know covetousness—except that the Law [stepped in and] said, 'Thou shalt not covet.'" Similarly Acts xxvi. 32 ἀπολελεύσθαι ἐδύνατο ὁ ἄνθρωπος οὗτος εἰ μὴ ἐπεκέκλητο Καίσαρα, is equivalent to "It was possible [up to the moment of his appeal] for this man to have been released at once—only he had appealed to Caesar"; but the last clause is changed into a protasis by using "if not" instead of "only," "if he had not appealed (ἐπεκέκλητο)." The facts indicate that in N.T. hypothetical ἄν is not omitted except in special circumstances¹.

On Lk. xxiv. 39 ἐγὼ εἰμι ἀγτός (2224)

[2699] In our discussion of ἐγὼ εἰμι, it was said that the text of Lk. xxiv. 39 was "doubtful." W.H. print ἐγὼ εἰμι αὐτός without alternative, following MBL b, f. But (1) SS has here the same Syriac as in Mk vi. 50, Mt. xiv. 27, Jn vi. 20, where there is ἐγὼ εἰμι without αὐτός. (2) The Palestinian Lectionary also has the same Hebrew in Lk. xxiv. 39 as in Mt. xiv. 27. (3) Epiphanius twice (i. 1002 A and ii. 95 D) quotes ὅτι ἐγὼ εἰμι without αὐτός (once with αὐτός (i. 1003 B) but with καὶ τοὺς τύπους τῶν ἡλων inserted). (4) The treatise on the Resurrection attributed to Justin § 9 (594 D) has εἶπεν αὐτοῖς Οὐπω ἔχετε πίστιν; φησίν, Ἰδετε ὅτι ἐγὼ εἰμι, and continues κατανοήσαντες ὅτι αὐτός ἐστι καὶ ἐν τῷ σώματι, implying that the αὐτός belonged to the inference of the disciples, not to the words of Christ. (5) One of Epiphanius' quotations without αὐτός (i. 1002 A) has ἐγὼ εἰμι καὶ οὐκ ἡλλοίωμαι¹ and so has (Resch ad loc.) John Damasc. Fid. Orthod. p. 303. This looks like a negative paraphrase of αὐτός taken as ὁ αὐτός. (6) The Latin a has “quoniam ego sum : ipsi tractate,” having apparently read ἐγὼ εἰμι· αὐτοὶ ψηλαφήσατε. (7) The Latin and Greek authorities are divided as to the position of αὐτός, many having it before ἐγὼ εἰμι but some between ἐγὼ and εἰμι. (8) Αὐτοί ἐσμεν is frequent in Greek literature (Steph. p. 2558 c) but means “we are by ourselves.” Of αὐτός εἰμι Steph. gives no instance. If it existed, it would naturally mean “I am alone, or, by myself.” (9) Ignatius, quoting a passage closely resembling Lk. xxiv. 39, asserts that the Lord said (Smyrn. § 3) “see that (or, because) I am not a bodiless demon (δαιμόνιον),” and makes no mention of the words ἐγὼ εἰμι αὐτός in any order.

[2700] The most probable conclusion from all these facts is that Lk. xxiv. 39 ἐγὼ εἰμι αὐτός is an attempt—not perhaps Luke’s attempt but incorporated by Luke in his Gospel—to render the Hebrew (2224) “I [am] He,” more fully than it is rendered by the “I am” of Mk-Mt. (2220). But ἐγὼ εἰμι αὐτός—being neither exactly Greek nor exactly Hebrew idiom—caused great perplexity. Some altered the order, to αὐτὸς ἐγὼ εἰμι meaning “I myself am [present].” This would be Greek, if εἰμί could stand for πάρειμι, but is (probably) not what Lk. meant. Others took it as ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ αὐτός, “I am the same.” This, being negatively paraphrased (as in Epiphanius and John of Damascus), became “I am not made another.” “Another” is used in Isaiah (xlii. 8) as a parallel to “idols”; and it is used, in New Hebrew, (Levy i. 57 a) of things evil and impure about which one would fain not speak. The Ignatian legend might be explained by some as a mere inference or paraphrase based on the words "I am myself." But, in view of these traditions about "another" in Jewish and Christian writers, it is not improbable that something more than mere inference originated the traditions about a "bodiless demon."

¹ [2699 a] This is somewhat similar to Mal. iii. 6 “I the Lord change not,” ἐγὼ Κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὑμῶν καὶ οὐκ ἡλλοίωμαι.

² [2699 b] Αὐτός occurs thus with the particip. of εἰμι in Iliad viii. 99 αὐτός περ ἐών, προμάχοισιν ἐμίχθη, where the schol. says Καίπερ μόνος ὢν. Of course, one is free to theorize or conjecture that αὐτός, in ἐγὼ εἰμι αὐτός, may mean the same as in Αὐτός ἔφα, or the same as in some other special Greek idiom. But, until the discovery of at least one instance of ἐγὼ εἰμι αὐτός actually thus used, the most reasonable explanation is that it is not idiomatic Greek at all, but an attempt to render literally in Greek some non-Greek tradition that does not bear a literal rendering. The nearest approach to Lk.’s phrase that I have found is Epict. iv. i. 152 “Diogenes was free...not that he was free-born (for he was not) but that he was himself (ἀλλ’ ὅτι αὐτὸς ἦν),” i.e. his true self, or unsubjugated by external influences.

On xxi. 5 παιδία, μή τι προσφάγιον ἔχετε; (2235)

[2701] In xxi. 5 παιδία, μή τι προσφάγιον ἔχετε; questions suggest themselves as to (1) παιδία, (2) μή τι, (3) προσφάγιον. (1) If Christ is to be regarded as presenting the appearance of a man much older than the disciples, παιδία may be taken as "children." Otherwise such an address from an apparent stranger causes difficulty. Chrys., as printed by Migne, omits παιδία, but a version in Cramer inserts it. Both versions say that Christ asked whether the disciples had any fish "as though He were intending to buy from them¹." Nonnus paraphrases παιδία as παῖδες ἄλδος δρηστήηρες, and perhaps agrees with Chrysostom as to the object of the question². In the Acts of John (§ 2) Christ is said to have appeared to James as a little child, but to John, simultaneously, as a man with a long beard and head partly bald. This was "on the shore." The writer of the Acts appears to have interpreted John here as meaning that Jesus appeared as one of venerable aspect addressing the disciples as "children."

² [2701 b] Ὑδροβίου δ' ἐρέεινεν ἐθήμονας ἰχθυβολήας, Πλωτὰ τελεσιγόνοιο κομίζετε δειπνα θαλάσσης, Παῖδες ἄλδος δρηστήηρες; where κομίζετε seems to mean "Are ye catching?" He proceeds, ἀμειβόμενοι δὲ μαθηταὶ Οὐδὲν ἔχειν ἀνένευον— which resembles Chrys.'s comment.

variations indicate an early difficult tradition, most probably μήτι (not μή τι). In the following paragraphs, for convenience, μήτι will be printed as one word.

[2702 δ] Westcott says (ad loc.) "The form of the question in the original (μήτι) suggests a negative answer. See iv. 29," i.e. μήτι οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ χριστός;—where A.V. has "Is not this the Christ?" R.V. "Can this be the Christ?" and Westcott says, "The form of the sentence grammatically suggests a negative answer (iv. 33) but hope bursts through it." Μή interrogative may perhaps always be rendered by "can it be that?" and μήτι by "can it be in any way possible that?" In Plato and Xenophon and other classical writers, μή interrogative is sometimes used courteously or ironically to suggest that the possibility may be realised—"can it be that we are mistaken?" but μή is never used by them for ἀρ' οὐ. In the Pauline Epistles, μή is used in passionate rejections of blasphemy as Rom. iii. 5 μή ἄδικος ὁ θεός; ix. 14 μή ἄδικία παρὰ τῷ θεῷ; ix. 20 μή ἐρεῖ τὸ πλάσμα; 1 Cor. i. 13 μή Παῦλος ἐσταυρώθη; (comp. Rom. iii. 3, xi. 11, 1 Cor. x. 22 etc.) and always expects a strong negative reply. There is the same indignant fervour in Rom. x. 18—19 μή οὐκ ἤκουσαν...μή Ἰσρ. οὐκ ἔγνω, "will any one venture to say that they did not hear...and that Israel did not know?" 1 Cor. ix. 4—5 (bis) μή οὐκ ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν, "will any one deny that we have authority?" xi. 22 μή γὰρ οἴκias οὐκ ἔχετε εἰς τὸ ἐσθιεν καὶ πίνειν; Here, after saying that some of the Corinthians drink too much at the Lord's Supper, he adds "[Shame on you!] For can it be that ye have not houses for ordinary eating and drinking?" Μήτι interrogative occurs thrice in the Epistles and always introducing a shameful or absurd hypothesis, 2 Cor. i. 17 "Did I shew fickleness (μήτι ἄρα τῇ ἐλαφρίᾳ ἐχρησάμην)?" ib. xii. 18 "Did Titus take advantage of you (μήτι ἐπλεονέκτησεν ὑμᾶς T.)?" Jas. iii. 11 μήτι ἡ πηγὴ ἐκ τῆς αὐτῆς ὁπῆς βρῦει τὸ γλυκὺ καὶ τὸ πικρὸν;

[2702 ε] But it is in Epictetus that μή and μήτι are most prominent: and there, so far as I can judge from verifying about thirty of Schenkl's very numerous instances, μή always expects a negative answer as in i. 11. 18 "Is there incompatibility between natural affection and reason?" and μήτι is still stronger, often propounding an absurd proposition for a negative reply e.g. ii. 19. 15 "Is it a vice to be shipwrecked (μήτι κακία ἐστὶ τὸ ναυαγῆσαι)?" In one instance (i. 16. 10 μήτι (or μή τι) ἀχρηστότερον τριχῶν;) τι or μήτι has a predicative adj. agreeing with it. Schweigh. Index says of μή that it is sometimes (nonnunquam) interpreted interrogatively where it might be rendered negatively; and this at least is certain that any pupil in Epictetus's lecture-room hearing the philosopher begin a sentence with μήτι would anticipate some question that required a negative answer. And the style of Epictetus is so similar to that of John that the Epictetian usage strongly increases the probability that the Johannine μήτι προσφάγιον ἔχετε must have been written with a similar meaning. In later Greek writers, e.g. Clem. Alex., μήτι "is it possible that?" is found occasionally meaning "perhaps." But Clement as compared with Epictetus, for the purpose of illustrating John, is like Dryden compared with Bacon, for the purpose of illustrating Shakespeare.

often introduces an impossibility (e.g. "Do men gather grapes from thorns?") and implies a very strong negative¹. But there is a difficulty here if the words mean, "Is it possible that ye have caught fish?" The difficulty would not be much diminished by reading μή, separated from τι, since μή, too, expects a negative answer². Chrysostom and Nonnus presumably interpreted μήτι as "perhaps," taking the language to be that of a peasant dealing with fishermen, "Might you be having some fish for sale?" But this is a late usage not justified by LXX, N.T., Epictetus, or Aquila. The Johannine meaning appears to be widely different. The Lord does not ask for information. He knew that the disciples had caught no fish and that it was not possible for them to have caught fish; because they had been toiling without Him in the "night" of spiritual darkness and had not cast the net on the "right side" of the ship. This is mystically described by representing the Master of the fishermen as standing on the shore, witnessing the unavailing efforts of His servants and calling to them, in effect, "Children, ye have toiled long, but can ye say that ye have caught anything? Ye cannot say it." This is the only way in which the words of the Gospel could be understood by a Christian at the beginning of the first century familiar with the language of the Gospels, or by a convert or enquirer familiar with the doctrine of Epictetus.

[2703] (3) As regards προσφάγιον, why is not the word ὀψάριον attributed to Jesus here as it is later on (xxi. 10 ἀπὸ τῶν ὀψαρίων, and comp. xxi. 9)? Προσφάγιον appears to have been later, and more vernacular, than ὀψάριον³. In classical Greek, it might naturally be taken as a form of πρόσφαγμα "a preliminary victim." The context clearly implies that the "fish," of which the disciples partake, is a sacramental food, and a "breakfast" to strengthen the disciples for the work of evangelists. Origen (Lomm. i. 259—62), commenting on "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," and on the sacrifice of the lamb in the morning as "the beginning of the sacrifices," goes on to speak of the lamb in the language of Revelation, as "standing, as having been slain as a victim (ἑστηκὸς ὡς ἐσφαγμένον)." Christ, "standing on the shore" of Tiberias at the moment of sunrise, might be a type of the sacrifice that is "sent up at the moment of the enlightening of the soul (ἅμα τῷ φωτίζεσθαι τὴν ψυχὴν ἀναπεμπόμενος)." Regarded in this light, προσφάγιον might have an inner meaning intelligible to none but the initiated—including an allusion to the ΙΧΘΥC¹, or ONE FISH, which in this very narrative appears as a eucharistic type of Christ:—"Ye have not yet received THE FISH. Ye have not yet partaken of that sacrificial victim which was slain before the foundation of the world (Rev. xiii. 8), without which the eyes of your souls cannot be enlightened nor can ye see how to cast the net of the Church 'on the right side' of the ship²."

in serie alphabetica in numerum eorum quae exponuntur retulit: unde conjicere licet plebeium fuisse, aut vetustioribus Graecis incognitum." Hence Lk. xxiv. 41 might very well prefer βρώσιμον, and the next note will shew that a Christian writer substitutes βρώσιμον for προσφάγιον in paraphrasing Jn.

² [2703 δ] The comment of Origen is lost. That of Chrys., and others printed by Cramer, seem to mix together the literal and the metaphorical, and perhaps the accounts of Lk. and Jn and the story of the Walking on the Waters. Chrys. says that Christ "was not continuously present with the disciples, and the Spirit had not yet been given to them," and they were "not yet commissioned (ἐγκεχειρισμένοι)." In the previous context he says Christ "appeared (ἐφάνη)" to the disciples and "flew away (ἀπέπηγ), then appeared once again "and again flew away; then, after this, [appeared] on (ἐπί, i.e. by) (2340—6) the sea and again with the accompaniment of their exceeding fear (μετὰ πολλοῦ τοῦ φόβου)." By this "fear" he appears to mean their fear of the Jews: for he says that Christ had taken away most of their alarm so that they could now "peep forth (προκύπτειν) from the house and go about everywhere." But still he adds, "Having therefore nothing to do they came to fish and even this they did in the night because they were in great alarm (περιδεεῖς)." He adds, "This Luke, too, says, but this is not the same [as Luke's account] but different (τοῦτο καὶ ὁ Λουκᾶς φησιν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἔστι τοῦτο ἐκείνο, ἀλλ' ἕτερον)"—where he seems to refer to Luke's account of Peter fishing all through the night and then saying to Jesus in alarm "Depart from me,

On x. 12 ὁ...οὐκ ὢν ποιμήν (2253—4)

[2704] In x. 12 ὁ μισθωτὸς καὶ οὐκ ὢν ποιμήν, A has δέ after, 8D have it before, μισθωτὸς: a has “qui mercenarius est et non est pastor,” e “mercenarius (sic) autem” (om. “et qui non est pastor”), Syr. Curet. (Burk.) “but the hireling, the false one,” SS om. “the false one” and substitutes nothing. Nonnus has ὁ δὲ μίσθιος οὐ πᾶλε ποιμήν. The use of οὐκ, instead of μή, may be due to one of two causes. (1) “Hireling and not Shepherd” may go together as though the Greek were ὁ μισθωτὸς-καὶ-οὐ-ποιμήν ὢν. (2) Οὐ may be regarded as part of the name of the “hireling,” who is the antithesis of the Shepherd, just as the Heb. of “not” is part of the names (Hos. ii. 23 “Lo-ruhamah,” “Lo-ammi”) “Not-beloved (or, pitied)” and “Not-my people”—which are rendered in LXX τὴν Οὐκ ἡγαπημένην and τῷ Οὐ λαῷ μου (comp. Rom. ix. 25, 1 Pet. ii. 10). Some sense of this may have induced the Curetonian translator to paraphrase the clause as “the false one,” perhaps meaning “the No-shepherd.” Ὡν might have been omitted by John without destroying the sense; but

O Lord” (not to Luke’s account of the alarm of the disciples when Christ appears to them after the Resurrection).

[2703 c] Another comment (Cramer) says, “Those that were before the disciples (οἱ πρὸ τῶν μαθητῶν, ?πρὸ=“at the head of,” more prob. read προ-τοιτων=πρωτοι τῶν, “chief of the disciples”) being in the dizziness and darkness of error that was sent from evil spirits (ἐν σκοτοδινίᾳ ὄντες τῆς δαιμονιώδους πλάνης) persuaded (ἐπεισαν) no one, or very few—which is as good as ‘nothing’” (comp. xxi. 3 “caught (ἐπίσταν) nothing”) “...may even the multitude of the Gentiles was not caught in the net [of the Gospel]...But when the Sun of Righteousness came, He that hungereth for the salvation of men, He found nothing to eat” (the writer uses βρώσιμον as in Lk. xiv. 41, not προσφάγιον as in Jn xxi. 5) “and told them that the evangelic word must be cast forth, that is to say the ‘right (δεξιὰ) teaching’ (comp. xxi. 6 “on the right (δεξιὰ) side of the ship”) “compared to which the Law and the prophets being cast forth are conceived as the left side.” Nonnus spells πιάζειν “take (fish)” with an ε, which would increase the likeness between ΕΠΕΙCΑΝ and ΕΠΙCΕCΑΝ suggesting an early play upon the two words preserved in this tradition.

[2703 d] Compare the three following traditions of Chrysostom: (1) (On vi. 21) Ἄλλ’ οὐδὲ τοῖς μαθηταῖς ὥφθη ἐπὶ πολὺ τοῦτο ποιεῖν, ἀλλὰ ἅμα τε ὥφθη καὶ ἀπέστη ἀπ’ αὐτῶν, (2) (On xxi. 1) Ὁρᾷς ὅτι οὐ συνεχῶς αὐτοῖς ἐπιχωριάζει, οὐδ’ ὥσπερ ἐμπροσθεν; Ἐφάνη γοῦν τῇ ἐσπέρᾳ καὶ ἀπέπηγ’· εἶτα μετὰ ὀκτὼ ἡμέρας πάλιν ἀπαξ, καὶ πάλιν ἀπέπηγ’· εἶτα μετὰ ταῦτα ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης, καὶ πάλιν μετὰ πολλοῦ τοῦ φόβου...ταλαιπωρουμένοις ἐφίστατο ὁ Ἰησοῦς (Cramer, ἐπιστὰς δὲ αὐτοῖς ταλαιπωρουμένοις), (3) (On Acts i. 3) (Cramer) ἐφίστατο γὰρ καὶ ἀφίστατο πάλιν. The comparison suggests that there has been a confusion between ἀπέπηγ and ἀπέστη.

perhaps it emphasizes the non-reality, "is not really Shepherd." According to this view, John would have written ὁ μὴ ποιμὴν ὢν as he has written (x. 1) ὁ μὴ εἰσερχόμενος, if he had meant "he that is not a shepherd." But he means something different; in effect, he is declaring that the hireling is "no shepherd."

On ζῶ διὰ σέ (2297)

[2705] A very important illustration of ζῶ διὰ σέ occurs in a passage where Epictetus describes the philosopher as using similar language in the moment of death, iii. 24. 95 foll. "For this cause the man that is really good—bearing in mind both who he is and whence he has come, and by whom he has been brought into being—is wholly absorbed in this one thought, how he can fill his appointed place in orderly and willing obedience to God: Dost thou will me to exist yet [longer]? [Then I will do so], as a free man and noble, as thou hast willed: for thou hast made me unshackled in my own sphere. But, on the other hand [perhaps] thou hast no further need of me (Ἄλλ' οὐκέτι μου χρεῖαν ἔχεις;)? I praise and bless thee (Καλῶς σοι γένοιτο) [then]! Even up to this day I kept on abiding [on earth] simply for thy sake, and for no other (καὶ μέχρι νῦν διὰ σέ ἔμενον, δι' ἄλλον οὐδένα)." Here the context indicates that διὰ σέ means "for thy service," "in orderly and willing obedience (εὐτάκτως καὶ εὐπειθῶς)" to God. Other instances are iv. 1. 163 ἔξελθε διὰ τὰ παῖδιά, "escape for the sake of the children," i.e. to do them service, iv. 8. 17 ὅσα καλῶς ἐποιοῦν...οὐ διὰ τοὺς θεατὰς ἐποιοῦν, ἀλλὰ δι' ἑμᾶντόν, "not for the sake of the spectators but for my own sake," where he proceeds to exemplify the statement by using a dative of advantage, ἥσθιον ἐμᾶντῳ καλῶς, "I used to eat decently for my own sake." Comp. i. 17. 18 οὐδὲ γὰρ Χρυσίππου χρεῖαν ἔχομεν δι' αὐτόν...οὐδὲ γὰρ τοῦ θύτου δι' αὐτόν, where he subsequently (i. 17. 29) explains that he goes to the θύτης or "sacrificer," οὐκ αὐτὸν θαυμάσας "not out of reverence for him" but out of reverence for his teaching. No doubt Epictetus frequently uses διὰ τινα to mean "thanks to so-and-so," but that is not the meaning in any of these passages. Where the verb employed with διὰ τινα is passive or neutral, διὰ may mean "thanks to." But often, where it implies action and active service, it means "for the sake of."

On various meanings of εἰς (2305—8)

same use is to be found in N.T. generally and in John elsewhere, e.g. ix. 7 ὑπαγε νίψαι εἰς τὴν κολυμβήθραν τοῦ Σ. (ὃ ἐρμηνεύεται Ἀπεσταλμένος). This last, however, may be illustrated (2305 a) from the use of λούω, βάπτω, and βαπτίζω in other authors¹: and it affords no ground for thinking that John would use εἰς for ἐν with εἰμί.

[2707] Again, as to xix. 13 ἤγαγεν ἔξω τὸν Ἰησοῦν καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐπὶ βήματος εἰς τόπον, the εἰς is shewn by the context not to be connected with ἐκάθισεν in the sense of "on" (which is represented by ἐπὶ) but to mean "[going out] to," being influenced by ἤγαγεν ἔξω, and the preposition helps to illustrate two points on which John lays stress (1745 a) namely, that Pilate had to go out to the Jews as the Jews would not come into his palace, and that the sentence was pronounced outside the palace in a place where a special tribunal was erected. That John would not have used καθίζω εἰς we may perhaps infer from vi. 3 ἀνῆλθεν δὲ εἰς τὸ ὄρος Ἰ. καὶ ἐκεῖ ἐκάθητο, as compared with Mk xiii. 3 καθημένον αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ ὄρος (Mt. xxiv. 3 ἐπὶ τοῦ ὄρους). Καθίζω εἰς is classical Greek, but John does not use it².

[2708] Among other N.T. meanings of εἰς not found in John, is "near" or "at" before place-names, e.g. "the things that happened [away] at Capernaum," "Philip was found [away] at Azotus," "to be at Jerusalem by the feast," "that Paul was in custody [away] at Caesarea³." This can hardly be paralleled from classical authors. The meaning "with a view to," "in regard to," "in relation to"—very common in Thucydides, when used with verbs of action generally and of "expending" in particular, and also to denote friendly or unfriendly relations⁴—is frequent in the Pauline Epistles,

² [2707 a] Chrys. (on Jn vii. 1) says ὅτε γὰρ εἰς τὸ ὄρος ἐκάθητο, φησὶν, ἦν ἡ ἐορτὴ τοῦ πάσχα. Quoting John loosely, he falls into language like that of Mark describing Christ as seated on the Mount of Olives.

⁴ [2708 a] Comp. ἀμαρτάνω εἰς in Æsch. Prom. 945, Mt. xviii. 21, Lk. xvii. 4. Jn, in the Gospel, uses ἀμαρτάνω always (thrice) absolutely; in 1 Jn, and may perhaps explain the curious idiom in Mark—altered by many scribes and by the parallel Matthew—about breaking loaves “to the five thousand¹.” But it is not found in John.

[2709] Another important use of eis, dating from the best classical writers, is with verbs of speaking or proclaiming. Sometimes it distinguishes speaking publicly to an assembly from speaking privately to a council. It is never used, in this sense, of addressing a single person. It is appropriate to the far-reaching and public nature of the message of the Gospel, and John lays stress on the publicity of Christ’s teaching; but he never uses this idiom².

where it occurs (10) more freq. than in any book of N.T., it is always absolute or with cognate accusative.

[2708 c] But ἔκλασα eis, besides perhaps expressing the Semitic Original exactly, harmonizes with the classical Greek use of eis with verbs of spending. From this came the use of eis in accounts of expenditure (Deissmann p. 118) “to lamps, so much” or “to a sick horse, so much” etc. So here, there is a suggestion of items, “to five thousand men, five loaves,” “to four thousand men, seven loaves.” “To,” in this sense, would not often be used with persons except when regarded as labourers; but Deissmann, who calls this, when used of persons, “dativus commodi,” quotes (ib.) τὸν εἰς Τάγην οἶκον ᾠκοδομημένον “the house built with a view to [the occupation of] Tages.” If Tages was a labourer or bailiff the house might be built “with a view to” Tages but for the advantage of his employer. Having regard to this usage, it is best to render Mt. xx. 1 μισθοῦσθαι eis τὸν ἀμπελῶνα “hire with a view to the vineyard,” not “hire [and bring] into the vineyard.” In Mt. v. 22 ἐνοχος εἰς τὴν γέενναν—coming as a climax after ἐνοχος τῇ κρίσει and τῷ συνεδρίῳ—probably combines two meanings, 1st, a penalty extending to Gehenna, 2nd, the penalty of being cast into Gehenna. For the first, comp. Numb. xxxii. 15 “as much as, or even (δ) all this people,” eis δλην τὴν συναγωγὴν ταύτην.

[2710] As regards John's use of στήναι εἰς τὸ μέσον (2307) compared with Luke's στήναι ἐν μέσῳ, we may adduce Mk iii. 3 ἔγειρε εἰς τὸ μέσον, D ἔγειρε καὶ στηθαι (sic) ἐν μέσῳ, d "in medium," Lk. vi. 8 ἔγειρε καὶ στηθὶ εἰς τὸ μέσον, D ἐν τῷ μέσῳ, d "in medio," which shew how easily the two constructions might be interchanged according as the notion of coming into an assembly was prominent or latent. Comp. Xen. Cyropaed. iv. 1. 1 *στὰς εἰς τὸ μέσον*¹. Reasons have been given (2307) for thinking that John might deliberately prefer εἰς because of its spiritual suggestiveness.

[2711] More direct in its bearing on the Johannine ὁ ὢν εἰς are phrases in Mark where εἰς οἶκον or εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν is used in connexion with Christ². But the text of these is doubtful. Nor do the Papyri, philosophers (see ἀκοαί, "ears," in Lucian (iii. 585) Philop. § 1). Acts ii. 22 ἀποδοεδυγμένον ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ εἰς ὑμᾶς perh. means "approved from God in the sight of [all of] you," or "approved [as being sent] from God to [all of] you." Comp. Herm. Vis. ii. 4. 3 πέμψει οὖν Κλήμης εἰς τὰς ἔξω πόλεις...Γραπτὴ δὲ νοουετῆσει τὰς χήρας...σὺ δὲ ἀναγνώσῃ εἰς ταύτην τὴν πόλιν μετὰ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων...τῆς ἐκκλησίας, where the meaning seems to be "read [publicly] to [the people of] this city with the elders." Comp. Mk xiii. 10 καὶ εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη πρῶτον δεῖ κηρυχθῆναι (Mt. xxiv. 14 κηρυχθήσεται...τοῖς ἔθνεσιν) and 1 Pet. i. 25 τὸ ῥῆμα τὸ εὐαγγελισθὲν εἰς ὑμᾶς (Hort) "which was preached [reaching even] to you," Lk. xxiv. 47 καὶ κηρυχθῆναι...μετανοίαν εἰς ἁφροσιν ἁμαρτιῶν εἰς [reaching even to] πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, and Rom. viii. 18 τὴν μέλλουσαν δόξαν ἀποκαλυφθῆναι εἰς ἡμᾶς.

[2709 b] That λέγειν εἰς in this public sense is good Greek, appears clearly from Thucydides, especially when he describes the fear of Alcibiades lest the Spartan ambassadors should convert the Athenians to peace "if they should say the same things [publicly] to the Demos" that they had said, less publicly "in the Boule," v. 45 ἦν ἐς τὸν δῆμον ταῦτα λέγων (following λέγοντες ἐν τῇ βουλῇ, and preceding ἐς τὸν δῆμον παρελθόντες) and comp. i. 72 ἐφασαν βούλεσθαι καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐς τὸ πλήθος αὐτῶν εἰπεῖν, iv. 58 ἐς τὸ κοινὸν τ. δὴ λόγους εἶπεν. In this sense, λέγειν εἰς could not be used about addressing a single person. [In Herod i. 86 οὐδὲν τι μᾶλλον ἐς ἐωυτὸν λέγων ἢ ἐς ἅπαν τὸ ἀνθρώπινον the meaning is, "with reference to."] Εἰς ὧτα may be used of one person or many; but probably Mt. x. 27 εἰς τὸ οὐς i.e. "secretly," is deliberately altered into πρὸς τὸ οὐς by Luke (xii. 3) who uses εἰς ὧτα for publicity in Acts xi. 22 ἠκούσθη δὲ ὁ λόγος εἰς τὰ ὧτα τῆς ἐκκλησίας (as well as in the sense of penetration in Lk. i. 44 ὡς ἐγένετο...εἰς τὰ ὧτά μου). Luke's liking for εἰς in connexion with the spread of the Gospel may be illustrated by the Pauline doctrine, Rom. x. 18 μὴ οὐκ ἤκουσαν; μενοῦνγε, (Ps. xix. 4) Εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν ἐξῆλθεν ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν.

so far as is at present alleged, give a safe instance of εἰς τόπον εἶναι. Blass (p. 122 n.) quotes Berlin Pap. (3rd cent.) Vol. ii. 385 εἰς Ἀλεξανδρείαν ἔστι. But the context somewhat favours the view that the person spoken of is not actually at Alexandria but is coming there. Moreover the text has εσσι. And the editors regard this as a misspelling for εἶσι "will be going." If this is the meaning it may be illustrated by Ox. Pap. (2nd cent.) 529 ἐγὼ δὲ εἰς Κόπτου μετὰ τοῦ ἡγεμόνος εἶμι, "I am going to Coptus." I am informed that in Tebtun. Pap., Part II. (416) not yet published (1905), a rather illiterate letter contains ἐγενάμην ἐν Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ followed by ἐγενάμην εἰς Ἀλ. But γίγνεσθαι εἰς is quite different from εἶναι εἰς, of which (at present) no certain instance is adduced from papyri.

[2712] These passages in Mark about the house or home of Christ, being omitted by Matthew and Luke, may be expected (2396) to be referred or alluded to by John. But the other details above mentioned appear in no way to help us to explain, indeed they make it more difficult to explain—except upon mystical and spiritual grounds—why John, who generally avoids εἰς for ἐν, writes ὦν εἰς τὸν κόλπον about the Son of God at the beginning of his Gospel and ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ about the beloved disciple toward the end of it. That he had some peculiar meaning in εἰς is made all the more probable because, so far as is alleged, εἰς κόλπον without a verb

"in domo," but e "domi." Again, after the words "let not man put asunder," common to Mk and Mt., Mk alone has x. 10 καὶ εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν πάλιν οἱ μαθηταί... ἐπηρώτων (Lk. om. the whole) SS "when he entered the house again," a "domi," b "in domum," f, k "in domo." The mention of πάλιν in Mk ii. 1, x. 10 suggests that in both cases the meaning is (as SS in the latter) "when he entered the house again."

[2711 b] Mk xiii. 16 has ὁ εἰς τὸν ἀγρόν where parall. Mt. xxiv. 18, Lk. xvii. 31 have ὁ ἐν τῷ (Lk. om. τῷ) ἀγρῷ. In this last passage, the antithesis between the previously mentioned "on the housetop" and "into the field" resembles that in 1 S. ix. 26 "on the housetop...went out...abroad," LXX ἔως ἔξω but Ἄλλος (Field) has εἰς ἀγρόν. In 1 S. a verb of motion is expressed. Mark perh. intends to imply one, "the [man that is] on the housetop" being contrasted with "the [man that has gone out] to the field [to labour]." The fact that both Mt. and Lk. substitute ἐν for εἰς indicates that Mk's idiom was of the nature of a mannerism. Neither εἰς οἶκον nor εἰς ἀγρόν could very well have a Semitic origin, as the Semitic preposition used in "at home" and "abroad" is almost always "in," not "to." Lk. xi. 7 εἰς τὴν κοίτην εἰσὶν (D and latt. ἐν τῇ κοίτῃ) has not been illustrated by other examples, and it appears alien from Hebrew and Latin. The meaning may be "[recently come] to bed."

of motion occurs nowhere in the Bible, nor in Greek literature, whereas ἐν κόλπῳ is very common, and is familiar to all in the phrase "in Abraham's bosom¹." It is therefore natural to infer that εἰς has a spiritual meaning—somewhat as in the Pauline Epistles where men are said to be baptized, or confirmed, or fulfilled, or made to grow, "into Christ," and where it is said concerning God, Rom. xi. 36 εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα, and 1 Cor. viii. 6 ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτόν (1475)².

[2713] One explanation may be that, as the beloved disciple is said to be (xiii. 23) "lying in the bosom" of the Lord when he asks Him to reveal a secret, so the Son is described as being "into the bosom of the Father" because He is regarded as the revealing Mediator passing from man to God and from God to man. But, beside this, it is not improbable that John is alluding to ancient traditions about Christ's "home." It has been maintained elsewhere (1451—8, 1839 foll., 2644 (i)) that John's description of Christ as "laying his head to rest" on the Cross contains an allusion to the Matthew-Luke saying "The son of man hath not where to lay his head to rest." If that is so, we may still more reasonably expect some Johannine allusion to Mark's repeated traditions about a "house" or "home" into which Christ enters—traditions almost always omitted by Matthew and Luke³. The discussion of these must be reserved for a future treatise. On the single occasion on which John associates the mention of a house with Christ's teaching or action Origen calls the "house" (2329) "omnem hujus mundi domum ac totius ecclesiae domum." An attempt will be made in a future treatise to shew that John desires to meet various unprofitable and conflicting traditions about Christ's "house" by saying, at the outset of his Gospel, that He was to be regarded as being in no earthly house, but as being in heaven—even while on earth—leading men "to the bosom of God."

On iii. 34 ἐκ μέτρου (2324)

¹ Hor. Heb. on Lk. xvi. 22—3, and comp. 2 S. xii. 3 (Heb., Gk, and Targ.).

² [2712 a] The Pauline Epistles exemplify all the uses of εἰς above mentioned except "at" with places, which would naturally be rare in hortatory language. Εἰς is also very rare, in any sense, in Revelation.

³ [2713 a] Mk ii. 1, iii. 20, vii. 17, 24, ix. 28, 33 (but see Mt. xvii. 25), x. 10. See also Mt. ix. 28 (which is in the style of Mk).

energy of the Spirit by measure (μέτρῳ)...but He has it without measure (ἀμέτρητον)." Wetstein gives a great number of instances from Greek, Latin, and Hebrew (including Vajikra R. 15 "Spiritus S. non habitavit super Prophetas nisi mensura quadam") of "by measure" or "according to measure"; but none have "from measure." Nonnus, however, takes the words to imply a spontaneous stream, as distinct from "measures" of water, οὐρανόθεν γὰρ Οὗτος ὃν ἐς χθόνα πέμψε θεὸς χραισμήτορα κόσμου Πατρῶς σοφίης αὐτόσσυτον ὄμβρον ἰάλλει. Οὐ γὰρ μέτρα λόγιοι φέρει Λόγος, ἀλλὰ οἱ αἰεὶ Μοῦνῳ πνεῦμα δίδωσιν ἀειλιβέος ῥόον ὁμφῆς: and this suggests the most satisfactory solution. John has in view the living water of the Spirit (Ps. xxxvi. 8—9 "Thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures, for with thee is the fountain of life") as compared with draughts from the "measured vessel" (comp. ii. 6 μετρητάς) of the Law. Μέτρῳ might have meant linear (not liquid) measure as μέτρον means in Rev. xxi. 17. But ἐκ μέτρον could not mean this and might therefore seem preferable¹.

On διὰ with genitive applied to time (2331)

[2715] Διὰ, with genitive, applied to time, means "passing through." If the time means the whole of a life, age, year, month, or day, διὰ often means "throughout" (ὅλος being often inserted); but, if there is no such notion of wholeness, it means "passing through one period to a period that follows," i.e. "after an interval of." This is always the meaning where a number is mentioned. Διὰ νυκτός, however (Steph.) is sometimes loosely used to mean "by night." Plutarch Quaest. Rom. 279 F οὐκ...μετὰ φωτός...ἀλλὰ διὰ σκοτούς may throw light on Acts v. 19 (comp. xvi. 9, xvii. 10, xxiii. 31) where an angel opens the door for Peter "by night," suggesting perhaps that the deliverance took place, in part, "by means of," or "with the aid of," night. Steph. gives no instance in which διὰ is used with a number of years, days, etc. to mean anything but "after the interval of." Most frequently "after the interval of the third, fourth year etc.” means “every third or fourth year.” But Herod. i. 62 διὰ ἑνδεκάτου ἔτεος, describing the long interval during which Pisistratus waited to effect his return to Athens, appears to mean “after an interval extending to the eleventh year” (not, as L.S., “in the course of the eleventh year”)¹. The facts confirm the view taken in 2331 that διὰ in Acts i. 3 means “after an interval of.” Ἐν, rather than διά, would be used to express “in the course of².”

² [2715 b] As regards ἐν, “in the course of,” or “during,” in vi. 39—54 (see 2548) the mss. vary greatly, between τῇ, and ἐν τῇ, before ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ. W.H. gives, in order, two instances without ἐν, a third with ἐν (vi. 44), and a fourth without ἐν. As ἐν follows (or would follow), in some of these cases, αὐτο or αὐτον, it might be easily dropped or inserted, after the similar letters ο or ον. But ἐν τῇ ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ occurs, without v.r., in xi. 24 ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει, ἐν τ. ἐ. ἡ., xii. 48 ἐκεῖνος κρινεῖ αὐτὸν ἐν τ. ἐ. ἡ. Both there, and in vii. 37 ἐν δὲ τῇ ἐ. ἡ...τῆς ἑορτῆς, the preposition seems to mean “in the course of”; and “the last day” is regarded, not as a date or a point of time, but as a period in the course of which great events take place. If this view is correct, ἐν τῇ ἐ. ἡ. in vi. 44 may be regarded as a climax, the weightiest of the three utterances in vi. 39—44, and vi. 54 as being a separate utterance.

[2715 c] As regards σαββάτω with or without ἐν, the preposition may be regarded as emphasizing the sacred period of rest during which work may not be done. But it is very doubtful whether John ever omits ἐν with this word. B and some latt. versions omit it once, so that W.H. bracket it, in vii. 22—3 καὶ [ἐν] σαββάτω περιτέμνετε...εἰ περιτομὴν...λαμβάνει ἐν σαββ...ὑγιῇ ἐποίησα ἐν σαββ. But the latt. vss. omit it also in v. 16 ταῦτα ἐποίησεν ἐν σαββάτῳ. And B, before other words, (against W.H.) omits ἐν temporal in ii. 19, 23, xviii. 39. In ii. 19, 23, ἐν, if inserted by B, would come at the end of a line and would be liable to omission as being written in small letters. In xviii. 39, ἐν might be dropped after γμιν, especially if the latter was written γμειν in B’s archetype. In ii. 19, vii. 22 ἐν follows καί, and the latter, if written κε in B’s archetype, might easily cause the omission of a following ε meaning ἐν. A priori one might maintain that, in vii. 22—3, σαββάτω was used at first unemphatically to be followed by a more emphatic ἐν σαββάτῳ: but the evidence negatives this supposition.

[2715 d] Ἐν, or κατὰ, is always used by Mk, Mt., and Jn, with ἑορτή to express

On vi. 21 ἤθελον οὔν λαβεῖν (2346)

[2717] In the LXX, forms of ἤθελον are very rare as compared with those of ἠθέλησα. The 3rd pers., ἤθελον, ἤθελε, without οὐ, hardly occurs outside apocryph. exc. in Judg. xiii. 23 εἰ ἤθελεν ὁ Κύριος where Theod. (and sim. A) has ἐβούλετο (and see other instances from LXX in 1735 b). Many Indices do not distinguish between θέλω and ἐθέλω, so that statements must be cautiously based on them. In Egypt. Pap. Indices, ἐθέλω is very rare; but ἠθέλησα is sometimes used about authoritative resolutions of those in power, and οὐκ ἠθέλησεν means “he refused”; ἤθελεν occurs (according to the Indices) only once, and then apparently of unfulfilled desire³.

“during” or “in the course of.” Lk. alone has the dat. without prep. in Lk. ii. 41 ἐπορεύοντο...τῇ ἑορτῇ, “at the feast.” Strictly, Lk. should have said “for the feast,” or “to the feast” (as Jn vii. 8, 10, xi. 56, xii. 12 εἰς τὴν ἑορτήν) and hence D ins. ἐν, d “in die festo,” b “in diem sollemni (sic),” e “ad dies solomni (sic),” f “in die sollemni,” a “die sollemni.”

² [2716 b] Τίνος δὲ ἕνεκεν οὐκ ἀνέβη εἰς τὸ πλοῖον;...οὐκ ἐνέβη δὲ εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, ἵνα τὸ θαῦμα μείζον ἐργάσῃται. Chrys. supposes that Christ first walked on the sea, and then, “as soon as He had appeared to the disciples, in the same moment, removed to the land, (ἅμα τε ὤφθη καὶ ἀπέστη ἀπ’ αὐτῶν).” He quotes vi. 21 ἤθελον λαβεῖν αὐτόν· καὶ εὐθέως τὸ πλοῖον ἐγγὺς τῆς γῆς ἐγένετο. Perhaps Ⲭ means this in substituting ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν εἰς ἣν ὑπῆντησεν “the land to which Jesus came to meet them.” Origen (on Prov. xxx. 19) has εὐθέως γὰρ ἐγένετο τὸ πλοῖον ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν εἰς ἣν ὑπῆγον, θεία δυνάμει.

According to the Indices of Lucian and Aristotle, ἤθελον does not occur in those authors, although ἐθέλω and θέλω are frequent in them¹. The fact that ἤθελον occurs twice at no great interval in Test. xii. Patr. and that it is used by Hermas to express a modest wish², indicates that it may have been freely used by some writers; but its rarity in the writers above-mentioned and its non-existence in Mt.-Lk., confirm the view taken elsewhere (1735 δ) that in the Walking on the Waters John's use of ἤθελον is connected with Mark's use of ἤθελεν³.

On i. 30 ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ (2369)

[2718] On this passage Blass (p. 135) says that the use of ὑπέρ

¹ [2717 δ] Lucian's Index has Dial. Marin. xiii. 2 (i. 321) οὐκ ἐθέλες, "you did not wish," but nowhere ἤθελες or ἠθέλησας. Schenkl's Index to Epictetus gives ἤθελον (without αὐν) 1st pers. sing. "I could have wished," "I should have liked". (in vernacular English, "I only wish") in i. 10. 6 "I only wish I could stand by him and remind him" (comp. iv. 1. 143 "I only wish I could stand over one of these people" and Gal. iv. 20 ἤθελον δὲ παρῆναι, i. 29. 35 "I should have liked to go on still as a pupil," and sim. i. 29. 38, ii. 8. 16 etc., almost always of impracticable (and often of unreasonable) desires. So in 2nd pers. i. 1. 18 (and comp. iii. 23. 13) Τί οὖν; ἤθελες πάντας τραχηλοκοπηθῆναι; "would you have liked to see all the world beheaded?" and 3rd pers. ii. 9. 22 οἶον εἰ τις δέκα λίτρας ἄραι μὴ δυνάμενος, τὸν τοῦ Αἰάντος λίθον βαστάζειν ἤθελεν "as though a man unequal to carrying ten pounds would like to lift the stone of Ajax!" In ii. 17. 33 ἤθελον δ' ἀσφαλῶς ἔχειν the desire is scoffed at by Epictetus (σὺ θεὸς εἶ, ὦ ἀνθρώπε) as absurdly ambitious. It occurs with a neg. in iv. 11. 24, "God forbid! I would not wish such a thing, even if it were to make me a wise man (οὐδ' εἰ σοφὸς ἐμελλον εἶναι ἤθελον)." Schenkl gives only one instance of ἤθελες αὐν (iii. 17. 4) "could you possibly have wished," referring to a disgraceful action.

[2717 ε] Schenkl's very copious Index gives no instance of ἤθελε in Epictetus. Swete's note on Mk vi. 48 is "Vg. volebat praeterire eos...With the feigned purpose comp. Lc. xxiv. 28 and see Mc. v. 36, vii. 27." But ἤθελεν (so far as I know) never means "he feigned," and the passages referred to in Mk and Lk. do not contain ἤθελεν.

² [2717 δ] Test. xii. Patr. Rub. § 1 εἰ μὴ Ἰακώβ...προσηύξατο περὶ ἐμοῦ...ὅτι (ῥ) ἤθελε Κύριος ἀνελῆναι με, ib. Sym. § 2 κ. ἐλθὼν Πουβῆμ ἐλυπήθη· ἤθελε γὰρ αὐτὸν διασωσάμεν... In Herm. Mand. v. 1. 7, ἤθελον γινῶναι, "volebam cognoscere," is like our "I wanted to know—in case you can spare me five minutes—whether you think..." which does not imply that the "want" is given up.

³ [2717 ε] Mt. xiv. 25 ἦλθεν πρὸς αὐτοὺς has neither ἤθελον nor ἤθελεν. Possibly there may have been some Gk confusion between ἠλθεν and ἠέλεον or ἠελεεν. In Jn vi. 21, the Cureton. Syr. (Burk.) has "And they were willing that they should receive him," but SS "and when they took him"; S has ἦλθον for ἤθελον, an interchange like that in 2 S. xxiii. 9, where B* reads ἤθελε for ἦλθε.

(4) On Jn i. 30 he adds (p. 313) "better ὅν without prep. Nonn. Chrys."

¹ [2719 a] Plato 776 E may be punctuated thus, ὁ δὲ σοφώτατος ἡμῖν τῶν ποιητῶν καὶ ἀπεφῆνατο ὑπὲρ τοῦ Διὸς, ἀγορεύων, "has actually given sentence in the name of Zeus, making public proclamation thereof." Comp. ib. 580 B ἔθι δὴ μοι, ἔφην ἐγώ, νῦν ἥδη ὥσπερ ὁ διὰ πάντων κριτὴς ἀποφαίνεται, καὶ σὺ οὕτω, "as the judge gives his sentence [as to which chorus is first, which second] so do you," followed by μισθωσώμεθα οὖν κήρυκα "let us hire a herald" to proclaim the sentence. Homer, then, seems to be the "herald" giving sentence in behalf of Zeus. Conversely, comp. Epict. ii. 23. 7 τί γὰρ ἐστὶ τὸ ἀποφαινόμενον ὑπὲρ ἐκάστης τούτων τῶν δυνάμεων... with ib. μήτι τῆς ὁρατικῆς ποτ' ἤκουσας λεγούσης τι περὶ ἐαυτῆς; "What is it that declares in behalf of each of these faculties?... Did you ever hear the faculty of sight uttering a word about itself?" i.e. there is a higher power that speaks in behalf of, or as the interpreter of, its servants, for they cannot speak about themselves. Apart from Xen. Cyrop. (discussed in 2370 a), Steph. gives no other instances except from an affidavit in Demosth. 554, 11 ἡ εἰσαγγελία ἐδόθη... ὑπὲρ Ἀριστάρχου, and Aeschin. 22, 12 (ch. 154 Teubn. p. 157) ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ψηφιεῖσθαι ὧν ἡ δίωξις ἦ. As to the former, since a contest is said to be "in behalf of (ὑπέρ) life or death," ὑπέρ τινος (masc.) came to be used in an action of a public character (εἰσαγγελία), perh. meaning at first "in behalf of," and then "for or against," comp. Arrian Alex. i. 25. 8 τί χρῆ ὑπὲρ Ἀλεξάνδρου γνώναι. In Aeschin., the preceding words (τί ὑμεῖς ὁμωμόκατε;) and the context, indicate that αὐτῶν is neut., as in the accepted Latin transl. "Vos quid jurastis? De iis rebus pronuntiaturos quæ in accusatione præscriptæ sunt." Steph.'s numerous instances from Polyb. are all neuter. Lucian's Index gives abundant instances of ὑπέρ with gen. of person, but all mean "pro," exc. perhaps Phal. prior 10 (ii. 197) ἄλλα μὲν ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ ἀκηκώς, ἐπεὶ δ' ἐπειράθη ἀπῆλθεν ἐπαυνῶν με where the Latin gives "de me," and the meaning may be "in controversy for and against me." [If the meaning had been "other [good things] in my favour," we should have expected ἄλλα τε...καί.]

[2719 b] In Arrian's Exped. Alex. ὑπέρ is freq. used with genit. of person and verbs of writing, inquiring etc. In his preface, distinguishing between γράφω περί and γράφω ὑπέρ, he says, ὅσα μὲν (?) ταῦτα ἄμφοι περὶ Ἀλεξάνδρου...ξυνέγραψαν ταῦτα ἐγὼ ὡς πάντῃ ἀληθῆ ἀναγράφω...Ἄλλοι μὲν δὲ ἄλλα ὑπὲρ Ἀλεξάνδρου ἀνέγραψαν, οὐδ' ἔστιν ὑπὲρ οὗτου πλείονες ἢ ἀξυμψωνότεροι ἐς ἀλλήλους. The ἄμφοι are Ptolemaeus and Aristobulus, and he proceeds to explain that these two wrote without being influenced by love of gain or other pressure. These two write in a detached and disinterested way "about" Alexander; the others "in behalf of," or "in praise of" him (or perhaps "in a controversial spirit about him"). He proceeds (ib.) to say that he has neglected mere idle oral tradition or talk "in favour of" Alexander (πάντῃ ἀπιστά ὡς λεγόμενα μόνον ὑπὲρ Ἀ.). It is perh. significant that vi. 2. 6 ὑπὲρ Ἀλεξάνδρου ξυνέγραψε is followed by ἐψεύσατο. Of course ὑπέρ with genit. of person may mean "about" a man, or men, when regarded impersonally, as an enemy, a nation etc., as in Arr. Alex. i. 5. 3 ὁ τῶν Αὐταριατῶν, ii. 6. 2 ὁ Δαρείου, v. 5. 1 ὁ Ἰνδῶν. The Index to Arrian contains several instances where ὑπέρ τινος masc. means "in behalf of," as in N.T.

[2720] (2) In LXX, ὑπέρ with gen. is very rare except in the titles of Psalms and in the phrases ὁ ὑπέρ and ὑπέρ οὗ. In the Pentateuch, it occurs only in Deut. xxiv. 16 (bis) "the fathers shall not be put to death for the children" and xxviii. 23 ὁ οὐρανὸς ὁ ὑπὲρ κεφαλῆς σου. Different authors and MSS. use ὑπέρ and περί differently. As to genit. of person, note Judg. vi. 31 "Will ye plead for Baal?" ὑπέρ, A περί, 1 S. ii. 25 "who shall entreat for him?" ὑπέρ, A περί, but 1 S. i. 27 "for this child I prayed" ὑπέρ (no v.t.), 2 S. vii. 25 and parall. 1 Chr. xvii. 23 (David to God) "thou hast spoken concerning thy servant and concerning his house," S. LXX περί (once), Luc. ὑπέρ (bis), Chr. LXX πρός and *ἐπί*¹. There are probably very few instances of ὑπέρ with genit. of person in canonical LXX meaning "about," except in the various reading (Luc.) of David's prayer quoted above².

[2721] (3) In N.T., ὑπέρ with genit. is relatively very much more frequent than in LXX. It occurs nearly twenty times in the

(but "angry or delighted at") there is a notion of having received something "[in return] for" which we make an emotional response of sorrow or thankfulness.

[2719 d] ὑπέρ with genit. of pers. occurs in Epict. Fragm. (3 Schenkl, 136 Schweig.) ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν βεβούλευται to mean "in behalf of" and also with γράφω i. 9. 27, where γράφω ὑπὲρ τινος means "write in behalf of" or "a letter of introduction for," rep. i. 9. 33 ὑπὲρ τούτου τί ἄλλο ἢ ἀνάγκη γράφειν ἐπιστολὰς ὡς ὑπὲρ νεκροῦ; Here there seems to be a play on writing a letter of introduction for the sake of helping a helpless creature and writing a letter of request for the sake of recovering a dead body to give it burial. It may be doubted whether the genit. is masc. or neut. in ii. 16. 42 ἄρχειν με θέλεις, ἰδιωτεύειν, μένειν, φεύγειν, πένεσθαι, πλουτεῖν; ἐγὼ σοι ὑπὲρ πάντων τούτων πρὸς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἀπολογήσομαι· δειξὼ τὴν ἐκάστου φύσιν οἷα ἐστίν, but τούτων, if not masculine, is at least personal in effect. The Philosopher says to God, "Make me play what part thou wilt, Ruler, Citizen, etc. I will justify thy ways to men, representing these characters [in accordance with thy will]." The discrimination between περί and ὑπέρ in Epictetus strongly confirms the conclusion that John likewise discriminated between them.

² [2720 b] In 1 and 2 Macc., ὑπέρ with genit. occurs about 28 times, and when used with genit. of person, it alw. means "in behalf of" exc. in 2 Macc. ix. 8 "above [the level of] men."

Gospels (as compared with twice in the Pentateuch and Joshua) always with genit. of person, and—unless it can be proved that i. 30 is an exception—always meaning “in behalf of”. This also is its meaning in the Acts where the genitive is always personal, or quasi-personal, referring four times (out of seven) to sufferings “in behalf of the Name [of the Lord].” In the Pauline Epistles it occurs about ninety times, and in almost every instance it means “in behalf of” some person, or some name, or cause, for which the Apostle contends as though contending for a person, or some object for which he is striving, or praying, or interceding: and in the very few instances in which this meaning is not expressed, it is probably always implied².

[2722] (4) As regards the alleged omission of ὑπέρ by Chrys. and Nonnus in i. 30 οὗτος ἐστὶν ὑπὲρ οὗ, Migne prints two quotations of it by Chrys. thus (1) Οὗτος ἦν περὶ οὗ εἶπον· Ὁ ὀπίσω μου ἐρχόμενος ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν, (2) Οὗτος ἦν ὃν εἶπον· Ὁπίσω μου ἔρχεται ἀνὴρ ὃς ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν, and a subsequent quotation of i. 15 thus (3) ὀπίσω μου ἔρχεται ὃς ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν although he has previously quoted i. 15 (ad loc.) thus (4) οὗτος ἦν ὃν εἶπον, ὁ ὀπίσω μου ἐρχόμενος ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν. It will be observed, 1st, that Chrys. does not omit a prep. in his first quotation of i. 30 (though he has περί for ὑπέρ), 2nd, that he alters ἐστίν to ἦν in both his quotations of i. 30 (conforming them to i. 15), 3rd, that he omits the important word ἀνὴρ in his first quotation of i. 30. These variations detract from the value of his testimony and indicate that he mixed i. 30 and i. 15. The same statement applies to Nonnus so far as concerns ἦν in i. 30 Οὗτος ἦν ὃν ἔειπον, ὁπίστερος ἔρχεται ἀνὴρ. Even Origen uses περί in his commentary on Samuel (1 S. xxviii. 18 foll.) οὗτός ἐστι περὶ οὗ ἐγὼ εἶπον, 'Ο ὀπίσω μου ἔρχ·, also omitting *ἀνὴρ*¹. It has been shewn above (2371) that ἀνὴρ, if it means "husband" or "bridegroom²," goes far to explain ὑπέρ. This view is confirmed by the fact that, when Origen says that the Baptist called Christ not only ἀμνός but also ἀνὴρ, he quotes the text correctly with ὑπέρ, and he does it again later on³. The evidence from Chrys. therefore indicates nothing except that he did not understand the three points that differentiate i. 30 from i. 15, namely, ἐστίν for ἦν, ὑπέρ οὗ for ὃν, and the important insertion of ἀνὴρ. A review of all the evidence makes it almost certain that John did not use ὑπέρ for περί.

² [2721 b] The single doubtful case of pers. genit. is Rom. ix. 27 Ἡσαίας δὲ κράζει ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, where Fritzsche may be right in alleging Arrian Exp. Al. vi. 2. 6 ὑπὲρ Ἀλεξάνδρου, “about Alexander” (2719 b), so that Israel is not a person, but a historical subject. But note the obvious contrast in Rom. xi. 2 Ἡμεῖς ἐντυγχάνει...κατὰ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ. In Rom. xi. 2, Elijah intercedes against Israel and is rebuked by the answer that there is “a remnant.” In Rom. ix. 27, Isaiah “cries in behalf of Israel” and announces that there will be a “remnant.” 2 Cor. viii. 23 εἴτε ὑπὲρ Τίτου means “whether [I have to stand up in defence] concerning Titus and his relations with you and myself”—I maintain that he has done you no wrong. In 2 Thess. ii. 1, ὑπὲρ τῆς παρουσίας means—as Lightf. expresses it, “roughly and broadly paraphrased”—“to advocate the true view of the coming.” Phil. i. 7 καθὼς ἐστὶν δίκαιον ἐμοὶ τοῦτο φρονεῖν ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, means that the Apostle is bound to feel confident, hopeful, and thankful “in behalf of” his Philippian converts.

[2721 c] Ὑπέρ, when used with a verb and such phrases as vi. 51 “the life of the world,” xi. 4 “the glory of God,” Acts ix. 16 “my name,” Rom. xv. 8 “the truth of God,” 2 Cor. i. 6 “your comforting,” 2 Thess. i. 4 “your endurance”—whether the verb be “contend” or “speak as an ambassador” or “boast” or whatever else—manifestly implies a personal interest “in behalf of” some person or some personified thing.

On ix. 21 ἀγτός περὶ ἑαυτοῦ (2374—80)

[2723] ix. 21 αὐτὸς περὶ ἑαυτοῦ λαλήσει, if translated according to classical Greek usage, would closely connect αὐτὸς περὶ ἑαυτοῦ making αὐτός little more than a preparation for emphasizing ἑαυτοῦ "he will speak—he about his own self," i.e. about himself and nothing else.

² [2722 b] Origen (2722 c) ranks the Baptist's testimony as to ἀνὴρ along with his testimony as to ἀμνός, suggesting that he laid stress on the former; but his comment ad loc. is lost. Cramer ad loc. prints (as one of several explanations of ἀνὴρ given by Ammonius) ἡ ὅτι πάσης τῆς λογικῆς φύσεως, ὃ ἐστὶ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας, νυμφίος ἐστίν.

Thus ὁ δὲ Κάτων αὐτὸς ἑαυτὸν ἀνείλεν would not mean "Cato himself [virtuous though he was] committed suicide" but "Cato killed himself with his own hand," as in Xen. Anab. ii. 4. 10 οἱ δὲ Ἕλληνες ἑφορῶντες τούτους αὐτοὶ ἐφ' ἑαυτῶν ἐχώρον "but the Greeks...marched entirely by themselves," not "the Greeks themselves by themselves." So 2 Cor. i. 9 ἀλλὰ αὐτοὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς τὸ ἀπόκριμα τ. θ. ἐσχήκαμεν means "we have had in our own selves the sentence of death" (R.V. "we ourselves"—less suitably if it means "we ourselves [as distinct from others].") But where the context makes αὐτός emphatic so that one pauses on it, it may be separated from the ἑαυτοῦ-phrase, as possibly in 2 Cor. x. 12 ἀλλὰ αὐτοί—ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἑαυτοὺς μετροῦντες...οὐ συνιᾶσιν. ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐκ.... There W.H. make no stop after αὐτοί, but αὐτοί seems to refer emphatically to "certain persons" mentioned above and contrasted with "we" thus: "but they—measuring themselves by themselves...have no understanding, but we...." So probably in Rom. viii. 23 οὐ μόνον δέ, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτοί—τὴν ἀπαρχὴν τοῦ πνεύματος ἔχοντες [ἡμεῖς]—καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς στεναζόμεν, "we ourselves, we ourselves, I say, having in ourselves..." (not "in our own selves"). In Jn ix. 21 the context exhibits the timorous parents shifting responsibility from themselves to their son, laying an increasing stress on the antithesis between "we" and "him": "We (unemph.) know that this is our son...but how he now seeth we (unemph.) know not, or (2759 a—f) who [as it is said] opened his eyes we (emph.) (ἡμεῖς) know not. Ask him (αὐτόν)—he is of age—he (αὐτός) shall speak concerning himself"—where "he" means "he himself," apart from us and uninfluenced by us.

On vi. 15 αὐτὸς μόνος (2375)

[2724] Origen, commenting on Christ's retirement to Ephraim (xi. 54) and mentioning other retirements, quotes vi. 15 γνοὺς ὅτι...ἀνεχώρησεν εἰς τὸ ὄρος and adds ἀλλ' οὐ μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν ἀλλὰ μόνος (not αὐτὸς μόνος)¹. The Latin b also omits "ipse." Chrys. has γνοὺς ὅτι...ἀνεχώρησεν εἰς τὸ ὄρος, and proceeds to comment, without adding αὐτὸς μόνος. Both Origen and Chrys. omit the preceding πάλιν (in ἀνεχώρησεν πάλιν εἰς τὸ ὄρος). Nonnus does not express αὐτός or πάλιν in his paraphrase, Οὐρεος ὑλήεντος ἐρημάδα δύσατο πέτρην. Δύσατο, implying "hiding," resembles ἐκρύβη in Epiphanius (117 D Haer. xxix. 2) γνοὺς ἀνεχώρησε καὶ ἐκρύβη ἐν Ἐφραὶμ πόλει τῆς ἐρήμου (after the words ἦλθον γὰρ (φησὶ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον) χρῖσθαι αὐτὸν εἰς βασιλεία) which also omits the words αὐτὸς μόνος. SS supports W.H. as to αὐτὸς μόνος, but the Curetonian Syr. has "he left them and fled again to the hill alone," φεύγει is also the reading of \aleph^* , and Chrys., in his comment, uses this word, ὁ δὲ Χριστὸς φεύγει. Τί δήποτε; Strangely enough, a little afterwards, Chrys., who has omitted the words πάλιν and μόνος in describing Christ's retirement, inserts them in the Walking on the Waters¹. D and d add κακεῖ προσήχθετο after αὐτὸς μόνος, \aleph has μόνος αὐτός.

[2725] In xii. 24 αὐτὸς μόνος μένει there is no various reading. Latin versions of Origen twice paraphrase it as "doth not bring forth fruit." Chrys. first quotes the greater part of xii. 24, including αὐτὸς μ. μένει, then explains ἦλθεν ἡ ὥρα, then ὁ κόκκος... ἀποθάνη, but makes no attempt to explain αὐτὸς μ. μένει. But Origen elsewhere (in his comment on Jeremiah xi. 19 in which he finds a reference to the "wood" of the cross) quotes xii. 24 ἐὰν μὴ κόκκος (for ὁ κ.) ... αὐτὸς μόνος μένει and adds that, but for the crucifixion, ἔμεινεν ἂν μόνος ὁ κόκκος. There is nothing in his comment to shew clearly at first whether he took αὐτός to mean "it" (as A.V.) or "by itself" (as R.V.), but when he repeats the words, he transposes them into a form that may be rendered thus, "Consider therefore His saying [and ask] whether He has not intended (βεβούληται) this [i.e. a reference to the cross] saying, 'The grain of wheat, except it, [or, it itself] fall into the earth and die (ὁ κ. τ. σίτου, ἐὰν μὴ πεσῶν εἰς τὴν γῆν ἀποθάνη αὐτός), abideth alone (μόνος μένει)'—if we punctuate after αὐτός. Nonnus brings out the predicative meaning of αὐτός, "by itself and fruitless," with great force².

[2726] Αὐτὸς μόνος must be distinguished from μόνος αὐτός (which \aleph reads in Jn vi. 15). The latter, according to the analogy of δεύτερος, τρίτος etc. followed by αὐτός, would mean "alone by himself." It occurs two or three times in Lucian to mean "unique."³

³ [2726 a] Lucian Demon. 29 (ii. 386) μόνος αὐτός ἐστι καὶ πρῶτος τῶν διαλεκτι-

But αὐτὸς μόνος might have various meanings according to its context e.g. “he himself [did it, and that too] alone and unaided,” or “[He is] by himself [quite] alone,” or “[existing] by himself [and] alone¹.” In vi. 15, αὐτὸς μόνος, coming at the end of the sentence is peculiarly emphatic (more so than in xii. 24) and the general confusion of the text, together with the difficulty of the phrase, suffice to explain the omission (by some) of αὐτός, or of μόνος, or of both. But the peculiar language springs from peculiar circumstances. In Gethsemane, Christ’s disciples were to “leave” Him “alone” (xvi. 32). After the Feeding of the Five Thousand (as Origen suggests²) they perhaps went, from one point of view, still further from their Lord, if they abetted the multitude against Him, and desired to see Him “made a king” by force. If ever the Son could be called “alone”—though He could not really be “alone” because the Father “was with” Him—it was on this occasion; and this perhaps is the meaning of the final αὐτὸς μόνος, “—by Himself, even the disciples being against Him, taking His way alone.” In reality, as Origen says, it was not Christ that was left “alone.” It was the disciples. And this sinister word “alone” ending the narrative of the Five Thousand, prepares the way for the Walking on the Waters, which describes the disciples as leaving their Master and failing in faith.

On vii. 4 ΖΗΤΕῖ Αὐτός (marg. αὐτό)...εἶναι (2375 a)

κῶν, “that he is unique and first” (see 1895 c), Gymnas. 40 (ii. 921) μὴ ἐρήμην, ὃ γενναῖε, μηδὲ τῶν ἀνδρῶν ἀπόντων, μόνος αὐτὸς (alone by yourself) λέγων οἴου κρατεῖν. The meaning is ironical in both these cases. Harmon. 3 (i. 855) μόνος αὐτὸς ἀμείνων ἂν ἦσθα, seems to mean “You alone by yourself would have been better than all these together.”

² [2726 c] Lomm. ii. 368 (on xi. 50). Origen speaks of the disciples as βουλευθείσιν ἂν μετὰ τῶν θελόντων ποιῆσαι αὐτὸν βασιλέα, ἢ ἤδη γένηται καὶ κοσμικῶς αὐτῶν βασιλεὺς, i.e. their king after the manner of this world, which might be paraphrased as “according to the manner of ‘the prince of this world.’” The crisis resembled that in the Temptation (Mt. iv. 9, Lk. iv. 6).

(marg. αὐτό) ἐν παρρησίᾳ εἶναι, there is probably a contrast between the “works” mentioned in vii. 3 (“that thy disciples also may behold thy works which thou art doing”) and the worker (“himself”)—as in x. 38 (“Even if ye believe not me believe the works,” and comp. xiv. 11). Missing this contrast, some scribes have dropped αὐτός as superfluous or have supposed ἀγτοσεν to be an error for ἀγτοσεν¹. Chrys. quotes οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἐν κρυπτῷ τι...αὐτός, but afterwards refers freely thus, Τὸ μὲν οὖν εἰπεῖν, Οὐδεὶς τι ἐν κρυπτῷ ποιεῖ, δειλίαν ἐγκαλούντων ἐστίν...τὸ δὲ ἐπαγαγεῖν ὅτι ζητεῖ ἐν παρρησίᾳ εἶναι, φιλοδοξίας. Under the circumstances this can hardly be taken as proof that he did not read αὐτός. For ζητεῖ αὐτός quoted apart from its context would be liable to misunderstanding. It should be added, however, that SS has “wisheth himself that it (or, he) should be in the open,” which suggests that it may have read αὐτὸς αὐτό. Nonnus certainly did not read αὐτό, but he may have omitted the pronoun altogether: Οὐ γάρ τις...ὑποκόλπιον ἔργον ὑφαίνει...ἀμφαδίην δ' ἐθέλει θρασὺς ἔμμεναι—where he combines the two meanings of παρρησία, (1) publicity (ἀμφαδίην), (2) boldness (θρασὺς). The textual evidence against αὐτό, when combined with the fact that παρρησία is regularly applied to persons, not to reports, makes it certain that αὐτό is corrupt, and probable that αὐτός is correct.

On viii. 44 ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων λαλεῖ (2378)

statement that Satan was the origin and parent of falsehood (ἔτεκε τὸ ψεῦδος πρῶτος) in the words to Eve ("Your eyes shall be opened"). Origen ad loc. refers to the "spirit" that "stood before the Lord" in order to cause the death of Ahab, saying "I will go forth and be a spirit of falsehood in the mouth of all his prophets." The lying "spirit," on that occasion "spoke from his own (ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων ἐλάλησε)" i.e. from the false prophets whom he had made "his own" by placing the spirit of falsehood in them. This view explains the Johannine connexion between "speaking from his own" and "ye are from the devil as your father," which otherwise is obscure¹.

[2728 δ] The above comment, on viii. 44 ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων, should have included some notice of Epictetus's use of τὸ ἴδιον. By ἴδια he means "essential property." Etymologically, a man's "property," being that which is "peculiar" to him, ought to include—if the question is of the difference between man and non-human creatures—such possessions as his reason, temperance, charity, etc. But in Gk, as in English, τὰ ἴδια had come to mean mostly a man's house, estate, etc. Against this popular use Epictetus protests, as when he bids us (iv. 5. 15—16) "mourn over one whose fate it has been, not to die, but, while still living, to lose his essential property (ἀπολεῖν τὰ ἴδια), not his patrimony or paltry plot of ground... (for none of these things is proper (ἴδιον) to the man)...but the qualities of man (τὰ ἀνθρωπικά), those characteristics with the stamp of which upon his mind he has come [into the world] (τοὺς χαρακτῆρας οὓς ἔχων ἐν τῇ διανοίᾳ ἐλήλυθεν)." Elsewhere he says of a man's "rooted convictions (δόγματα)" or "motives"—a very different thing from our "dogma"—iv. 4. 44 "these are a man's essential property, the things that make his actions also either vile or honourable (ταῦτα γὰρ

On ἐκέῖνος (2381—5)

[2729] The insertion of a superfluous ἐκέῖνος for the sake of emphasis was explained above (1920) as mainly due to Hebrew influence. But it is in part traceable to a universal desire, among those who speak naturally, to put the subject they are going to talk about at the head of the sentence, as often in old-fashioned English songs ("our captain he did say"). Comp. the use of αὐτῷ in Ox. Pap. 299 (late 1st cent.) Λάμπωνι μυοθηρευτῇ ἔδωκα αὐτῷ διὰ σοῦ ἀραβῶνα (δραχμὰς) ἡ ἵνα μυοθηρεύσει ἔντοκα. καλῶς ποιήσεις πέμψεις μοι αὐτάς. καὶ Διονυσίῳ προσ[τ]άτη Νεμερῶν κέκρηκα (δραχμὰς) ἡ καὶ ταύτας οὐκ ἔπεμψε, ἵνα εἰδῇς, ἔρρωσ(ο), which edd. transl. "Regarding Lampon the mouse-catcher I paid him for you as earnest money 8 drachmae in order that he may catch the mice while they are with young. Please send me the money. I have also lent Dionysius, the chief man of Nemeræ, 8 drachmae, and he has not repaid them, to which I call your attention. Good-bye¹."

On v. 32 ἄλλος...ὁ μαρτυρῶν (2384)

[2730] In v. 32 ἄλλος ἐστὶν ὁ μαρτυρῶν, Nonnus has Ἄλλος ἀνὴρ πέλε μάρτυς taking ἄλλος to mean the Baptist, as Chrysostom does (2384): and N⁸D a, e, and SS, read οἶδατε for οἶδα in what follows ("Ye know that his witness is true"), indicating that they, too, took ἐστὶ τὰ ἴδια ἐκάστου, τὰ καὶ τὰς πράξεις αἰσχρὰς ἢ καλὰς ποιοῦντα.)" Comp. ii. 4. ἡ ἀνατρέπει τὸ ἴδιον (i.e. faithfulness) τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ii. 12. 14 τὸ...μάλιστα ἴδιον Σωκράτους, ii. 26. τίτ. τὸ ἴδιον τοῦ ἀμαρτήματος. These facts indicate that, in the Epictetian sense, ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων might mean nearly the same thing as "from the abundance of the heart," and that this is one of the two meanings intended.

the meaning to be "Ye, Jews, know that the Baptist's witness is true." But (1) whereas there is no difficulty in supposing that Jesus appeals to the testimony of God (as a physician might appeal to Nature) there is some weakness in supposing that Jesus, as it were, calls into court a human witness to Himself and then adds "I know that this man speaks the truth." [This objection is removed by \aleph^*D etc., but at the cost of altering the text.] (2) As John was probably by this time in prison, or dead, and as he is described by the context in the past tense ("He was the lamp") it is not likely that he would be described here in the present (ἔστιν). (3) The whole passage appears to mean: "There is another witness now witnessing about me—I do not speak of John, who witnessed in the past—a present witness and a greater witness than John, I mean the works given me by my Father." (4) This explanation suits ἄλλος (2675—7) "another of the same kind as myself" (a d and ff "alter," not "alius" as the rest) by which the evangelist suggests Christ's unique unity with the Father. (5) Origen (2794—5) probably agrees with Cyprian, who (Epist. lxvi. 2, ed. Hartel, vol. ii. p. 727) quotes v. 31—2 as shewing that "The Lord Himself...was unwilling to be believed on His own testimony, but preferred to be approved by the judgment and testimony of God the Father." On ἄλλος in Epictetus see 2791 foll.

On xix. 35 καὶ ἐκεῖνος οἶδεν (2384)

[2731] On xix. 35 καὶ ἐκεῖνος οἶδεν, paraphrased by Nonnus as ἴδμεν, comp. Barn. ix. 8—9 δηλοῖ οὖν τὸν μὲν Ἰησοῦν ἐν τοῖς δυσὶν γράμμασιν καὶ ἐν τῷ ἐνὶ τὸν σταυρόν. οἶδεν ὁ τὴν ἐμφυτον δωρεὰν τῆς διδαχῆς αὐτοῦ θέμενος ἐν ἡμῖν. The writer has been enlarging on the mystery of "the three letters" that point to Jesus and His crucifixion, and he concludes, "He knoweth [the truth of this mystery]—even He who set in us the implanted gift of the Teaching." The parallel in the two appeals ("He knoweth") is made the more remarkable by a parallel corruption of the texts. As Nonnus tried to make sense by reading οἶδαμεν, so the Latin translator of Barnabas ("scitote quia") read οἰδατε (or ῥιστε) οτι, and \aleph has οτι for ο and διαθηκης for διδαχης. Corresponding to John's use of ἐκεῖνος to mean the Lord or Master, is the ancient Greek use of αὐτός in αὐτὸς ἔφα, "He [the Master] said it," meaning Pythagoras, frequently referred to in Greek literature, and used of God in Heb. xiii. 6 "Be ye free from the love of money...for HE (R.V. himself) hath said...", where Wetst. refers to Josh. i. 5 and adds "κατ' ἐξοχὴν, i.e. Deus."

On vii. 11 ποῦ ἐστὶν ἐκεῖνος (2385)

[2732] In vii. 11 Ποῦ ἐστὶν ἐκεῖνος, whereas Chrys. asks why the Jews will not call Christ by His name and decides that it is because of their detestation of Him, Nonnus apparently takes the pronoun as = "ille" in a good sense, Καί μιν Ἰουδαῖοι φιλήν μάρτυρον ἀνάγκη Πῇ μοι ἔβη; ποῖ κείνος; The double meaning is illustrated by Mt. xxvii. 19 τῷ δικαίῳ ἐκείνῳ, ib. 63 ἐκεῖνος ὁ πλάνος. The context in vii. 11 allows of Nonnus' interpretation; but that of Chrys. is favoured by ix. 12 ποῦ ἐστὶν ἐκεῖνος; xix. 21 ἐκεῖνος εἶπεν, where it is almost certainly contemptuous as well as hostile. On Acts v. 28, Blass (p. 171) says "D has τοῦ ἀνθρ. ἐκείνου· for τ. ἀ. τούτου of the other MSS. (the latter is due to ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι τούτῳ in the same verse)." Against this are the following facts: (1) the Latin of D in Acts v. 28 has "huius"; (2) the Gk, though it shews signs of an original ἐκεῖνος, has τογτογ written over it, not above the line but in the line; (3) in the line above, there happens to be γειν which may have led the scribe to write ἐκεῖνος by a mere lapse.

On xix. 9 πόθεν εἶ σύ; (2403)

[2733] Alford and Westcott take πόθεν εἶ σύ; to mean, in effect, "Whence art thou? [Art thou from heaven?]" This suits the charge brought by the Jews in xix. 7, "He made himself the Son of God." It also suits xix. 8 μᾶλλον¹ ἐφοβήθη, since "fear" would be natural in a Governor if he suspected that he had scourged a god or angel from heaven, as Pentheus had dealt with Dionysus. The words may be intended by John to include this meaning, just as (2645) "Behold, the Man!" may be intended by John to include the meaning with which Christians utter the latter. That Pilate, however, intended them thus is improbable for the following reasons.

[2734] We have seen (2403) that Chrysostom describes Pilate as "beginning the examination over again." Similarly says Nonnus, but more in detail, "He began to question Jesus the second time in the customary language, 'Who art thou (τελέθεις)? Whence art thou (εἰ σύ)¹?' " The phrase "customary language" appears to mean that a magistrate would begin the examination, whether of a witness or of an accused person², by asking his name and domicile—as Minos asks that of Scipio Africanus, when the latter demands a hearing—"Who and whence are you?" Outside the Greek Testament, πόθεν εἰ does not seem to be used without τίς³, and σύ is not usually inserted. According to this view, Pilate—terrified rather than goaded into severity by the charge of the Jews "He made himself the Son of God"—may be seeking to gain time, and to find a way of releasing Jesus without irritating the Jews, by asking Jesus about His birth and domicile in the usual form, which he ought to have used at first⁴. This is a rational supposition. But in that case, it may be urged that Pilate would have said τίς καὶ πόθεν, according to Greek usage (and as Nonnus has it), and that he would not have inserted the superfluous σύ, which, in non-hebraic Greek, savours rather of familiarity, or contempt, or hatred, than of reverence, when used in questions or commands⁵.

⁵ [2734 e] A superfluous σύ is freq. in Aristophanes after κάκιστε etc., and comp. Soph. Phil. 927 ὦ πῦρ σύ, Eurip. And. 261 ὦ βάρβαρον σὺ θρέμμα. When not required for sense e.g. after an imperative, it is either antithetical to another

[2735] In O.T., "Whence [art] thou (or [are] ye)?" is at least once distinguished from "Whence comest thou?" and means "What is thy birth and origin?" The Hebrew regularly omits the verb and inserts the pronoun, contrary to the Greek idiom. On two occasions the LXX inserts both verb and pronoun, thus mixing the two idioms. The question is from a superior to an inferior except when Jacob modifies it by adding "brethren¹."

[2736] These facts shew that if Pilate recommenced his examination as Nonnus and Chrysostom suggest—a view that is favoured by Mark (xv. 4) who alone says "but Pilate began to question him again (πάλιν)"—he might begin with a question about the name and domicile of the accused, and that this, in Biblical Greek, might be expressed by πόθεν εἰ σύ; This might commend itself to John because of its inner and mystical meaning. Throughout his Gospel, πόθεν εἰμί and πόθεν ἔρχομαι refer to the Father from whom the Son was born and from whom He came².

pronoun, or emphatic as in vernacular English ("come here, you rascal"), or familiar. It does not appear to be used in reverential requests, e.g. with Ζεῦ, by the tragedians (2776 b).

² [2736 a] In the Synoptists, Christ is represented by Mt. as using πόθεν in connexion with John's baptism, xxi. 25 πόθεν ἦν; ἐξ οὐρανοῦ ἢ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων (where Mk-Lk. om. πόθεν, and Orig. Lomm. iii. 55 reads πότερον and elsewhere (Huet) omits ἐξ οὐρανοῦ ἢ, prob. by homoeotel.). In Mk, the people of Nazareth use it about Christ's powers, Mk vi. 2 πόθεν τοῦτω ταῦτα; The parall. Mt. xiii. 54, 56 uses it twice thus. Both Mk and Mt. mention in the context a discussion about Christ's parentage. Mk's two other uses of πόθεν are viii. 4 πόθεν.....ἐπ' ἐρημίας; (Mt. xv. 33 πόθεν...ἐν ἐρημίᾳ), and Mk xii. 37 πόθεν αὐτοῦ ἐστὶν υἱός; (Mt.-Lk. πῶς). In both, πόθεν might imply impossibility.

[2736 b] According to the usage of Epictetus, πόθεν τοῦτω; would imply a denial, "This man could not possibly possess these powers." Comp. iii. 13. 12 πόθεν γὰρ αὐτῷ ταύτην [i.e. τὴν εἰρήνην] κηρύξαι; "for what power has he to preach peace?" iii. 21. 10 πόθεν σοι μεταδιδόναι τούτων ὧν οὐκ ἔχεις; "what power have you to impart to others things you don't yourself possess?" Sometimes πόθεν is without a verb, as in Epict. iii. 24. 70 "Who then has authority over me? Philip, or Alexander, or Perdiccas or the Great King? Whence do they get it (πόθεν αὐτοῖς)?" In i. 19. 9 a tyrant says "I will shew you that I am your lord," and the philosopher replies πόθεν σύ; and in iii. 1. 36 (see Schweig. Index) some MSS. read the nom. πόθεν γὰρ ἐκεῖνος, but the best MSS. have ἐκεῖνῳ.

[2736 c] In Jn, πόθεν is freq. used by Christ to express His coming from the Father, as in viii. 14 οἶδα πόθεν ἦλθον καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω, ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ οἴδατε πόθεν ἔρχομαι ἢ ποῦ ὑπάγω, vii. 28 κάμῃ οἴδατε καὶ οἴδατε πόθεν εἰμὶ. The Jews are represented as using the phrase about Jesus in a local sense, vii. 27 τοῦτον οἴδαμεν πόθεν ἐστίν (i.e. His native place). They proceed, ὁ δὲ Χριστὸς ὅταν ἔρχηται οὐδεὶς γινώσκει πόθεν ἐστίν (a phrase quite distinct from the one implying rejection or disowning in Lk. xiii. 25—7 (bis) οὐκ οἶδα ὑμᾶς πόθεν ἐστέ). How could they make this last statement in view of the Jewish belief that the Messiah was to be born in Bethlehem? Hor. Heb. (on vii. 27) refers to Jer. Berach. fol. 5. 1 and to other traditions asserting that the Messiah, after being born, was snatched away or hidden. Sanhedr. 97 a speaks of "Messiah, treasure-trove, and a scorpion" as three things that come when one does not think of them (comp. Lk. xvii. 20 "without observation"), and the Jew in Justin's Dialogue (Tryph. 8) mentions a belief that Messiah "if he is really born, is unknown and does not yet know his own self, or possess any power, till Elias shall anoint him." Traditions as to the material and local "whence" the Messiah was to come—on the clouds of heaven, or riding on an ass down from Mount Olivet, or, as Tacitus says, "from the East," or from Nazareth, or from Bethlehem—might so overshadow the spiritual "whence," that John might naturally desire to emphasize the latter.

But it is far from sufficient to shew that Pilate uttered the Johannine question. To understand its inner meaning we must go back to the last words of Pilate's previous dialogue with Jesus (xviii. 38) "What is truth?" and to the sequel—"Having said this he went out again." This does not imply (as Bacon assumes) that Pilate was "jesting"; but it does imply that "he did not stay for an answer." Though we may be unable to believe that Pilate uttered the words—at least in this abstract sense—it is easy to see the deep mystical meaning capable of being attached to them as representing the restless and unsatisfied scepticism of the upper classes of the Empire. The Roman world asks the Truth to reveal itself, and then, "goes out" from its presence without waiting for the revelation. Hence, afterwards, when it asks the Truth a second question, "Whence art thou?" the Truth is silent. The question and the silence are dramatically appropriate. But this very appropriateness—suggesting that the Son of God was judicially hidden from the eyes of the unjust judge—makes it likely that a symbolistic evangelist would accept on slight evidence a non-historic tradition, or interpretation of tradition, that lent itself to symbolism. This likelihood combines with the divergence and confusion of all the Gospel traditions at this point, and with the uncertainty as to the witnesses of the dialogue between Christ and Pilate, so as to make it impossible to feel sure that Pilate uttered the question in any sense at all—least of all in the sense "What is thy parentage, human or divine¹?"

On xix. 17 Κρανίου Τόπον ὃ (2412)

[2738] In xix. 17 εἰς τὸν λεγόμενον Κρανίου Τόπον, ὃ λέγεται Ἐβραϊστὶ Γολγοθά (marg. Γολγόθ), some MSS. alter ὃ to ὅς, others omit ὃ λέγεται, and Blass (p. 77) would read Κρ. Τ., Ἐβρ. δὲ Γ. But the question is complicated by the fact that the same repetition of λεγ. is found in Mt. xxvii. 33 εἰς τόπον λεγόμενον Γολγοθά, ὃ (al. ὅς) ἐστὶν Κρανίου Τόπος λεγόμενος (D om. λεγόμενος) where Mk xv. 22 has ἐπὶ τὸν Γολγοθὰν τόπον (D τόπον Γολγοθά), ὃ ἐστὶν ᾿μεθερμηνεόμενος¹ (marg. and D -όμενον) Κρανίου Τόπος, but Lk. xxiii. 33 (omitting Γολγοθά) has simply ἐπὶ τὸν τόπον τὸν καλούμενον Κρανίον. Confusion seems to have arisen from the fact that the place was really called "Skull," but was known to many Christians as The Place of the Skull. The very extraordinary text in Mk (W.H. txt) seems to mean "to the place [called] Golgotha which [word] is Place of Skull rendered into [Hebrew]," making μεθερμηνεόμενος agree with τόπος! For the most part an Aramaic word would be put first, then ὃ ἐστὶν, and then the Gk equivalent. But in xix. 17 the Greek comes first, and ὃ may refer either (1) to Κρανίον as a Gk neuter noun, or (2) to Κρανίου Τόπον regarded as a place-name and therefore as neuter. Having regard to the fact that this is a case where Lk. is omitting and Jn intervening to support Mk-Mt., we must be prepared for a mixture of traditions, and the safest plan seems to be to adopt W.H.'s txt, though we must leave in doubt the precise antecedent of ὃ. The repetition of λέγεται may indicate that the place was "(popularly) called (in Greek)" by one name and "(correctly) called in Hebrew" by another.

On ἄν and ἔάν interchanged (2414)

[2739] Since ὅς ἄν might be expressed by ἔάν τις, some writers might like, in the former phrase, to spell ἄν as ἔάν—thus emphasizing its conditional meaning and distinguishing it from ἄν in apodosis. On the other hand, writers that freely use ἄν (as in classical Greek) for "if" in protasis, would not recognise the use of this distinction. John, alone of writers of N.T., uses ἄν for "if"—almost, however, if not entirely, restricted to the phrase ἄν τις. As he also freely uses ἔάν τις, it may be presumed that he uses ἄν τις to express the condition with less emphasis, so as to approximate to ὅστις ἄν. Ἐάν after a relative occurs frequently in Mark and Matthew, but only in one passage of W.H.'s text of Luke (xvii. 33 ὅς ἐὰν ζητήσῃ... ὅς δ' ἄν ἀπολέσκει). In John it occurs in xv. 7 ὃ ἐὰν θέλῃτε (Σ ὅσα) and in xxi. 25. As to the latter, see 2414 on the question whether ἔάν means "if" or "soever¹."

¹ [2739 a] In v. 19 "nothing, except," οὐδέν, ἄν μὴ, W.H. read ἄν without altern. on the authority of ΣB, but in both MSS. οὐδέν comes at the end of the line, which, in their archetype, may very well have originally terminated with

On xvii. 2 πᾶν ὃ δέλωκας (2422)

οὐ γὰρ εἶ so that the second ε was dropped and ΔΝ at the beginning of the next line was supposed to mean "if." In xii. 32 W.H. read καὶ γὰρ ἂν ὑψωθῶ, without altern., on the authority of B alone, but there again ΔΝ comes at the end of the line. In the other instances, ἂν is followed by τις, xiii. 20, xvi. 23, xx. 23 (δὲς). In Acts ix. 2 θπας, ἐάν τις, Ν reads ἂν at the end of a line. Chrys. quotes viii. 14 καὶ ἐγὼ correctly, and then καὶ ἐὰν ἐγὼ immediately afterwards. He also quotes vi. 62 as ἂν οὖν ἰδῇτε (W.H. ἐὰν οὖν θεωρῇτε).

[2739 δ] As regards vi. 62 discussed in 2210—2, 2515, and just mentioned as misquoted by Chrys. (in Migne) as ἂν οὖν ἰδῇτε—it should be added that Cramer prints a version containing the context of Chrys. (τὸ τὰ ἀπόρρητα φέρει εἰς μέσον) but having ἐάν with indic. pres., ἐὰν οὖν θεωρεῖτε. SS has "but [what] if ye shall see," and the Latin versions have "videritis." The indices give no reference to this passage in the works of Clement of Alexandria, or Origen. Nonnus has εἰ δέ κεν ἀθρήσητε...τί ῥέξετε τοῦτο μαθόντες; not only paraphrasing the protasis with an aorist subjunctive but also consistently supplying an apodosis in the future. These facts increase the uncertainty of interpretation. But it still remains probable that the difficult θεωρῇτε is the correct reading, corrupted by translators and commentators into something that gives a more intelligible and materialistic meaning than the evangelist himself intended. According to Johannine usage, ἐὰν θεωρῇτε should mean either "if ye be at this moment beholding," or "if ye be found in the day of visitation beholding."

[2739 ε] An omission may be here supplied as to the Johannine use of ἂν with indic. in apodosis touched on in 2566 δ. Outside Jn, Bruder (1888) gives no instance of ἂν before a pause in N.T., the nearest approach being Mt. xxiv. 43 ἐγγρηγόρησεν ἂν καὶ οὐκ ἂν εἴασεν...where Bruder inserts a comma after the first ἂν, but W.H. rightly omit it, and the parall. Lk. xii. 39 has in W.H. txt ἐγγρηγόρησεν ἂν καὶ οὐκ ἀφήκεν, but marg. simply οὐκ ἂν ἀφήκεν. Jelf § 431, in a page on "the position of ἂν," gives no instance of ἂν at the end of a clause. But (ib. § 432) in a page on "the repetition of ἂν" he gives a large number of instances where it is repeated in order to emphasize the condition. In a few of these (not distinguished by Jelf from the rest) ἂν comes before a pause, Aesch. Ag. 340 οὐ τὰν...ἀνθαλοῖεν ἂν, Eur. Hipp. 961 τῆσδ' ἂν γένοντ' ἂν, Hec. 359 ἴσως ἂν...τύχοιμ' ἂν. Jelf adds Plato 31 A ὑμεῖς δ' ἴσως τάχ' ἂν...κρούσαντες ἂν με...ῤαδίως ἂν ἀποκτείναιτε, εἴτα τὸν λοιπὸν βίον καθεύδοντες διατελοῖτ' ἂν. But there (εἴτα being equiv. to "and then") διατελοῖτ' ἂν seems to be parall. to ἂν ἀποκτείναιτε so that ἂν is not reduplicated. This passage, then, resembles xiv. 28 ἐχάρητε ἂν and xviii. 36 ἡγωνίζοντο ἂν quoted in 2566 δ as placing a non-reduplicated ἂν at the end of a clause. No doubt there are other instances in Greek, but Jelf does not mention any and they are probably rare.

[2739 δ] As regards the position of ἂν in viii. 19, xiv. 7 τὸν πατέρα μου ἂν ἤδαιτε (where Bruder, 1888, has ἂν final), it follows the rule (Jelf § 431. 2) that ἂν is generally joined to the predicate, as in ἔλεγον ἂν, or to "that member of the sentence on which most emphasis is laid." What is peculiar to these two Johannine passages is that the "member" is not here a single word (as in οὐκ ἂν, πάλαι ἂν, τάχ' ἂν, ταῦτ' ἂν) but a phrase, τὸν πατέρα μου.

ἔδωκας αὐτῷ ἐξουσίαν πάσης σαρκός, ἵνα πᾶν ὃ δέδωκας αὐτῷ δώσει αὐτοῖς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, there are striking variations in the MSS., in Chrysostom, Nonnus, and Epiphanius, who repeatedly reads δός for δώσει¹. Origen's comment is lost; but elsewhere he blends xvii. 11 with xvii. 21 πάτερ ἄγιε, δός ἵνα... in a manner resembling the tradition of Epiphanius². Ὁ, πᾶν ὃ, and ὄνομα ὃ, with the aorist or perfect of "give," occur frequently in John, and seldom without important variations. Sometimes the neuter is changed to the masculine; or the clause about "giving," or the word "name," is omitted, so as to substitute "he that gave" for "that which he gave," "those whom [2740 b] Chrys. appears to quote xvii. 2 in two forms, of which the first is ἵνα πᾶν ὃ δέδωκας αὐτῷ μὴ ἀπόληται. But perhaps μὴ ἀπόληται is not a quotation but a preparatory paraphrase; "Even as thou gavest him authority over all flesh, that all that thou hast given him"—may not perish, for to benefit is always 'glory' to God." Later on, having explained that "authority over all flesh" does not imply authority over those that refuse to believe, he resumes the text correctly thus, ἵνα πᾶν ὃ δέδωκας αὐτῷ δῶ αὐτοῖς ζωὴν αἰώνιον. But he proceeds to apologize for it, as it were, by saying that Jesus speaks here about Himself ἀνθρωπινώτερον, whereas the evangelist takes higher language. His meaning seems to be that Jesus says, in effect, "the Father hath given me eternal life," whereas John says "He was life," and "He was light." This implies the rendering "that all that He [the Father] hath given to Him [to the Son] He [the Son] may give to them—[namely] eternal life."

[2740 c] Nonnus has...ὥς πόρος αὐτῷ Σαρκὸς ὅλης βροτῆς πρυμνήσιον ἡνιοχεῖν Βούλομαι εἰν ἐνὶ πάντας, ὅσοις πάρος ὤπασας αὐτός, Ζωὴν θεσπεσίην αἰώνιον ἀμφιπολεύειν "Ὅφρα σε γινώσκωσι θεὸν μόνον..." "I desire that in unity (εἰν ἐνὶ) all on whom thou thyself by preordinance (πάρος) hast bestowed it may follow after eternal life, in order that they may know..." Comp. xvii. 11 τήρησον αὐτοὺς ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου ᾧ [where he read οὖς] δέδωκάς μοι, which he paraphrases as φύλαξον ὁμόφρονas. The two passages suggest that Nonnus vaguely felt that these phrases about "giving" were connected with the unity of the Church and might be rendered by "at one" and "likeminded." Also, in xvii. 2 he seems to have read ᾧ δέδωκας αὐτό for ὃ δέδωκας αὐτῷ.

² [2740 d] Lomm. xiii. 304 πάτερ ἄγιε, δός ἵνα καθὼς ἐγὼ καὶ σὺ ἐν ἑσμεν (and sim. Lomm. xxv. 54) and xiv. 118, with "I ask" for "give," "Pater sancte, rogo ut sicut ego..." These quotations blend xvii. 11 with xvii. 21. They may have arisen from regarding ἵνα as meaning "Oh, that!" "Would that!" In xvii. 2, ἵνα following the imperat. δόξασον may have been taken as meaning ["Do this, I pray thee] in order that," or ["I desire that thou wouldest do this] in order that," and hence Nonnus may have rendered it Βούλομαι.

thou hast given" for "that which thou hast given" etc. Sometimes the word "give," sometimes the whole clause about "giving," is omitted. The Latin translations of Origen repeatedly exhibit these deviations; and even in Christ's utterance to the Samaritan woman "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith unto thee, 'Give me to drink,'" the translation of Origen omits the italicised words¹.

[2741] Most unfortunately, Origen's Greek comment is missing on almost every one of the passages where this difficult phrase occurs. But textual evidence and antecedent probability support W.H. in retaining δ against $\delta\varsigma$ and $\cdot\omicron\varsigma$, and indicate that the phrase "that which thou hast given me," even when it denotes the Church, points back to the unity between the Father and the Son and to the unity between God and man. Origen, in his commentary on Romans (xvi. 20 "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ"), says, "the grace of God and the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ is to be taken as one and the same, 'For as the Father maketh alive whom he will, the Son also (et) maketh alive whom he will'; and 'As the Father hath life in himself, to the Son also (et) he hath given to have life in himself': so also the grace that the Father gives the Son too gives": he adds, "Gratia ergo est, quicquid habet is, qui non fuit, et est, accipiens ab eo, qui semper fuit, et est, et erit in aeternum²."

[2742] These words of Origen's explain not only why the word "give" occurs more frequently in John than in the Synoptists but also why it is applied by him so frequently to the Father and to the Son. What "grace" is in the Pauline Epistles, "giving" is in the

² [2741 a] Origen here blends Jn v. 21 and v. 26 (Lomm. vii. 448). According to this view, if χάρις is received only by a human being ("qui non fuit et est"), as distinct from a divine one, we might expect some evangelists to prefer not to use such expressions as Lk. ii. 40, 52 about Christ, although Origen accepts and explains them as applying to Christ's human nature. Jn and Lk., alone of the evangelists, use χάρις. And both apply it to Christ. But they apply it very differently (1775).

Fourth Gospel. The Father is represented above as "giving" to the Son "to have life in himself" and also the power of "making alive." That which the Son "makes alive" is the Church. The Father, therefore, virtually "gives" the Church to the Son. Elsewhere, it is implied that the Father has "given" His "name" to the Son (xvii. 12 "thy name that thou hast given me"), that is, the essential being of the true Son of God. This implies unity with the Father ("I and the Father are one" etc.) and the possession of the love of the Father (xv. 10 "ye will abide in my love...I abide in his love," xvii. 26 "that the love wherewith thou lovedst me may be in them and I in them"). There is also a gift of peace, a peace above the peace of the world ("My peace I give unto you—not as the world giveth"). When, therefore, the Son prays to the Father for the disciples "Keep them in thy name that thou hast given me," He means "*keep them in thy love and peace, at one with me, as I am with thee*¹."

[2742 b] There remain the instances in the Last Prayer:—xvii. 2 "thou gavest him authority[†] over all flesh," ib. "that all that thou hast given to him he should give to them eternal life," ib. 4 "having perfected the work that thou hast given to me that I might do it," ib. 6 "the men that thou gavest me out of the world...thine they were and thou gavest them to me," ib. 7 "all things as many as thou gavest (marg. hast given) me are from thee," ib. 8 "the words that thou gavest (marg. hast given) me," ib. 9 "I ask...about them that thou hast given me," ib. 11 "keep them in my name that thou hast given me," ib. 12 "I was keeping them in thy name that thou hast given me," ib. 22 "the glory that thou hast given me," ib. 24 "Father, that which (δ) thou hast given me, I will that where I am they also may be with me," ib. 24 "that they may be beholding the glory that is mine [the glory] that thou hast given (marg. gavest) to me," xviii. 9 "those whom thou hast given me I have not lost [a single] one (οὐδένα) of them" (referring to xvii. 12), ib. 11 "the cup that the Father hath given me." There is nothing

[2743] Nonnus paraphrases the words "the Father hath life in himself" as "provideth the all-motherly life of the world (παμμήτορα κόσμου ζών)," an epithet applied to the Earth by Æschylus (Prom. 90) and Philo. As the Psalmist says (Ps. cxlv. 16) "Thou openest thy hand and satisfiest the desire of every living thing," so Philo (i. 32) says that the poets were right to call the earth "All-mother," and that "Nature has bestowed on her, as being the most ancient and fruitful of mothers, the streams of rivers and fountains, like breasts,"—a saying that would appeal to worshippers of the "many-breasted" image of "Diana of the Ephesians." Another epithet of the earth was Pandora, the All-giver, applied by Philo to the earth in the passage just quoted, and by Cleanthes (in the masculine) to Zeus. In the Sermon on the Mount, our Lord refers to the Father as the Giver of the sunshine and the rain. Elsewhere He speaks of the Father as giving (Mt. vii. 11) "good gifts" to them that ask Him. For "good gifts" the parallel in Luke (xi. 13) substitutes "the Holy Spirit." John (iv. 10) speaks of "the gift of God," meaning "the living Water," which must be interpreted as the Holy Spirit. The Spirit, as being God's "gift," and "the gifts of the Spirit," are mentioned throughout the Epistles. When John describes the Father as "giving" the bread of heavenly life and the water of the Holy Spirit to men, and also as giving life in Himself, and in His Name, to the Son, he appears to be attempting to raise his readers above formal notions about "grace (χάρις)" and "reward (μισθός)," into a high spiritual sphere where God is regarded not only as the All-giver, but also as the Self-giver, so that "that which he hath given" to the Son means not only this or that divine attribute, but the Pleroma or Fulness, of all the divine attributes,—the Father giving His own Fulness to the Son, and, through the Son, dispensing gifts from His Fulness to men. This language would be intelligible to Greeks as well as Jews and would avoid the notion of "favouritism" suggested by the word "grace" or "favour" in Greek¹.

like this in the Synoptists exc. Mt. xxviii. 18 "all authority is given to me in heaven and upon the earth."

[2744] If this was John's meaning, we can understand why he may have in some cases strained the Greek language to suggest, without too sharply defining, all that the Son of God implied when He spoke of the Father as "giving." For example, x. 29 ὁ πατήρ μου ὃ δέδωκέν μοι πάντων μείζον ἐστίν¹, if it refers to the Church as being the new-created Cosmos, may mean that the Church includes (and is therefore "greater than") all things, or superior to all enemies. But it may also refer to the redeeming Love of the Father—to the (Eph. iii. 18—19) "breadth and length and height and depth" of the love of God in Christ "which passeth knowledge," by which the Church is "filled unto all the fulness of God." At the same time it suggests the Father as a Fountain of Giving—"The Father, that which hath given to me"—a Being that desires to be known as "the Being that gives¹." We can also understand how some found difficulty in the thought as well as in the Greek. The reception of gifts, they may have said, is "grace"; and then they may have added, with Origen (2741), "Grace, or the reception of gifts, belongs to man, who once was not, and now is (qui non fuit, et est)—receiving from Him that ever was and is and shall be to all eternity." The inference followed that Christ was not to be regarded as a recipient of "gifts²." This, as well as the crabbed Greek, may have caused the corruption of the

"a man has nothing that he has not received from God" no Christian teacher can be more fervid (iv. 1. 103) "And after all this, canst thou—having received everything from Another, yea, even thine own self's self (καὶ αὐτὸν σεαυτὸν)—canst thou, I say, chafe against and chide Him that gave (τὸν δόντα) if He take aught away from thee? Who art thou [to dare this]? And for what hast thou come [into this world]? Did not He (ἐκεῖνος) bring thee on the stage (εἰσήγαγεν)? Did not He shew thee the light? Did He not give thee fellow-workers? Senses? Reason? And in what character did He bring thee on the stage (ὡς τίνα δὲ εἰσήγαγεν;)? Was it not as a mortal?...Art thou not willing, then, after beholding the procession for as long a time as hath been given to thee...to depart with homage and thankfulness for the things thou hast heard and seen?"

¹ [2744 a] For example, in xvii. 24 "Father, that which thou hast given me, I desire that where I am they also may be with me," it seems probable that the italicised words mean something more than "as for that portion of the human race which thou hast given me." They suggest a spiritual conception that puts the reader on his guard against supposing that "with me" means "in the same place with me," instead of meaning in the unity of the Giver and the Receiver, the Father and the Son.

² [2744 b] Comp. Eph. iv. 8 "Having ascended on high...he gave gifts to men." This is from Ps. lxxviii. 18 "Thou hast received gifts among men," LXX ἔλαβες δόματα ἐν ἀνθρώποις. The Targum however paraphrases with St Paul (Walton) "Docuisti verba Legis, dedisti dona filiis hominum."

[2745] Chrysostom, after explaining why Christ selected Philip as the disciple to be questioned, drops "buy" and inserts "so many" in the question thus, "And see what He saith ($\kappa\alpha\iota \omicron\rho\alpha \tau\acute{\iota} \phi\eta\sigma\iota\nu \acute{\epsilon}\kappa\epsilon\iota\nu\omicron\varsigma$), Whence [can there come] to us so many loaves that these may eat ($\pi\acute{o}\theta\epsilon\nu \eta\mu\acute{\iota}\nu \acute{\alpha}\rho\tau\omicron\iota \tau\omicron\sigma\omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota \iota\upsilon\alpha \phi\acute{\alpha}\gamma\omega\sigma\iota\nu \omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota$);?" Later on he describes the disciples as having been, at first, so unbelieving as to say, "Whence shall we buy loaves ($\pi\acute{o}\theta\epsilon\nu \acute{\alpha}\gamma\omicron\rho\acute{\alpha}\sigma\omicron\mu\epsilon\nu \acute{\alpha}\rho\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$);?"—words that occur nowhere in N.T. except in vi. 5 (v.r.), which assigns them to *Christ*².

² [2745 a] Chrys. says, in the context, (1) "The other evangelists say that the disciples came to [Jesus] and questioned and besought so that He should not send them away fasting ($\acute{\epsilon}\rho\omega\tau\tilde{\omega}\nu \kappa\alpha\iota \pi\alpha\rho\alpha\kappa\alpha\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\iota\nu \tilde{\omega}\sigma\tau\epsilon \mu\tilde{\eta} \acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron\lambda\tilde{\upsilon}\sigma\alpha\iota \alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma \nu\eta\sigma\tau\epsilon\iota\varsigma$): but this one [John] introduces [the fact] that Philip was asked by Christ ($\omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma \delta\acute{\epsilon} \acute{\epsilon}\iota\sigma\acute{\alpha}\gamma\epsilon\iota \tau\omicron\nu \Phi. \acute{\epsilon}\rho\omega\tau\eta\theta\tilde{\eta}\nu\alpha\iota \pi\alpha\rho\acute{\alpha} \tau\omicron\upsilon \chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\upsilon$)."

(2) Then, after assigning to Christ the question, "Whence [are there] to us so many loaves that these may eat?" he proceeds, "So also in the Old Testament He said to Moses. For He did not work the sign till He had asked him, What ever (τι ποτε) is in thy hand?" Here we should have expected a reference to the question of Moses (Numb. xi. 13) "Whence [is there] to me flesh to give to all this people?" But he quotes Ex. iv. 2 "What is this (τι τοῦτό ἐστιν) in thine hand?"—which does not seem to apply to anything in the Feeding of the Five Thousand (unless it refers to the tradition peculiar to Mk vi. 38 "How many loaves have ye?" comp. 1 S. xxi. 3 "Now therefore what is under thine hand? Give me five loaves....") (3) Chrys. continues, "And having been asked he answereth ($\kappa\alpha\iota \acute{\epsilon}\rho\omega\tau\eta\theta\epsilon\iota\varsigma \acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron\kappa\rho\iota\nu\epsilon\tau\alpha\iota$) saying, Loaves of [the value of] two hundred denarii suffice not that each should take a little. But this he said tempting him, for he himself knew what he was intending to do."

Nonnus has "buy" (in a different word—πριάμεσθα, not ἀγοράσωμεν) but introduces "so many" in connexion, not with the loaves, but with the people, "whence are we [to be] buying an abundance of loaves for so many men (τοσσατίους)?"

[2746] Origen nowhere quotes vi. 5. Nor does he refer to Christ's question about "buying"—though he refers more than once to "buying food," on the part of the disciples, as signifying the attempt (and failure) to obtain spiritual truth¹. He certainly regarded the bread in the Feeding of the Five Thousand as having a Eucharistic meaning, and as signifying the flesh or body of Christ. But, if he accepted, as Christ's, the question, "Whence are we to buy loaves?" he would probably interpret it as mystically meaning (in accordance with a frequent meaning (2736 a, b) of "Whence?") that the Bread could not be bought. It was bread stamped with the sign of the Cross, or imbued with its savour, given by the Lamb of God "without price²."

On the non-use of some active perfects (2441 a) [2747] The best illustration of the non-use of active perfects, as compared with the use of passives, is to be found in κτίζω "create,"

There can be no doubt that "he said" here means "He said," that is, Christ. But the extract, with the words so strangely transposed, shews how easily "said, tempting him," might form part of a tradition that Philip or some other disciple "tempted" Christ, by questioning Him as Moses questioned God. In "so that He should not send them away fasting," μή seems to be a corrupt insertion: "The disciples, in effect, said to Christ, "Send them away fasting." Or else Chrys. has attributed to the disciples the expression of Christ's own feeling, "I am unwilling to send them away fasting." This commentary—which is the earliest we possess on the Johannine miracle—must be described as chaotic.

applied to the Creator throughout the whole of the Greek Testament and frequently used in the perfect passive, ἔκτισται¹, but never in the active, ἔκτικα. Prof. Jannaris (Gk Gr. p. 189) gives ἔκτικα, without reference. L.S. give “κέκτικα Diod.” Diod. Sic. Index gives no such instance. But Steph. gives “Perf. κεκτικέναι τὴν Ῥώμην ap. Diodor. (ex Georg. Syncell.) vol. 2, p. 636, 67.” This may be corrupt, but it is instructive. The rule is that when a verb begins with κτ the perfect should begin with εκτ: but it is broken with κτáομαι. Whoever wrote κεκτικέναι may have thought himself entitled to break it with κτιζω. All other Greek writers (so far as Steph. alleges) appear to have left the active perfect of κτιζω alone. And yet there are abundant cases in LXX where the passive perfect is used and where the active perfect would have been, though not necessary, at all events suitable, as in Ps. lxxxix. 12 “Thou hast created the north and the south,” where the LXX has ἔκτισας.

[2748] Take also ζητέω and ὀρίζω. Veitch quotes Dinarchus for ἐζήτηκα—non-occurrent in Aristoph., Demosth., Aristot., O.T., N.T. and Steph., though the latter mentions ζητείται and ἐζήτηται as frequent in scholiasts. Its use by Dinarchus accords with the unfavourable judgment pronounced on him by Dionysius. The active perfect of ὀρίζω occurs once in Demosth. (doubtful), once in Aristot., never in N.T.; the passive perfect is frequent².

[2749] In support of the statement that “the perfect sometimes stands for the aorist even in A [i.e. Classical Antiquity]” Jann. p. 439 quotes (a) “Thuc. i. 21 οὐτε ὡς ποιηταὶ ὑμνήκασι...οὐτε ὡς λογογράφοι ξυνέθεσαν,” (b) “Demosth. 7, 29 τὴν χώραν ἣν οἱ Ἕλληνες καὶ βασιλεὺς ὁ Περσῶν ἐψηφίσαντο καὶ ὠμολογήκασιν ὑμετέραν εἶναι,” and, for post-classical Greek, (c) “Polyb. iii. 1. 2 ἐν τῇ τρίτῃ βύβλῳ” (Schweig. βίβλῳ) “δεδηλώκαμεν· ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ τὰς αἰτίας ἐν αὐτῇ ἐκείνῃ διεσαφήσαμεν.” But, in (a), the perf. expresses the permanent works of the ancient poets regarded as a present possession for their posterity, while the aorist refers to comparatively recent compilations, with perhaps a special allusion (Classen) to Herodotus. In

² [2748 a] As an instance of variation, note the abnormal perf. in Eurip. Iph. Aut. 595 ἐβλαστήκασι, but the normal pluperf. in Thuc. iii. 26 ἐβεβλαστήκει.

(δ),—beside the fact that the perf. of ψηφίζομαι in active sense (Steph.) appears to be extremely rare or non-existent—the aorist of ψ. naturally expresses past decrees, and the perf. ὡμολογήκασιν the resultant, permanent, and present agreement. In (c), there is no reason for saying that Polybius uses δεδηλώκαμεν for *ἐδηλώσαμεν*¹. It would be less misleading to say that, as the perf. act. of διασαφέω was very rare (in Steph. it is non-existent) and the aorist very frequent, he used the aorist, διεσαφήσαμεν, for the perfect, διασεσαφήκαμεν. But we may give both tenses their several value thus: “I have indicated above...and similarly I clearly shewed.” In English, we should often prefer to use the past thus, after the complete present; and Polybius, too, may have preferred it.

[2750] Again, Jann. p. 439 alleges from Mt. xiii. 46, and Hermas, “and so on in all post-Christian compositions,” a number of perfects, including πέπρακε, “he sold,” to illustrate “the full development of this usage” of the perfect for the aorist “during the latter part of G [the Graeco-Roman period].” But πιπράσκω never had an active aorist from the beginning of Greek literature—so that the use of its perfect as aorist cannot prove “development.”

[2751] Jann. p. 439 also refers, for further illustrations of this “development,” to “Hebr. 11, 17. Cp. John 4, 6. 6, 3. 6, 9.” In iv. 6, κεκοπιακώς means “being completely tired out.” In vi. 3, ἐκάθητο is not a perfect and has no manifest bearing on the point; the other reference is perhaps a misprint. In Heb. xi. 17 πίστει προσενήνοχεν Ἀβραάμ τὸν Ἰσαὰκ πειραζόμενος, καὶ τὸν μονογενῆ προσέφερεν, the contrast between the perfect and the imperfect is most instructive. The perf. means that Abraham, through God’s guidance, has offered up the typical sacrifice just as Moses (Heb. xi. 28) “has instituted (πεποίηκεν)” the typical Passover, and it is one of many perfects (see Westc. on Heb. vii. 6 δεδεκάτωκεν) shewing that the writer regarded Biblical events as present possessions for those who accept the Bible as God’s word. See 2758.

This might have been illustrated by Tob. x. 4 where Tobit's mother says to her husband, ἀπώλετο τὸ παιδίον διότι κεχρόνικεν "He must be dead because he has been [so] long [away]," i.e. "he is putting off his coming" (comp. ib. ix. 4 "my father counteth the days"). Here the perf. is clearly not used for an aorist but rather for a present. A close examination of Ex. xxxii. 1 shews that the perf. is there, too, used rather as a present than an aorist, somewhat like Jn vi. 24 ὅτε οὖν εἶδεν ὁ ὄχλος ὅτι Ἰησοῦς οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκεῖ (2466 (i)). Ex. xxxii. 1 means, in effect, "When the people saw [what was happening and said] Moses is disappointing us, or, *not keeping to his time*¹."

[2753] These details have been discussed in order to shew the futility of the attempt to judge Johannine by Byzantine Greek (in which the perfect is unquestionably sometimes used for the aorist). In criticizing the Fourth Gospel, credit must be given by the critic to the evangelist for a careful use of tense forms above, not below, the average of Greek authors. John may occasionally use an aorist where Englishmen would use a perfect or a pluperfect: but such uses will be found to be in accord with the rules of contemporary Greek, written or vernacular. And the notion that he "uses" one Greek tense "for" another Greek tense must be shunned as an *ignis fatuus*².

² [2753 a] These facts illustrate such passages as xii. 19 ἴδε, ὁ κόσμος ὀπίσω αὐτοῦ ἀπῆλθεν (R.V.) "Lo, the world is gone after him," where the rendering "is gone" may seem to demand ἀπελήλυθεν, so that, if R.V. is right, some might say "here we have a case where Jn uses one Gk tense for another." Certainly, it can hardly be maintained that the Pharisees mean "the whole of Jerusalem went after him [a few hours ago when he rode into the City]": but the following facts shew that Jn could not have said ἀπελήλυθεν because, besides being extremely rare, it had acquired a special meaning, which would have been unsuitable here.

[2753 b] Ἀπελήλυθα does not occur once, in any form of the indicative perfect, in the whole of Aristophanes and Demosthenes. The Oxf. Conc., amid more than three columns of different forms of ἀπέρχομαι, gives (as far as I have found) no form of ἀπελήλυθα except in 2 S. iii. 22—4 "He [i.e. David] had sent him [i.e. Abner] away and he had gone away (ἀπεληλύθει) in peace..., they told Joab saying, 'Abner...came to the king, and he hath sent him away (ἀπέσταλκεν) and he went away (ἀπῆλθεν) in peace.' Then Joab came to the king and said, 'What hast thou done...Why is it that thou hast sent him away (ἐξάπεσταλκας, sent him right away) and he is quite gone (ἀπελήλυθεν ἐν εἰρήνῃ)?" Here (besides repeating "in peace," which does not bear upon the point in question) the LXX clearly uses

On the "gnomic" aorist (2445 α)

[2754] Jelf § 402. 1 says that the aorist "is used to express an action which took place repeatedly in past time," and goes on to say that "the imperfect also has an iterative force." I should prefer to say that the so-called "gnomic" aorist tells the hearer simply and indefinitely that "so-and-so happened," leaving him to take the hint and to infer that it will happen again. This "gnomic," "empiric," or "suggestive" aorist is quite different from the aorist of instantaneousness.

[2755] Special contexts, however, may make it doubtful whether an aorist is "gnomic" or "instantaneous." Thus Jann. p. 436 places under empiric or gnomic aorists, and Jelf § 403. 2 under aorists that "express future events which must certainly happen," Demosth. 20, 9 which describes how, when a tyrant has attained power through the perf. ἀπελήλυθεν emphatically to represent the emphatic Hebrew (lit.) "going hath gone," i.e. "is quite gone," or "gone for good," "gone past recall." [For the same reason the LXX puts into Joab's mouth ἐξαπέσταλκας "sent him right away" as compared with the preceding ἀπέσταλκεν "sent him away"—a distinction not in the Hebrew.]

[2753 ε] As to N.T., though various forms of ἀπέρχομαι occupy more than two columns of Bruder, no form of ἀπελήλυθα occurs except in Jas i. 24 κατενόησεν γὰρ ἑαυτὸν καὶ ἀπελήλυθεν rendered by Mayor "just a glance and he is off," where the perf. expresses the completeness of the action as well as the suddenness of it—"he is gone for good." Compare the Demosthenic use of ἐξέρχομαι; it occurs frequently in the aorist indic. but only once (Preuss) in the perf. indic. (xxiii. 204) concerning the good old habit of punishing the guilty, which ἐξελήλυθεν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως, "has quite vanished out of the City."

[2753 δ] In xii. 19 ἀπῆλθεν, SS has "goeth," Nonnus ὁδεύει, ff "sequitur,"—indicating that the translators felt (as it was right to feel) that the aorist had more than the usual aorist meaning. Ἀπελήλυθεν being out of the question, Jn has used ἀπῆλθεν as the best Gk writers often use the aorist to include a meaning that would be expressed in English by "have." Similarly our English aorist ("I saw") includes meanings that would be expressed in French by a perfect ("I saw him yesterday," "je l'ai vu hier"). But we should not admit that such a use of "I saw" was "using one tense for another." It is our regular tense in such circumstances.

[2753 ε] In xii. 19 ἔδε, ὁ κόσμος, SS, DL, latt., Nonnus, and other authorities, add ὅλος. Chrys. does not. But he calls attention to the fact that κόσμος is here used in the sense of ὅχλος. Possibly this may explain the remarkable prevalence of the interpolated ὅλος. Ὀχλος may have been first placed in the margin, or above the line, as an explanation of κόσμος. Then it may have been introduced into the text so as to give ὁ κόσμος ὅχλος—in which ὅχλος was afterwards corrected to ὅλος. Comp. Oxf. Conc. on 2 Macc. vi. 3 (R) ὅχλους (A, as in Swete, ὅλους). This view is confirmed by the reading of ff, "ecce unus populus sequitur post illum," "the multitude as one man."

villainy, ἡ πρώτη πρόφασις καὶ μικρὸν πταῖσμα ἅπαντα ἀνεχαίτισε καὶ διέλυσεν. This should be compared with 24, 21 which says that, while a state is waging a distant war, ἀφανῆ τὰ κακὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς ἔστιν, ἐπειδὴν δὲ ὁμορος πόλεμος συμπλακῇ πάντα ἐποίησεν ἑκδήλα. Probably the aorist in both passages is not "gnomic." It does not however seem to indicate certainty so much as instantaneousness; and this is confirmed by many other instances of the aorist in apodosis. The essence of the "gnomic" aorist is that it expresses nothing but indefinite past action. When the protasis defines the circumstances of the action, e.g. by a clause with ὅταν, the aorist in the apodosis cannot be "gnomic"—if "gnomic" (2754) implies an indefinite "happened." Consequently after a ὅταν clause, an aorist, if it occurs where a present might have been expected, may be used to denote instantaneousness¹. It is therefore possible that the instantaneous aorist in xv. 6 ἐβλήθη, being preceded by the protasis ἐὰν μή τις, may not be Hebraic, though it is in accordance with Hebraic Greek. But, in any case, the purely gnomic aorist of the type of Il. ix. 320 κάτθαν' ὁμῶς ὃ τ' ἀεργὸς ἀνὴρ ὃ τε πολλὰ ἑοργῶς is certainly alien from the style of O.T. and N.T. and probably non-occurring in the latter.

On xii. 14 εἴρων...ὀνάριον (2461)

[2756] The Diatessaron omits the whole of the clause about Christ's finding the ass. SS omits "finding" ("Now Jesus was riding on [an ass]"). Origen (Lomm. i. 316 foll.) points out that the Johannine and the Synoptic accounts are, according to the letter, inconsistent: but both he and Chrys. mention the "finding" by Christ; and Chrys. tries to reconcile it with the Synoptic account².

Nonnus omits εὐρών, but has *ἰθύνων*¹. The very great difficulty implied in εὐρών and its frank acceptance by Origen—whose spiritual interpretation of the text raises him above all danger of harmonistically corrupting it—make it certain that εὐρών is genuine. Some may have omitted or corrupted εὐρών for the sake of reconciling the Johannine with the Synoptic account.

On xii. 16 ΕΜΝΗΣΘΗCAN ὅτι ταῦτα...καὶ ταῦτα ἐποίησαν (2469)

[2757] In xii. 16, R.V. renders κ. ἐποίησαν “and that they had done,” making ἐποίησαν depend on the ὅτι in the preceding words, ὅτι ταῦτα ἦν ἐπ’ αὐτῷ γεγραμμένα, and accordingly supplying “that” in English. But a second “that” is not inserted in the Greek, nor in SS, nor in the Latin versions. Nonnus also (ed. Passow) has Καὶ οἱ ταῦτα τέλεισαν at the beginning of a new sentence, pointing to a reading of ἐποίησαν as independent of ὅτι². If John had wished to say “remembered that...and that,” there seems no obvious reason why he should not have repeated ὅτι after καί, as he does elsewhere when he wishes to say “because (of)...and because,” and once “that... and that”³. Here, however, he may have wished to combine the fact that “these things had been written,” and the fact that the ἐπικαθίσαι. Chrys. omits the difficult Synoptic words “Ye shall find an ass,” but, even when they are omitted, how he can say that Christ “found” what the disciples brought to Him I cannot understand. No doubt, εὐρίσκω, besides meaning “find” in the sense of “discover,” means also “find” in the sense of “earn,” “procure”: but can Chrys. possibly be suggesting that the disciples first “found” the ass in the former sense, and Christ afterwards “found” it in the latter? Also, it is not clear whether αὐτὸν ἐπικαθίσαι means “He Himself (emph.) sat on [it],” or, “He (unemph.) sat on [it].” Previously Migne’s text has τὸ δὲ [ἐπὶ] ὄνον (Cramer, τὸ δὲ ὄνον) καθίσαι which Chrys. explains as a prediction that Christ “was destined to subject (ὑποχέριον ἔχειν) the unclean race of the Gentiles (τῶν ἐθνῶν).” Cramer’s text takes ὄνον as accus. gov. by καθίσαι.

² [2757 a] Nonnus has, τότε πάντες ἀνεμνήσαντο μαθηταὶ ὅτι σοφῇ τάδε πάντα πέλει κεχαραγμένα βίβλῳ. Καὶ οἱ πάντα τέλεισαν.... Burkitt has “they remembered that these things had been written of him, and these things did they (not, they did) to him.” Walton, without inserting “that,” removes ambiguity by the Latin subjunctive “quod ea essent scripta de eo et haec fecissent ei.” In xiii. 3 (see below) “knowing that...and that,” Syr. (Burkitt) has “was knowing that... and was knowing that.”

pilgrims or disciples "had done these things" in fulfilment of the prophecy, as one fact of coincidence "remembered" by the disciples. He also wishes (2396—7) to convey a suggestion of divine fulfilment of prophecy by the triple repetition of "these things" in one sentence. But it is not surprising that the words have been variously interpreted and perhaps corrupted¹.

On vi. 25 πότε ὦδε γέγονας (2478)

[2758] It is of course possible that Nonnus and Chrysostom may have found no difficulty in regarding γέγονας as aorist because, by their time, the 2nd perf. had come to be thus used. Is γέγονεν thus used in Origen (Lomm. i. 278) πυνθανομένοις ἡμῖν περὶ τοῦ

[2757 d] Chrys. on the other hand seems either to miss the meaning of ἔγνωσαν if he is paraphrasing, or else to misquote, if he is quoting, in the following (ad loc.) Τοῦτο δὲ οὐκ ᾔδεσαν, φησὶν, οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ὅτι ἦν ἐπ' αὐτῷ γεγραμμένον...ὅρα δὲ φιλοσοφίαν εὐαγγελιστοῦ, πῶς οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται τὴν προτέραν αὐτῶν ἀγνοίαν ἐκπομπεύειν. "Ὅτι μὲν οὖν γέγραπται ᾔδεσαν· ὅτι δὲ ἐπ' αὐτῷ γέγραπται, οὐκ ᾔδεσαν. He makes no mention of "remembering" and omits the whole of the clause about "doing." Thus the whole is condensed into a statement that the disciples "knew" Zechariah's prophecy but "did not know" that it applied to Christ—perfectly intelligible, but not what the evangelist meant.

[2757 e] These two criticisms—of Origen and Chrysostom—should be borne in mind as giving a clue to their different methods. Origen is a scholar; Chrysostom—at least as represented by his Johannine commentary in its extant form—is rather a preacher. Origen gives full value to each word, Chrysostom criticizes on the unscholarly basis of a belief—too common in our own days—that the evangelist "uses one word for another." Origen is often fanciful and minutely diffuse in allegorization—as in this instance where he gives copious details about the typical meaning of the ass and the foal—but he rarely tampers with, and does not very often even paraphrase, his text. Chrysostom is much less imaginative but also much less faithful to his author. As for the mysterious purpose of Providence latent under τὸ τῆς θνουν, all he says is καὶ τοῦτο μέγα ἦν, "this, too, was great"—he means by, "too," that it was "great" like the mystery in "Destroy this temple"—but he does not make up for this brevity by any compensating explanation of the verbal difficulties of the clause about "remembering," which he does not quote.

Πότε (Huet has gap in text, but πότε in marg. with Cod. Bodl.) γέγονε πρῶτον ἐν τῇ Καφαρναούμ ὁ Χριστός...? Unless other instances of Origen's aoristic use of γέγονεν are produced, this might best be rendered, "When is it on record that Christ was first at Capernaum?" In the context, Origen appeals to the exact words (λέξις) of the evangelists. Comp. Orig. on Ps. xxi. 4 where LXX has ἤτήσατο... ἔδωκας, and Origen says (Lomm. xii. 80) ἤτήσατο...καὶ εἰληφεν, "he [Hezekiah] asked...and is recorded to have received." According to this view, γέγονεν, like the perfects in the Epistle to the Hebrews (2751), represents, in Origen, a past event as a present record¹. And if it does so in Origen, perhaps it may do so in the formula frequently used by Matthew to introduce prophecy (2478 a) "It is on record that this came to pass in order that it might be fulfilled..."

On viii. 14 καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω...Ἡ ποῦ ὑπάγω (2490)

[2759] On viii. 14 οἶδα...καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω· ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ οἴδατε πόθεν ἔρχομαι ἢ ποῦ ὑπάγω. ὑμεῖς... Blass remarks (p. 324) "Chrys. and Nonnus omit ἢ...ὑπ." This is true of Chrys. who quotes thus, κἂν ἐγὼ μαρτυρῶ περὶ ἔμμαντοῦ, ἡ μαρτυρία μου ἀληθὴς ἐστίν. ὅτι οἶδα πόθεν ἔρχομαι καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω· ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ οἴδατε πόθεν ἔρχομαι,—and there stops. But can we feel sure that he does not stop because he has quoted enough to be the basis of his comment? After two short sentences, he quotes again καὶ ἐὰν ἐγὼ μαρτυρῶ περὶ ἔμμαντοῦ ἀληθὴς ἐστίν μαρτ. μου, ὅτι οἶδα πόθεν ἔρχομαι—and there stops. If we had this quotation alone, we might say that he omitted in his text the clause καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω. But he has quoted it above. Again, after one more sentence, he quotes, ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ οἴδατε—and there stops; but the reason obviously is that he does not want to repeat what he has said. Ammonius (Cramer) says, ὑμεῖς δὲ διὰ τοῦτο μὲν οὐκ οἴδατε, ἐπειδὴ οὐδὲν θέλετε τοῦ φαινομένου νοεῖν. οὐκ εἶπε δὲ, Θεὸς εἰμι, ἀλλὰ, Πόθεν ἔρχομαι καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω· ἐθελοκάκουν (sic) γὰρ καὶ προσεποιούντο μὴ εἰδέναι. This shews how commentators, even though they had the full W.H. text before them, might stop short at οὐκ οἶδατε (and perhaps at πόθεν ἔρχομαι) because those words sufficed to indicate the argument as to Christ's divine origin. The omission of ὑμεῖς δέ ... ὑπάγω by Origen, Cyril, and Augustine (Alf.) (through homoeotel.) indicates a lacuna in very early mss. Nonnus has Μοῦνος ἐγὼ νοέω πόθεν ἤλυθον ἢ πόθι βαίνω. Ὑμεῖς δ' οὐκ ἐδάητε πόθεν γενόμεν πόθεν ἔστην. John uses ἔστη with εἰς but not with ἐκ or ἀπό, and it is improbable that Nonnus would paraphrase πόθεν ἔρχομαι by two clauses—the second so meaningless and farfetched as πόθεν ἔστην. More probably Nonnus paraphrased ἢ ποῦ ὑπάγω as ποθιδεσθην, where ιδ might easily be corrupted into ιν. Then ποθιν would be amended into ποθεν. Πόθεν γενόμεν πόθι δ' ἔστην would correspond to πόθεν ἔρχομαι ἢ ποῦ ὑπάγω in John, and would also harmonize with the preceding πόθεν ἤλυθον ἢ πόθι βαίνω in Nonnus himself (see 2549 a)¹.

[2759 δ] In Genesis and Exodus, when A.V. "nor" is represented by Heb. "and," it corresponds to οὐδέ or μηδέ in Gen. xxi. 23, xlv. 6, Ex. xii. 9, xxiii. 26, but to καὶ in Gen. xlix. 10, Ex. xiii. 22 (R.V. "and"), xx. 10, xxiii. 32, xxxiv. 10. In Dan. xi. 24, LXX has οὐδέ but Theod. καὶ, and so Heb. Οὐ...οὐδέ is clear but not literal. Οὐ...καὶ is literal but not clear, e.g. "thou shalt not sow with wheat and barley" would be a literal transl. of Heb., in which it would mean "with wheat or barley,"—neither being allowed. But in English and Greek it might mean "thou shalt not sow with wheat and barley [together]"—one being allowed. In 2 K. xxiii. 10 "that no man might make his son (Heb.) and (R.V. and A.V. or) his daughter pass through the fire," Sym. has ἢ for "and." As his style somewhat resembles that of Luke, the instance will prepare us to find οὐ... ἢ in the Acts.

[2759 ε] From classical Gk (from which Blass p. 266 and the Thesaurus quote no instance) Winer-Moulton (p. 550) alleges only Thuc. i. 122, which I should punctuate thus, οὐκ ἴσμεν ὅπως τάδε τριῶν... ἀπήλλακται—ἀξυνεσίας ἢ μαλακίας ἢ ἀμελείας. Here the negation "we do not see the way to an acquittal" is equivalent to the affirmation "there must be a verdict of guilty." This necessitates an appositional clause:—"that is to say, guilty, not of all three, but of the first, or the second, or the third of the three." Both in rhythm and in grammatical construction, the passage is inappropriate as an illustration of N.T. usage.

[2759 d] Winer-Moulton (but not Blass) refers to Acts xxiv. 12 καὶ οὕτε ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ εὐρόν με πρὸς τινα διαλεγόμενον—ἢ ἐπίστασιν ποιούντα ὄχλου—οὕτε ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς. But if this is punctuated as above, it appears that ἢ introduces a parenthetical clause and that οὕτε prepares the way for οὕτε not for ἢ. And this gives the clue to other instances, e.g. Acts i. 7 οὐχ ὑμῶν ἐστὶν γινῶναι χρόνους ἢ καιροὺς "It is not for you to know the times—or [rather I should say] appointed seasons," preparing the way for the words, "which the Father placed under his own authority," Acts xvii. 29 "we ought not to suppose that the divine [being] is like gold—or [may be] silver or stone—the sculpturing of art and of human device." So, too, Rom. iv. 13 "For not through Torah [was] the promise to Abraham—or [as it might also be said] to his seed," ix. 11 "not yet having been born nor even having done anything—good or bad (μηδὲ πραξάντων τι—ἀγαθὸν ἢ φαῦλον)."

[2759 e] A more interesting instance is Acts xi. 8 μηδαμῶς, κύριε, ὅτι κοινὸν ἢ ἀκάθαρτον οὐδέποτε εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸ στόμα μου, in a Petrine speech, corresponding to Acts x. 14 μηδαμῶς, κύριε, ὅτι οὐδέποτε ἔφαγον πᾶν κοινὸν καὶ ἀκάθαρτον. In Acts x. 14, several authorities have altered καὶ to ἢ to make the text correspond to Peter's report of his own words; but it has been pointed out (1913) that Luke in writing the Petrine speech has allowed himself more freedom than in the Petrine narrative of the facts. The narrative retains the old Hebraic idiom οὐδέποτε...πᾶν: and the καὶ ἀκάθαρτον (which, coming at the end of the sentence, cannot be parenthetical) is also to be explained as Hebraic. But when writing a speech for Peter—a speech that, without shorthand writers, or a miracle, or both, cannot possibly be regarded as giving the Apostle's exact words—Luke allows himself to drop some Hebraisms; and, like Symmachus above (2759 b), he substitutes ἢ for the Hebraic καὶ.

[2759 f] We pass to 1 Cor. xi. 27 ὃς ἂν ἐσθίῃ τὸν ἄρτον ἢ πίνῃ τὸ ποτήριον τοῦ κυρίου ἀναξίως, ἔνοχος ἔσται τοῦ σώματος καὶ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ κυρίου. This may be illustrated by Lev. xx. 9 ὃς ἂν κακῶς εἴπῃ τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ ἢ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ θανάτῳ θανατούσθω πατέρα αὐτοῦ ἢ μητέρα αὐτοῦ κακῶς εἴπεν, ἔνοχος ἔσται. Here the Heb. has "and" twice, but the obvious inconvenience of allowing a man to suppose that he may ill-treat "his father or his mother," because the Law merely forbade him to ill-treat "his father and his mother" has led the LXX here and in Ex. xxi. 15, 17, Deut. xxvii. 16, Prov. xx. 20 (and comp. Mk vii. 10, Mt. xv. 4) to render the Heb. "and" by the Gk "or." In 1 Cor. xi. 22—9, the whole passage assumes the "eating and drinking" (ib. 22 ἐσθιὼν καὶ πίνων, 26 ὅσκις γὰρ ἐὰν ἐσθίητε...καὶ...πίνητε, 28 ἐσθιέτω καὶ...πινέτω, 29 ὁ γὰρ ἐσθίων καὶ πίνων) of the Lord's Supper, and teaches the preparation for it. But when the Apostle comes to warn the Corinthians about the danger of eating and drinking irreverentially, he naturally substitutes "or" for "and" in order to shew that either act was liable to penalty. There is no question of οὐ—ἢ here, nor is the ἀ in ἀναξίως regarded as a negative. The construction would have been the same if the adverb had been ὑπερηφανῶς.

[2759 g] In explaining viii. 14, we must have regard to the fact that (1) it would have made good sense to repeat οὐ...καὶ instead of introducing οὐ...ἢ. (2) Also (2549 a) ἢ is rare in Jn as compared with the Synoptists. (3) It has been just shewn that οὐ...καὶ and οὐ...ἢ are interchanged by various writers and scribes in a manner that suggests a thoughtful distinction between the two. (4) ἢ is used by Jn (2549 a) where οὐδέ would differentiate too strongly. These facts confirm the view taken in 2549 a that "or" means "or [which is the same thing]."

On xiv. 7 ἀπ' ἄρτι γινώσχετε αὐτόν (2491)

[2760] The context (W.H.) εἰ ἐγνώκειτέ με, καὶ τὸν πατέρα μου ἂν ᾔδειτε· ἀπ' ἄρτι γινώσχετε αὐτόν καὶ ἑώρακατε (al. + αὐτόν) is rendered by SS "If me ye have not known, my Father also will ye know? And from now ye know him and have seen him." Nonnus has Εἰ δὲ θεωρήτῃ με σοφῶ γινώσχετε μύθῳ, Ἐξ ἐμέθεν γνώσεσθε καὶ ὑψιμέδοντα τοῦτ' α· Ἄρτι δέ μιν φράσασθε καὶ ὑψιμέδοντα μαθόντες. The last line shews that he took γινώσχετε to be imperative, "If ye recognise me...ye shall from me recognise the Father also. [Nay] but at once understand Him learning the Father also [as well as myself]." This makes good sense, meaning in effect, "Do I say 'Ye would have known?'? Nay, begin to know Him at once [through me], and [then] ye [will] have seen [Him]." The sequence "Do this, and straightway that will have followed" is like Lk. xi. 41 "Give for alms...and behold all things are clean." It should be added that Irenæus iii. 13. 2—quoted above (2491 a)—places these words out of their order as part of Christ's reply to Philip.

[2761] Epiphanius (i. 919) wedges between two quotations of "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" a statement about Christ as ὁ λέγων ὅτι ὁ γινώσκων ἐμὲ γινώσκει τὸν πατέρα. The most probable explanation of this is that he is borrowing unintelligently (as he often does) from Hippolytus (adv. Noet. 7), who, after quoting "He that hath seen...the Father," adds, "That is to say, If thou hast seen me thou mayest know the Father through me." Epiphanius seems to have mistaken a version of this (conforming "seen" to "know") for an actual saying of Christ. Hippolytus—after saying that the Father is known through the "image" like Him—continues "But if thou didst not know the image, which is the Son, how wouldest (θέλεις) thou see the Father?" It will not escape the reader that this is like SS "If me ye have not known, my Father also will ye know?" Corruption of the text may have done something to produce these variations, but paraphrase probably contributed more.

[2762] Is Nonnus right in taking xiv. 7 γινώσχετε imperatively? The answer depends partly on the general Greek use, and the particular Johannine use, of γινώσχετε, partly on the place assigned by John to "knowing" in his theory of revelation and redemption. Nonnus renders it by the subjunctive ἐσαθρήσητε in xiv. 17, where the subjunctive is difficult to explain as an imperative but perhaps more difficult as an indicative¹. In xiii. 12 where W.H. punctuate γινώσκετε τί πεποίηκα ὑμῖν; Nonnus has εἶπεν ἐοῖς ἐτάροις γινώσκετε τοῦτο καὶ αὐτοὶ punctuated by Passow interrogatively but probably imperative, "Understand this ye, too, [my disciples]," implying a precept to understand it even as, or in the sense in which, their Master understands it². In xv. 18 γινώσκετε ὅτι ἐμέ...μεμίσηκεν, Nonnus has Τοῦτο χαμαιγενέων γινώσκετε μάρτυρες ἔργων. This is ambiguous, but μάρτυρες suits best with an imperative rendering, "I call on you to bear witness and to recognise that they persecuted me": and it is so taken by the Latin versions and SS. Nonnus, then, in two out of four instances certainly renders γινώσκετε by an imperative or subjunctive; in two, where he retains γινώσκετε, he probably intends the imperative.

[2763] Γινώσκετε occurs only twice in Aristophanes, once interrogative, once doubtful³. In Demosthenes it occurs four times indicatively (but in such a context as to present no ambiguity) and always in connexion with the "recognition" of character, good or bad; once imperatively, at the end of a speech, bidding the jurors recognise or decide that which is just⁴. In Epictetus, there is

[2762 b] In xiv. 17, Chrys., as printed by Migne and Cramer, has μένει, but a great part of the comment is consistent with the hypothesis that he wrote μενέει. Chrys. also twice repeats μόνοι, as Nonnus does, εἶπεν ὅτι Πρὸς ὑμᾶς μόνους ἔρχεται, and again, "Lest they should say, How then saidst thou to the Jews, From henceforth ye shall not see me?—He destroys the [apparent] contradiction by saying To you alone (λῦει τὴν ἀντίθεσιν εἰπών, Πρὸς ὑμᾶς μόνους)."

² [2762 c] Chrys. and Origen give no guidance on this point. Nor do the Latin vss. SS has the interrogative.

³ Thesm. 606 interrog., Fragm. 203 (meaning doubtful).

⁴ Demosth. (Preuss) Indic. xviii. 10, 276, xxiv. 59, xxxix. 2. Imper. xxxiii. 38 ὑμεῖς οὖν, κατὰ τοὺς νόμους, γινώσκετε τὰ δίκαια.

abundant use of the aorist, and of γνώθι σαυτόν, but Schenkl's Index under "γινώσκω c. accus." gives no instance of any form of the present. On the other hand, Plato, while emphasizing, as the great precept of life, γνώθι σεαυτόν, insists repeatedly on τὸ ἑαυτὸν γινώσκειν as being the fulfilment of this precept, and connects the phrases with a distinction between material and spiritual knowledge of oneself¹. The Fourth Gospel teaches that "eternal life" consists (xvii. 3) in the "knowledge (γινώσκωσιν)" of the true God and of Jesus Christ. It is hardly possible that the evangelist was ignorant that he thus came into collision with the doctrine taught by the successors of Plato and popularised by his own contemporary, Epictetus, and it is almost certain that the collision was deliberate. It may be asked why the evangelist, if he wished to record a precept of Christ about "knowing," did not use the unambiguous aorist, but it has been pointed out (1626)

[2763 b] Γινώσκω, in connexion with "knowing" other persons than oneself, and as distinct from "seeing" these persons, is discussed at great length by Plato, beginning with ἐπιγινώσκω thus, Theat. 193, Σωκράτης ἐπιγινώσκει Θεόδωρον καὶ Θεαίτητον, ὁρᾷ δὲ μηδέτερον, μηδὲ ἄλλη αἰσθησις αὐτῷ πάρεστι περὶ αὐτῶν. After this first hypothesis, a second, and its consequence, are stated thus, Δεύτερον τοίνυν, ὅτι τὸν μὲν γινώσκων ὑμῶν, τὸν δὲ μὴ γινώσκων, αἰσθανόμενος δὲ μηδέτερον, οὐκ ἂν ποτε αὐτὸς οἴηθῃ ὅτι οἶδα εἶναι ὃν μὴ οἶδα. In a third hypothesis this collocation of οἶδα and γινώσκω is repeated; and the two verbs are manifestly intended to be distinguished. Applied to facts of science, γινώσκω means "recognise" or "know intelligently" in Ion 537 E, "I recognise that these fingers are five: you recognise the same facts...we both recognise them by arithmetic."

that John expressly distinguishes the aorist from the present as though the latter represented a higher stage than the former; and he may also have been influenced by the use of the aorist in Jeremiah (xxxi. 34) quoted in the Epistle to the Hebrews (viii. 11) "They shall no more teach...saying Know (γνώθι) the Lord." The Fourth Gospel is full of subtle distinctions between γινώσκω and οἶδα that could not have originated from Aramaic utterance, if exactly translated¹, but may well have originated from Greek paraphrase. A priori it is quite reasonable to suppose that John represented Christ as holding up to His disciples "the Father" and not "yourselves" as the object of the highest knowledge, and that the precept to "know" was expressed so as to exclude the Delphic "know once for all," γνώθι, and to imply "knowing by degrees" or "growing in recognition and sympathy," γινώσκειτε. In the absence of help from Origen and Clement of Alexandria the conclusion must be left uncertain, but it is not improbable that Nonnus is right in his imperative rendering of this ambiguous form.

[2764] Of course, the fact that John's expression of the doctrine of "knowing" God is in part Greek and Platonic, is not inconsistent with the fact that the thought is Jewish, or Hebrew, and Biblical. In John, "knowing" and "seeing" go together, and therefore the "knowing" may be illustrated by v. 38 οὐτε εἶδος αὐτοῦ ἑώρακατε, an amazing phrase—"ye have neither seen his form (εἶδος)"—considering that "his" means the Father's! Chrysostom's explanation is, in effect, "Ye have not seen his form, because there was no form to see"! God, he urges, is "above all outward fashion." Nor will he accept the notion of a spiritual form: "He means, not that God has a form but not a visible one (οὐ θεατὸν δέ), but that none of these things concerns God (ἀλλ' ὅτι οὐδὲν τούτων περὶ θεόν)." At the same time he dismisses the statements that Moses heard the voice of God and that Isaiah saw Him, and represents Christ as "goading the Jews into philosophic dogma (εἰς φιλόσοφον αὐτοὺς ἐνάγει δόγμα)."

[2765] But the fact appears to be that "form" here alludes to the ancient Jewish tradition about Penueh, the Face of God, twice called by the LXX the Form (εἶδος) of God, a phrase unique in the whole of the Bible¹. It was there that Jacob said "I have seen God face to face"; and from this fact Philo, though erroneously, explains the name of "Israel," there given to Jacob, as Seeing God. Those who took this view would discern in the words addressed to Nathanael, i. 47 "Behold an Israelite indeed," the meaning, "Behold one that sees God," and would find an appropriateness between this and the following words, (i. 50) "Thou shalt see greater things than these..." followed by an allusion to the ladder of heaven and the angels ascending and descending over the head of Jacob.

[2766] Again it was said of Moses that (Ex. xxxiii. 11) "the Lord spoke unto Moses face to face." Combining this with Jacob's "seeing the Lord face to face," we can understand how our Lord, in a spiritual sense, not casting away the traditions of His nation, but interpreting them, while condemning the Scribes and Pharisees for degenerating from the true Israel, might say something that might be paraphrased for Greeks thus "Ye are not genuine sons of Israel, who 'saw the form of God'; ye are not genuine disciples of Moses, who 'heard the voice of God'; ye have neither heard his voice at any time nor seen his form."

On xi. 47 τί ποιοῦμεν; (2493)

[2766 (i)] As regards the distinction between τί ποιοῦμεν; and τί ποιήσωμεν; it may be illustrated from Epictetus, who—besides frequently using τί ποιήσω; parall. to deliberat. subjunct. (i. 27. 7, iv. 10. 1 etc.) so that it is proved to be subjunctive, and (i. 22. 17) τί οὖν ποιήσωμεν;—has the indicative in a passage where he is maintaining that "man is born for faithfulness (πρὸς πίστιν γέγονεν)." An intruder (ὁ δέ)³, notorious for adultery, ironically replies (ii. 4. 2) ἀλλ' ἄν..., ἀφέντες τοῦτο τὸ πιστὸν πρὸς ὃ πεφύκαμεν, ἐπιβουλεύωμεν τῇ γυναικὶ τοῦ γείτονος, τί ποιοῦμεν; Presumably the man means "What are we doing, in effect [except disproving this fine theory about natural faithfulness, since our conduct shews that men are naturally unfaithful]?” The sequel is, “Why, what else [are we doing] (τί γὰρ ἄλλο) except destroying and slaying?” “Whom?” “The [ideal] man of faith [within us].” In ii. 3. 5 ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ βίου τί ποιῶ; νῦν μὲν λέγω ἀγαθόν, νῦν δὲ κακόν, the meaning is “What am I in the habit of doing?” But the context suggests “What [good] am I doing?”—as in i. 25. 29 “revile a stone—and what [good] will you do [by it] (καὶ τί ποιήσεις)¹?”

² [2766 a] See 1716 h for another allusive phrase (in connexion with theophanies) in the use of ἐμφανίζω occurring in xiv. 21—22, and in one passage of the Pentateuch Ex. xxxiii. 13—18 where Moses says to God ἐφάνισόν μοι σεαυτὸν.

On x. 29 οὐδεὶς δύνатаί ἀρπάζειν (2496 δ)

[2767] In x. 28—9 οὐχ ἀρπάσει τις...οὐδεὶς δύνатаί ἀρπάζειν the difference intended between ἀρπάσει and δύνатаί ἀρπάζειν (if the latter is correct) must depend to some extent upon the whole context (2740—4), and especially on the object of ἀρπάζειν, which is implied in W.H.’s text, but inserted by Chrys. and Latin versions².

¹ [2766 (i) a] Another Epictetian use of τίς, illustrative of a v.r. in Jn, is τί δοκεῖτε; τί δοκεῖς; introducing an absurd hypothesis, e.g. i. 26. 5 ἐπεὶ τί δοκεῖς; ὅτι θέλων περιπίπτω κακῷ;...μὴ γένοιτο, iv. 8. 26 τί δοκεῖτε;...μὴ γένοιτο, ii. 2. 15 ἐπεὶ τί δοκεῖς; ὅτι...θέλων Σωκράτης...ἂν ἔλεγεν... This may explain the reading of D (2184) τί δοκεῖτε ὅτι...in Jn xi. 56 τί δοκεῖ ὑμῖν; ὅτι οὐ μὴ ἔλθῃ... A scribe may have thought that the context introduced an absurd hypothesis and that τί δοκεῖτε ὅτι was the correct phrase for this. D, however, by retaining οὐ μὴ, gives the meaning “What think ye? [Anything so absurd as] that he will not come to the feast?”—which is probably the opposite of what is intended. τί δοκεῖ ὑμῖν, if the text is correct, seems to mean “what is your serious opinion?” and so Nonnus, Ὑμῖν φραζομένοισι τί φαίνεται; The original may have been τί δοκεῖτε; οὐ μὴ ἔλθῃ... If δοκεῖτε, spelt δοκεῖται, came to be regarded as two words, it might lead to δοκεῖ ὅτι and to the insertion of ὕμιν before or after δοκεῖ (as Origen variously places it).

[2766 (i) b] The questions put by the Jews to the Baptist i. 19—21 σὺ τίς εἶ;... [σὺ] Ἠλείας εἶ; may be illustrated by Epict. iii. 1. 22—3 σὺ οὖν τίς εἶ...λέγε αὐτῷ, ἂν σοι δόξῃ, Σὺ δὲ τίς εἶ..., μὴ δὴ λέγε τῷ ἑξαίρετῳ, Σὺ οὖν τίς εἶ, where the Athenians are supposed to put this question rudely to Socrates—whom they dislike for attempting to reform them—and to be rebuked for it. So, too, there is rude abruptness in iii. 22. 91 σὺ εἶ ὁ Διογένης, ὁ μὴ οἰόμενος εἶναι θεός; and it elicits a rebuke. It illustrates the abruptness of Pilate’s first question to Christ, xviii. 33 σὺ εἶ ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων;

² [2767 a] Chrys. quotes οὐδεὶς δύνатаί ἀρπάζειν αὐτὰ ἐκ τῆς χ. τ. πατρός μου, having previously read ὁ πατήρ δς (for ὅς) ἔδωκέ μοι. He means by αὐτά the sheep of the flock (called αὐτά in the preceding verse). But a, e, f having read ὅς (“pater quod dedit mihi”) supply the neut. sing. αὐτό (“nemo potest rapere illud”). Previously, Chrys. has οὐδεὶς δύνатаί ταῦτα ἀρπάσαι (for οὐχ ἀρπάσει τις αὐτά) ἐκ τῆς χειρός μου, paraphrasing “no one will snatch” as “no one can possibly Chrys. confuses together the clauses about "snatching" from the Son and "snatching" from the Father; and Nonnus blends them into one ("Nor could anyone snatch my flock that knows [me] from our hand¹"). Origen in two passages omits δύναται and has οὐδεὶς ἀρπάξει ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς τοῦ πατρὸς, or ἐκ τῶν χειρῶν αὐτοῦ, and in one of these, while repeating οὐδεὶς ἀρπάξει, he explains it as meaning οὐδεὶς δύναται ἡμᾶς λαβεῖν². SS also omits δύναται ("There is no one that doth snatch away from the hand of the Father"). In the LXX, the present infinitive, after δύναται, occurs rarely as compared with the aorist, and, when it does occur, mostly implies continuance³. But continuance is out of the question in x. 29. In some cases, LXX adds δύναται to express the Hebrew interrogative, e.g. "Shall I bear?" (i.e. "Shall I be able to bear?") "Did he deliver?" (i.e. "Was he able to deliver?"). So, where Matthew has (vii. 4) "How wilt thou say (πῶς ἐρεῖς) to thy brother?" Luke has (vi. 42) "How canst thou say (πῶς δύνασαι λέγειν)?" Probably x. 29 (W.H.) is corrupt, and we should read ἀρπάξει for δύναται ἀρπάξιν.

On xii. 28 ΠΑΤΕΡ, ΔΟΞΑΣΘΩΝ ΟΥ ΤΟ ὄΝΟΜΑ (2512c)

[2768] After δόξασον, B has an abbreviated μογ (μ) at the end of a line, and τοονομα at the beginning of the next: L has κογ at snatch"; but a little later on, he writes as if the phrase οὐδεὶς ἀρπάξει were applied to the Father (τί οὖν; εἰ διὰ τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ πατρὸς "οὐδεὶς ἀρπάξει"...) and also applied to the Son (εἰπὼν ὅτι Οὐδεὶς ἀρπάξει αὐτὰ—no longer ταῦτα—ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς μου), and then argues as though he had read ἀρπάξιν in connexion with the Father: εἰ γὰρ μὴ τοῦτο, ἀκόλουθον ἦν εἰπεῖν ὅτι "Ὁ πατὴρ δὲ ἔδωκέ μοι μείζων πάντων ἐστὶ καὶ οὐδεὶς δύναται ἀρπάξιν αὐτὰ ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς μου." Ἀλλ' οὐκ εἶπεν οὕτως ἀλλ' "ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς τοῦ πατρὸς μου."

² [2767 c] Lomm. ii. 144 and xv. 318 (comm. Jerem.). This is important as indicating that, in Origen's view, if δύναται had been inserted, the aorist infin., not the pres., should have followed.

the end of a line and ΤΟΝΥΝ i.e. τὸν υἱόν at the beginning of the next : X has COY at the end of a line, and ΤΟΟΝΟΜΑ at the beginning of the next. D has ΟΝΟΜΑ at the end of a line, and adds ἐν τῇ δοξῇ ἣ εἰχον παρα σοι προ του τον κοσμον γενεσθαι (see xvii. 5). Nonnus follows L, having Υἱα τεδὸν κύδαινε, and this is the reading of a ms. in the Ferrar group (πάτερ ἄγιε δόξασόν σου τὸν υἱόν). Resch ad loc. quotes Augustine, "clarifica me ea claritate...mundus fieret" and Jerome "glorifica me gloria...mundus esset," as being uttered immediately before the Voice from heaven ; and Aphraates, "Jesus said—I have glorified it and will glorify it."

[2769] SS, which agrees with W.H. up to "glorify thy name," proceeds "And in the same hour was heard" (instead of "there came therefore"), D has καὶ ἐγένετο for ἦλθεν οὖν and Nonnus has πέλε. The facts indicate that there was early confusion as to the words that followed δόξασον. The causes may have been, in part, a desire to paraphrase for Greeks the meaning of "Name," and to shew that "glorify thy Name" meant in effect "glorify thy Son"; in part, from an early confusion caused by Greek corruption of the letters ΤΟΝΥΝ and ΤΟΟΝΟΜΑ. If, in some early MSS., ΤΟΟΝΟΜΑ was written ΤΟΥΝΟΜΑ—by crasis, as in Mt. xxvii. 57—ΤΟΥΝ, at the end of a line, might easily be read as ΤΟΥΝ, "the Son."

[2770] Origen, commenting on Christ's recognition of the ordinance of all things by the Father in accordance with the set "hour," says, "Dicit in aliquo loco ad matrem suam Nondum venit hora mea. Item, Nunc anima mea...propter hoc veni in hanc horam. Item, *Pater, venit hora, clarifica Filium tuum ut et Filius tuus clarificet te*¹." If the second "item" were omitted, this would place the words "Glorify thy Son" immediately after that utterance of Christ which preceded the Voice from heaven, in such a way as to lead readers to take the two separate sayings as a single continuous one. This indicates another way in which to explain the extraordinary misquotation of Augustine and Jerome. They may have been influenced by some collection of Christ's sayings about the "hour." Some confusion arising from the repetition of ὥρα may perhaps account for the phrase in SS, "and in the same hour."

On ἕάν with indicative (2515 (i))

[2771] Deissmann (p. 201) calls attention to the fact that Berl.

¹ On Mt. xxvi. 1 (Lomm. iv. 388).

Pap. 48. 13 (which he dates 2nd—3rd cent. A.D.) has ἐάν with the indic. and also thrice with the subjunct. The sentence with the indic. runs thus, ἐάν δέ σοι δόξῃ καὶ περὶ τῶν ἐριδίων, ἐάν δὲ μὴ ἐνῇν ἐρ[ί]δια, [χ]άριν ποίσας π[έ]μψεις μοι...i.e. "If you would be pleased [to do this] also in the matter of the fleeces [I should be obliged], but, if it should turn out that the fleeces were not practicable, kindly send...." The first subjunctive is ἐάν οὖν δοκῇ σοι, the third is ἐάν ἀναβῆς τῇ ἐορτῇ (2715*d*). Deissmann gives another instance of ἐάν with ῆν from Berl. Pap. 300. 5 (148 A.D.) ἀπαιτήσαντα τοὺς μισθωτὰς, καὶ δέον ῆν μισθώσαντα ἢ αὐτουργήσαντα. Here, as above, the meaning is "and, if it should turn out to have been needful." The MS. is illiterate. But there seems a fair probability that the writer really meant, not καὶν ῆ "even if it be," but καὶν ῆν, which he intended to be taken as above.

On iota subscript (2515 (i) b)

[2772] Phrynichus says ῆς ἐν ἀγορᾷ σόλοικον. λέγε οὖν ῆσθα. He then adds—according to the printed text—"but the [person] saying ἐάν ῆς ἐν ἀγορᾷ would use [ῆς] more correctly," ὀρθότερον δὲ χρῶτο ἂν ὁ λέγων, ἐάν ῆς ἐν ἀγορᾷ. But how can what is absolutely correct, ἐάν ῆς, be described as "more correct"—and, more amazing still, "more correct" than what is described as σόλοικον? Dr Rutherford (p. 240) calls attention to this language as indicating "uncertainty," which he justly calls "surprising." Coming from Phrynichus, not a lenient critic, it is incredible. But Lobeck adds a note that suggests a corruption in Phrynichus's text, "Ex Ed. Pr. et Phavor. restitui ἄν, quod Nunnesius praetermisit. Vulgo ὀρθώτερον."

[2773] Omitting ἄν, we obtain χρωτοο. Now Phrynichus, in his Ecloga, when he tells his readers what to say, uses λέγε, ἐρεῖς, most frequently, and χρῆ λέγειν rarely, but never χρῶτο with or without ἄν. On the other hand he has (Lobeck p. 37) τῷ ἄπειμι χρῶ, and (p. 175) τὸ ῥάπισμα οὐκ ἐν χρήσει· χρῶ οὖν τῷ κρείττονι. A priori, then, χρῶ τῷ is more likely here than χρῶτο. And, if we accept χρῶ, we reject ἄν, with "Nunnesius."

[2774] To this it may be objected that the text has χρωτο not χρωτω. But the text (according to Lobeck "vulgo") also has ὀρθώτερον for ὀρθότερον, indicating that the scribe, like the farmer Gemellus (2691), confounded ο and ω, an extremely frequent error. And Jann. Gk Gr. par. 20^c alleges "τὸ for τῷ H. Röhl 503 twice," and also quotes "Strabo 14, 41 πολλοὶ χωρὶς τοῦ ἰ γράφουσι τὰς δοτικὰς καὶ (add ὑποτακτικὰς) ἐκβάλλουσι δὲ τὸ ἔθος φυσικὴν αἰτίαν οὐκ ἔχον," i.e. "Many write the datives and [add subjunctives] without the iota" [i.e. the iota commonly called subscript] "and reject the custom, having [indeed] no reason in nature."

[2775] These facts suggest that the real question in Phrynichus's mind is not of a grammatical nature—whether ἐὰν ᾗς is "more correct" grammatically than the "soloecism" ᾗς. It is a question of orthography—whether ἢς, when subjunctive, should be written with, or without, the iota subscript. Strabo, as alleged above, seems to have disliked the use of the iota subscript, and indeed the papyri indicate that it was greatly abused¹. But the use of the iota in ᾗς subjunctive was certainly convenient, and Phrynichus seems to have come to the conclusion that it was also "more correct²." According to this view, the text of Phrynichus must be read, ὀρθότερον δὲ χρῶν τῷ ἰ λέγων, Ἐὰν ᾗς ἐν ἀγορᾷ, "But when you mean, 'If you be in the market-place,' use the iota, [thus writing] more correctly [than those who do not use it]."

On the Possessive Genitive (2558—69)

[2776] The vernacular possessive genitive³—called hereafter, for brevity, the vernacular possessive, or vernacular genitive—is not only unemphatic, but, so to speak, under-emphasized, in order to emphasize the context. It occurs in Plato's Phaedo (117 B) where, in answer to the question of Socrates "what must one do [after taking the hem-

² [2775 b] It has been suggested to me that ὀρθότερον—instead of implying that two views of ᾗς are more or less right—may be a "litotes," or under-statement, like Kemble's reproof to George IV., "It would better become your Royal Highness's mouth to say 'oblige' (instead of obleege)," meaning that "obleege" was not "becoming" at all. But ὀρθότερον λέγειν is used by Plato 165 B, 362 A, Aristot. Phys. Ausc. iv. 13. 8, of "the more correct" of two assertions, and Phrynichus himself says (Lobeck p. 235) Διόσκουροι, ὀρθότερον Διόσκοροι. It is true that he adds γελάσεις οὖν τοὺς σὺν τῷ υ λέγοντας. But he must have known that both were right, since Plato and Thucydides (Lobeck) use the form at which he says his readers may laugh as not being the usual Attic one.

lock]?" the jailer replies "you must just drink it off and walk about, till you feel a weight in your legs (ἔως ἂν σου βάρος ἐν τοῖς σκέλεσι γένηται): also Symp. 215 E where it is parallel to the unemphatic dativus commodi μοι, "When I am in the act of listening to Socrates my heart leaps up with more than corybantic bounds (πολύ μοι μᾶλλον ἢ τῶν κορυβαντιῶντων ἢ τε καρδιά πηδᾷ)...but listening to Pericles...I used to feel nothing like this, and [though my outer man was moved] my soul was not [thus] instantaneously whirled away (οὐδὲ τεθορύβητό μου ἡ ψυχὴ)...." It might fairly be called a genitivus commodi or incommodi. So, the innkeeper in Aristophanes uses σου and μου as genitivus incommodi in Ran. 572—3 "How dearly I should love to smash your grinders with a stone (ὡς ἡδέως ἂν σου λίθῳ τοὺς γομφίους κόπτοιμ' ἂν) for gobbling up my property (οἷς μου κατέφαγες τὰ φορτία)," ib. 1198—1200 οὐ κατ' ἔπος γέ σου κνίσω τὸ ῥῆμ' ἕκαστον, ἀλλὰ...ἀπὸ ληκυθίου σου τοὺς προλόγους διαφθερῶ¹.

[2777] The same use of an unemphatic pronoun, in order to throw the emphasis on other words in the context, is noticeable in the position of σε in adjurations, Soph. Phil. 468 πρὸς νύν σε πατρός...ἱκνοῦμαι, Oed. C. 1333 πρὸς νύν σε κρηνῶν...αἰτῶ. The speaker merely touches the personality and passes from it to dwell on some circumstance of the person. It is particularly convenient where more than one noun is connected with the pronoun, as in the sarcastic Athenian utterance to the poor trustful Melians (Thuc. v. 105) "But as for your fanciful way of looking to Lacedaemonians, which makes you trust that their fear of disgrace will force them to help you—while congratulating your innocence we do not envy [your] insanity (μακαρίσαντες ὑμῶν τὸ ἀπειρόκακον οὐ ζηλοῦμεν τὸ ἄφρον)."

[2778] The vernacular possessive is a frequent characteristic of Epictetus. The following shews that μου and σου for example are used, not to mean "belonging to me, or to you," but to emphasize the context, while merely indicating the personality:—i. 4. 13 Σὺ οὖν ἐνταῦθά μοι δεῖξόν σου τὴν προκοπὴν. καθάπερ, εἰ ἀθλητῇ διελεγόμεν, Δεῖξόν μοι τοὺς ὤμους· εἶτα ἔλεγεν ἐκείνος, Ἴδε μου τοὺς ἀλτήρας. The preceding context is about "progress," προκοπή. The student has boasted of his progress—"in Chrysippus." So many treatises! He can now read Chrysippus by himself! Epictetus replies, I don't want progress "in Chrysippus" but progress in right thought and right action. "Do you, then, in these points shew me your progress." In what follows (δείξόν μοι τοὺς ὥμους) he could not say δείξόν μοί σου τ. ὥ. because that would have emphasized the two pronouns by juxtaposition (2564, 2783). So he omits σου. But here the unemphatic μοι helps to throw emphasis on τοὺς ὥμους. Similarly in the pseudo-athlete's answer the emphasis is thrown forward from the unemphatic "my" to the following noun, "Look at my dumb-bells." The poor creature has no acts on view—only preparations for acting. Similarly in i. 18. 16 ἀπώλεσά μου τὸ ἰμάτιον is parallel to ἀλγῶ τὴν κεφαλὴν where no pronoun is inserted¹.

[2779] The ordinary possessive genitive after the noun, in Epictetus, is more emphatic, or, at all events, not unemphatic. It may be illustrated by i. 1. 23 "'I will bind you.' 'Man! what do you mean? Me? My leg you will bind (τὸ σκέλος μου δήσεις),"—that is, "the leg that belongs to me, a possession of mine, not my very self." In the next sentence, he does not say τὴν προαίρεσίν μου, for that would be an admission that the "will," like the "leg," was a mere possession; so he continues, τὴν προαίρεσιν δὲ οὐδ' ὁ Ζεὺς νικῆσαι δύναται, "But the will not even Zeus can conquer²." "The leg my possession" resembles "the corpse my possession"—which cannot be expressed in English—in i. 19. 9 "'I will shew you I am [your] master.' 'You? Impossible!—But you are master of my corpse (τοῦ νεκροῦ δέ μου κύριος εἶ). Take it!'" A querulous egoist complains i. 6. 30 αἱ μύξαι μου ῥέουσι, "my nose is running," and Epictetus, imagining himself an egoist, says (ii. 18. 17) "I stroke my [own] head (καταψῶ τὴν κορυφὴν μου) and say, 'Well done, Epictetus!'" Again, the exceptional creature says to its censor iii. 1. 23 "Don't require me to be like the rest. Or, if you must blame, blame my [inherent] nature (τῇ φύσει μου)³."

¹ Comp. i. 4. 24 and 29, i. 11. 4, and many more instances in Schenkl's Index under Ἐγώ.

² [2779 a] The "will," or προαίρεσις, is the man himself, iii. 1. 40 "You are not flesh, or hair, but will (προαίρεσις)," iv. 5. 11 "Are you a mere utensil? No, you are will (οὐ, ἀλλὰ προαίρεσις)."

³ For instances of the possessive μου after its noun, see Schenkl's Index, in which there are fewer of these than of the vernacular genitive.

[2780] The vernacular and unemphatic αὐτοῦ and αὐτῶν is also frequent in Epictetus, and, in some of these instances, emphasis appears to be laid on what precedes as well as on what follows, e.g. i. 19. 4 "What! Do I not attend to my donkey? Do I not wash his feet (οὐ νίπτω αὐτοῦ τοὺς πόδας)?" ii. 8. 26 "Does the statue of Zeus in Olympia draw up [his] eyebrow? On the contrary his look is fixed (ἀλλὰ πέπηγεν αὐτοῦ τὸ βλέμμα)"—where the parallelism shews the pronoun to be unemphatic, iii. 20. 14 "what will you make of sickness? I will reveal its nature (δείξω αὐτῆς τὴν φύσιν)," iii. 22. 75 "See how low (ποῦ) we are bringing down our Cynic! after what a fashion we are despoiling him of his kingdom (πῶς αὐτοῦ τὴν βασιλείαν ἀφαιρούμεθα)¹!"

¹ [2780 a] Comp. ii. 18. 22 διαπαίζοντα αὐτοῦ τὴν ὥραν, ii. 21. 15 and many other instances in Schenkl: iii. 5. 12 Ἄλλ' ἡ μήτηρ μου τὴν κεφαλὴν νοσοῦντος οὐ κρατῆσει. Ἄπιθι τοίνυν πρὸς τὴν μητέρα is placed by Schenkl as an instance of precedent μου, but the Latin has "mea mater." Probably Schenkl is right, and, as τὴν μητέρα means "[your] mother," so ἡ μήτηρ means "[my] mother"—"Mother will not hold my head when it aches."

[2780 b] For ἡμῶν as a vernacular genitive see Epict. ii. 12. 11—12 "We are absolutely unable to move him by these means, and consequently, as is natural, perceiving this inability of ours (ταύτης ἡμῶν τῆς ἀδυναμίας) we give the matter up," where ἡμῶν is so unemphatic that Mrs Carter's transl. omits it in English. The difference between the moderately emphatic ἡμῶν in οἱ πολῖται ἡμῶν and the vernacular and unemphatic ἡμῶν in ἡμῶν οἱ πολῖται is neatly illustrated in ii. 20. 22—4 where a philosopher is first requested to prove that religion is a good thing "in order that the citizens of our state (οἱ πολῖται ἡμῶν) may honour the divine Being": then, after being thanked for the proof, he offers to prove the contrary, and having done so, is thanked ironically, thus, "Well done, Mr Philosopher! You have done a service to our citizens (ἡμῶν τοὺς πολίτας)"—almost equivalent to "you have done the citizens a service for us, or, at our request." Another instance of the unemphatic ἡμῶν when citizens speak of "our city"—in a context that has previously implied "our"—contains also the unemphatic μου and the emphatic τὰ ἐμά. The philosopher is describing the castle of his mind, iv. 5. 24—5 "These reptiles [ἀνδράποδα ταῦτα, i.e. the mocking world] do not know in the least either who I am or where I find the Good and the Evil (οὐδὲ ποῦ μου τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ τὸ κακόν): for they have no way of getting at what is really mine (ὅτι οὐ πρόσδος αὐτοῖς πρὸς τὰ ἐμά). Just so, those who dwell in a strong city mock at their besiegers: ['Yesterday,' they say, 'things might have been different,] but, as it is (νῦν δ'), what trouble these fellows are taking—and all for nothing! Our wall is secured (ἀσφαλές ἐστιν ἡμῶν τὸ τεῖχος), we have food for any length of time, and every preparation made."

[2780 c] Ὑμῶν is a vernacular genitive following an emphatic ὑμεῖς in iii. 16. 13 "The physicians send away their chronic patients for change of air (ἄλλον αἶρα). And they do right. You, too, [must do the same]. Make a thorough change of habits, fix your fundamental conceptions (πῆξατε ὑμῶν τὰς ὑπολήψεις)."

[2781] This vernacular genitive may be frequent in some authors and rare in others. In the LXX, for example, in such language as "I know their sorrows, their imagination, thy rebellion and thy stiff neck, thy pride and the naughtiness of thine heart, your thoughts, their works and their thoughts, your manifold transgressions," the possessives are all represented (Ex. iii. 7, Deut. xxxi. 21, 27, 1 S. xvii. 28, Job xxi. 27 (Symm.), Is. lxvi. 18, Amos v. 12) by the ordinary genitive. But in Rev. ii. 9 "I know thy tribulation and poverty," ii. 19 "I know thy works and love and...", and iii. 1, 8, 15 "I know thy works," the vernacular genitive is used. It follows that in N.T. books in which LXX style is prominent—e.g. in the Acts and some portions of Luke that are in the literary style, or else moulded on the LXX—the vernacular genitive must not be expected¹.

[2780 d] But ὑμῶν is emphasized by antithesis in the following contrast drawn by Epictetus between men of the world and his pupils ("you") in their present undeveloped state. He asks them, first, whether they have the power of Socrates, to twist people round to his own view, iii. 16. 6—7 "How could you possibly have it (πόθεν ὑμῶν)? Nay, it cannot be but the men of the world will twist you round. Why then are they your superiors (ἐκείνοι ὑμῶν ἰσχυρότεροι, 2564, 2783)? Because they talk their rotten [stuff] from convictions [of the heart]. But you [preach] your healthy [doctrine] from the lips, for which cause it is nerveless and dead; and it is sickening to listen to your sermons (ὑμῶν τοὺς προτρεπτικούς). Thus you are vanquished by the men of the world." There is an intervening verb between ἡμῶν and its noun in the following, and ἡμῶν is emphasized by an antithesis carried on from the context which describes how, when we were children and fell down, "the nurse would not scold us but would beat the stone," iii. 19. 5 "Again [in boyhood] if we don't find a meal ready, the moment we come from the bath, the private tutor never dreams of checking our greediness (οὐδέποθ' ἡμῶν καταστέλλει τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ὁ παιδαγωγός) but gives the cook a flogging."

¹ [2781 a] The non-use of the vernacular genitive may sometimes result in a want of clearness as to emphasis. For example, Luke uses the ordinary possessive sometimes where it is certainly unemphatic Acts i. 9 βλεπόντων αὐτῶν ἐπήρθη κ. νεφέλη ὑπέλαβεν αὐτὸν ἀπὸ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτῶν, i. 18 ἐξεχύθη πάντα τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ, but sometimes where it might well be emphatic as in i. 19 ὥστε κληθῆναι... τῇ διαλέκτῳ αὐτῶν, i. 20 (LXX) τὴν ἐπισκοπὴν αὐτοῦ λαβέτω ἕτερος. [Of course μου in Acts i. 8 ἔσεσθέ μου μάρτυρες is quite distinct from the vernacular genitive. There is no article, and μου μάρτυρες is predicative.]

[2781 b] Contrast Rev. x. 9 πικρανεῖ σου τὴν κοιλίαν ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ στόματί σου ἔσται γλυκύ, ib. xiv. 18 πέμψον σου τὸ δρέπανον τὸ ὄξύ, xviii. 4—5 ἐξέλθατε... ἵνα μὴ συνκοινωνήσητε ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις αὐτῆς... ὅτι ἐκολλήθησαν αὐτῆς αἱ ἁμαρτίαι ἄχρι τοῦ οὐρανοῦ—all of which allude to LXX, but the reader will find no vernacular genitives in the LXX passages indicated by W.H. (comp. 2562 a).

[2781 c] In the Gospel, Lk. has the vernacular genitive in vii. 48 ἀφένται σου αἱ ἁμαρτίαι, xv. 30 οὗτος ὁ καταφαγὼν σου τὸν βίον, xvi. 6 δέξαι σου τὰ

[2782] In the Synoptists, the vernacular genitive manifestly throws emphasis on the context in Mk ix. 24 βοήθει μου τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ, and probably in Mt. xvi. 18 ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ πέτρᾳ οἰκοδομήσω μου τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. In Mt. ii. 2 εἶδομεν γὰρ αὐτοῦ τὸν ἀστέρα, the Magi assume that "the [great blazing] star" pointed to the expected King, so that they ask, in effect, "Where is the King? For we have seen the star that is his sign." These, and three instances in Luke (2781 c), are peculiar to single evangelists. See also 2558 a.

[2783] In the Pauline epistles the vernacular μου is frequent when the Apostle assumes that his disciples will be kind to him but wishes them to be kind in a certain way and so subordinates the personal pronoun to the noun of circumstance, Phil. ii. 2 "complete my joy (π. μου τὴν χαράν)," ib. iv. 14 "sharing in my affliction (σ. μου τῇ θλίψει)," Col. iv. 18 "remember my bonds (μ. μου τῶν δεσμών)." When he uses ὑμῶν thus, there is sometimes an additional reason, namely, that (besides throwing emphasis on the context) it is the common precedent genitive of a number of nouns Col. ii. 5 βλέπων ὑμῶν τὴν τάξιν καὶ τὸ... Of course, however, where there is antithesis—and especially where two pronouns are in juxtaposition (2564)—the precedent pronoun may be emphatic 1 Cor. ix. 11 μέγα εἰ ἡμεῖς ὑμῶν τὰ σαρκικὰ θερίσομεν¹; γράμματα rep. xvi. 7. All these are peculiar to Luke, and in what may be called his vernacular style. Lk. xix. 35 ἐπρίψαντες αὐτῶν τὰ ἱμάτια is parall. to Mk xi. 7 ἐπιβάλλουσιν αὐτῷ τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῶν (v.r. εαυτῶν and αὐτοῦ), Mt. xxi. 7 ἐπέθηκαν ἐπ' αὐτῶν τὰ ἱμάτια (v.r. + αὐτῶν). This must be discussed in a future treatise.

[2781 d] The vernacular possessive introducing a group of nouns is followed by the ordinary possessive in Rev. ii. 19 οἶδά σου τὰ ἔργα καὶ τὴν ἀ. καὶ τὴν π. καὶ τὴν δ. καὶ τὴν ὑπομονήν σου καὶ τὰ ἔργα σου τὰ ἔσχατα πλεονα τῶν πρώτων, where (1) the writer could not well have said καὶ σου, and (2) the twofold repetition (κ. τ. ὑ. σου κ. τ. ξ. σου) shews that emphasis is intended—"the patience that you shew and the deeds that you do." The vernacular is also followed by the ordinary possessive in Rev. x. 9 καὶ πικραίνει σου τὴν κοιλίαν ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ στόματί σου ἔσται γλυκὺ ὡς μέλι, where the unemphatic σου throws the emphasis on πικραίνει and τὴν κοιλίαν, but the writer could not have said ἀλλ' ἐν σου τῷ στόματι, and besides he wished to throw the emphasis on γλυκὺ ὡς μέλι. The two passages shew that the unemphatic σου is not likely to be used after an unemphatic word.

¹ [2783 a] 2 Pet. iii. 1—2 Ταύτην ἤδη...δευτέραν ὑμῖν γράφω ἐπιστολήν, ἐν αἷς διεγείρω ὑμῶν ἐν ὑπομονῇσει τὴν εἰλικρινῇ διάνοιαν, μνησθῆναι τῶν προειρημένων ῥημάτων ὑπὸ τῶν ἀγίων προφητῶν καὶ τῆς τῶν ἀποστόλων ὑμῶν ἐντολῆς τοῦ κυρίου καὶ σωτῆρος is such amazing Greek that it is hard to say what precisely the writer meant. But perhaps the first ὑμῶν is under-emphasized in order to emphasize the following words. As for the second ὑμῶν, R.V. renders it "your Apostles"—an astonishing

[2784] Space does not admit of a fuller discussion of the Pauline distinction between the vernacular and the ordinary possessive genitive. It is sufficient to have shewn that the former is characteristic of Aristophanes, Paul, Epictetus, and, generally, of what may be described as "spoken Greek." Often, it cannot be expressed in English. But it adds greatly to the force of the Fourth Gospel, and John's abundant use of it as well as of the ordinary genitive should protect us from the danger of imagining that he uses the two promiscuously. It is an instance of what Winer-Moulton calls "an effort to throw an unemphatic word into the shade"¹ and what Blass calls "the tendency which from early times exists in Greek as in cognate languages, to bring unemphasized (enclitic) pronouns and the like as near as possible to the beginning of the sentence (though not to put them actually at the beginning)."² phrase. To take it as meaning "your Lord and Saviour" would perhaps not be much more astonishing.

¹ [2784 a] Winer-Moulton p. 689. But in view of its use by the jailer in the Phaedo and the inn-keepers in the Frogs, and in the perfectly spontaneous little dialogues of Epictetus, and in the uncouth inartistic effusions of the author (or authors) of Revelation, and in some of the most impassioned parts of the impassioned epistles of St Paul—combined with its extraordinary prevalence in the Fourth Gospel, a work that breathes of a most divine inspiration—"effort" does not seem to be the happiest of expressions for this very natural construction. Nor is the unemphatic word exactly "thrown into the shade." It is in the shade, but "the shade" is its natural place. For, being really not so much a genitive of possession as a genitivus commodi, it takes the place of the dativus commodi.

² [2784 b] Blass p. 288 quotes Rom. i. 11 ἵνα τι μεταδῶ χάρισμα ὑμῖν πνευματικόν, Acts xxvi. 24 τὰ πολλὰ σε γράμματα εἰς μαριάν περιτρέπει, Heb. iv. 11 ἵνα μή ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τις ὑποδείγματι πέσῃ, 1 Cor. v. 1 ὥστε γυναικὰ τινα τοῦ πατρὸς ἔχειν. On this last, he says that the object is "also to emphasize both γυν. and πατρός." I should extend this remark to his other instances, in all of which the context seems to me to be emphasized by the unemphatic pronoun; and this applies to Jn ix. 6 ἐπέχρισεν αὐτοῦ τὸν πηλὸν ἐπὶ τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς, if (2569 c) the text is sound.

[2784 c] Blass includes xiii. 6 σύ μου νίπτεις τοὺς πόδας, in which however, owing to the juxtaposition of pronouns (2564, 2783), μου (as well as σύ) appears to me to be emphasized. So too is ὑμῶν by the context in Mt. xxiii. 8 (ὁὖς) "But be not ye (ὁμεῖς) called Rabbi, for one is your teacher (εἰς γὰρ ἐστὶν ὑμῶν ὁ διδάσκαλος)...."

[2784 d] Blass adds "Lk. xviii. 18 καὶ ἐπηρώτησέν τις αὐτὸν ἀρχὼν λέγων. But here again there is no obligation to use this order of words: thus we have 2 Cor. xi. 16 κἂν ὡς ἄφρονα δέξασθέ με, where no doubt the object was to give δέξασθε the prior position." I should rather be disposed to explain it by the preceding words, μή τις με δόξη ἄφρονα εἶναι, εἰ δὲ μήγε κἂν ὡς ἄφρονα δέξασθέ με, ἵνα κάγω...the personality being first under-emphasized and then, to some extent, emphasized,

On the "epistolary aorist" (2691 d)

[2785] Jerome comments on Gal. vi. 11 thus (Migne): "Videte qualibus litteris scripsi vobis; non quod grandes litterae fuerint (hoc quippe in Graeco sonat πηλίκους), sed quod suae manus essent eis nota vestigia." This (1) renders πηλίκους by "qualibus" "of what sort," (2) appears to deny that the "letters" were "great," or at any rate that the "greatness" was the point to which attention was called, (3) asserts that they were written by the Apostle's "own hand." Later on, (4) he illustrates (or quotes¹ an illustration of) "mea manu" from Jerem. xxxvii. 2 "sermo Dei qui factus est in manu Jeremiae" (where "manu" does not mean lit. "hand") and says (or quotes a saying) that St Paul writes "grandes litteras" to-day to everybody—giving both to "hand" and to "great" a spiritual significance—"magnae sunt litterae quia in litteris magnus est sensus."

[2786] Between these two distinct interpretations Migne's edition of Jerome inserts the following, "In hoc loco vir apprime nostris temporibus eruditus², *miror quomodo rem ridiculam locutus sit*³. Paulus, inquit, Hebraeus erat et Graecas litteras nesciebat. Et quia necessitas expetebat, ut manu sua epistolam subscriberet⁴, contra consuetudinem curvos tramites litterarum, vix magnis apicibus exprimebat: etiam in hoc suae ad Galatas indicia caritatis ostendens, quod propter illos id quoque quod non poterat, facere conaretur. Grandibus ergo Paulus litteris scripsit epistolam, quia sensus erat grandis in illis...." If the text is correct, Jerome appears to be sneering at, and parodying, the view held by Chrysostom, who connects St Paul's writing with ἡναγκάσθη, ἀναγκαίως, ἡναγκάσθην (Jer. "necessitas") and who represents St Paul as saying "I do not know how to write very well (ἄριστα)"—which Jerome parodies by saying that he "attempted to do what he was not able to do." In Jerome's last quoted sentence ("grandibus ergo Paulus...sensus erat

"receive me [as being your Father in Christ] that I, too, may...." Comp. ib. xi. 1 ὄφελον ἀνέχεσθέ μου μικρόν τι ἀφροσύνης· ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνέχεσθέ μου, where there is first under-emphasis and then emphasis.

¹ Most probably it is a quotation, and not Jerome's own view (see 2786), but the passage is very obscure.

² [2786 a] Migne has the following note "Quamquam hoc ferme Chrysostomus sentiat, quod Hieron. impugnat, illum tamen hic denotari non puto." Migne gives no reasons for this opinion.

³ Wetst. omits the italicised words.

⁴ Wetst. has "scriberet."

grandis") the "ergo" introduces obscurity. It may mean "consequently, as this 'vir eruditus' says," or "consequently, I suppose, this 'vir eruditus' would infer." It can hardly mean "consequently, as I infer from my own statement of the facts."

[2787] Jerome repeatedly says that the Apostle began to write with his own hand from Gal. vi. 11. But his evidence is discredited (1) by the fact that he mistranslates one of the two words (πηλίκους) on which the argument turns. (2) He may have been misled as to ἔγραψα by the Latin epistolary usage of the past tense. (3) There is a tone of bitterness about his remarks indicating that the question had become controversial, and not auguring well for a dispassionate conclusion based on evidence.

[2788] Lightfoot (ad loc.) asks "Does he (i.e. St Paul), as Chrysostom and others have supposed, point to the rude ill-formed¹ characters...as though he gloried in his imperfect knowledge of Greek?" I can find nothing in Migne's or Cramer's version indicating that Chrysostom—whose name I have italicised above—supposed the apostle to have "gloried" in anything of the kind. Cramer prints something of the kind as from Theodorus, but even his words (2691 d) οὐτε αὐτὸς ἐρυθριᾷ do not refer to any such "imperfect knowledge." Chrysostom says, οὐδὲν ἄλλο αἰνίττεται, ἀλλ' ὅτι αὐτὸς ἔγραψε τὴν ἐπιστολὴν ἅπασαν· ὁ πολλῆς γνησιότητος (see Steph. and comp. preceding γνησίων "relations") σημεῖον ἦν i.e. "a sign of great natural affection," and he adds that Paul wrote with his own hand, partly to refute those who asserted that he did not really condemn the Judaizing doctrine but partly "owing to love (δι' ἀγάπην)." He concludes; τὸ (al. τῷ) δὲ "πηλίκους" ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ οὐ τὸ μέγεθος, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἀμορφίαν τῶν γραμμάτων ἐμφαίνων λέγειν (al. λέγει) μονονουχὶ λέγων, ὅτι οὐδὲ ἄριστα γράφειν εἰδώς, ὅμως ἠναγκάσθη δι' ἑμαντοῦ γράψαι ὥστε συκοφαντῶν ἐμφράσαι τὸ στόμα. These words do not deny that the "letters" were "large"; they merely suggest that the Apostle emphasized, not their largeness but their uncouthness, saying in effect "I cannot write [in Greek characters] very well, but yet I was constrained to write with my own hand so as to stop the mouth of slanderers." The whole of the context implies that there is no "glorying," but an affectionate allusion to his inability to write Greek in anything but a laborious, uncouth "large hand."

[2789] In Jerome, the interpretation that explains πηλίκους by "grandis sensus"—supposing it to be, not Jerome's, but one ridiculed by him—may be explained as part of the view adopted by Chrysostom and perhaps borrowed by Chrysostom from Origen, whose commentary on this Epistle was freely used by Jerome. Origen may have said that St Paul's "large letters" were not only literally large but also a sign of the largeness of his affection and spiritual sympathy with the Galatians. Chrysostom expresses the same thing, only without this symbolism. Jerome literalises and laughs at it. If Origen had taken Jerome's view of the epistolary aorist, it seems probable that, on a point of this controversial character, the Latin Father would have appealed to one Greek Father against the rest. At the outset of his Galatian commentary, Jerome expressly says that he has read that of Origen¹. In one passage he extracts nearly two columns from it continuously². In another he quotes a passage of some length without acknowledgment³. In a third, he assails the opinions of Origen⁴. Not improbably Jerome is here again dissenting from Origen as well as Chrysostom—under cover of a "vir apprime nostris temporibus eruditus," who, whether he is Chrysostom or not, appears to have expressed Chrysostom's view with considerable verbal similarity. It may be added that when Jerome wrote this commentary (388 A.D.) he had only recently commenced his long residence in Palestine (which began in 386 A.D.)⁵.

ὅλλος in Epictetus and John (2730)

[2791] The use of ὅλλος in v. 32 ὅλλος ἐστὶν ὁ μαρτυρῶν to mean the Father may be illustrated by its use in Epictetus to denote God, whom he regards as the Friend and Father of all good men, providing for His children all that they need, so that the philosopher may say (iii. 13. 13—14) "Now no evil can possibly befall me...all is peace, all is calm,...Another, who makes [my wants] His care, supplies food, Another [not myself, gives me] raiment, Another gave [me] perceptions, Another gave [me] [mental] anticipations: and when at any moment I find Him stopping this continual supply of the necessities [of life] [then, I know] He is sounding the retreat, He has opened (ἤνοιξε) the door and He is saying, 'Come'"; iii. 1. 42—3 "But mark what Socrates says... 'Equip thy will, eradicate base convictions.' 'What about the body, then?' '[Deal with it] according to its nature. These things Another has made His care; leave them in His hands.'"

[2792] This Being, whom Epictetus (iii. 3. 1—10) reverentially calls "Another," ὅλλος, is not Different, Ἐτερος, from men—any more than Caesar is "different" from his subjects. He is the Good (τὸ ἀγαθόν) and He has stamped His image on "goodness" as His "current coin (νόμισμα)" and has given this current coin to man so that he can keep it if he pleases. Not even Zeus can take it from him. Man can keep it as Zeus keeps it¹. As the banker or the greengrocer cannot refuse the legal "good coin," namely, Caesar's coinage, so, in the spiritual world, the bad and the good cannot refuse that coinage which represents, for them, "the good²." If a bad man chooses a bad coinage—he is constrained by the Law to take that. A thievish proconsul comes into your province; you capture him with money: an adulterer, with women. They must perforce take the bribe. To a sportsman you offer a fine horse or hound: “Cursing and groaning [at his fate] he will sell you for it what you will. For Another constrains him in his heart (ἔσωθεν), He that hath appointed this current coin (ὁ τὸ νόμισμα τοῦτο τεταχώς)¹.” Elsewhere (i. 25. 13), when the philosopher is asked by a controversialist to “suppose himself” to be “in evils (ἐν κακοῖς),” he replies that he cannot suppose this—meaning that he, a son of God (2799 e), never deserted by God, cannot be in real “evils”—and he phrases it thus, “Another prevents me.” And, in case any of his pupils should be brought before kings and rulers to testify for the truth, he prepares them thus: “When thou art going into [the judgment hall of] some one in power remember that there is also Another noting from above all that goes on, and that thou must please Him rather than the man in power².”

[2793] We pass to the Johannine use of ἄλλος. In xiv. 16 “If ye love me ye will keep my commandments: and I will request the Father and he will give you another Paraclete (ἄλλον παράκλητον δώσει ὑμῖν),” SS has “another, the Paraclete.” A Paraclete (1720) meant a “friend in court,” an “alter ego,” an unpaid advocate. “We know not how to pray as we ought,” says the Epistle to the Romans (viii. 26), “but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us”; and Mark

Acts iv. 19 “But Peter and John answered and said unto them,” i.e. to the Jewish rulers sitting in judgment, “Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye.” Steph. (who indeed does not quote any of these instances) does not appear to contain any use of ἄλλος in this Epictetian sense. It can hardly be Hebraic. “Other” and “another,” in O.T., when connected with God or man, are generally used in a bad sense, e.g. “they followed after other Gods,” “my glory I will not give to another,” “there is no other God” etc. The notion of “another” world, “another” judgment, might naturally be developed in Gk literature out of such passages as Aesch. Supp. 228—31 οὐδὲ μὴ ’ν Ἄϊδον θανῶν Φύγη μάταιον αἰτίας πράξας τάδε. Κάκει δικάζει τὰμπλακήμαθ’, ὡς λόγος, Ζεὺς ἄλλος ἐν καμοῦσιν ὑστάτας δίκας. But I have found no such use of ἄλλος.

has, "It is not ye that are the speakers but the Holy Spirit¹." Hence a Christian, speaking in the reverential language of Epictetus, might say, "I do not know how to pray, Another teaches me," or "I do not know how to speak before princes and rulers, Another speaks for me and in me." Paraclete, or Pardlete, was recognised as an Aramaic word and may have been used sometimes as a proper name, sometimes as a common noun. This is the first place where it is mentioned in N.T. and the meaning, according to SS, may be paraphrased thus: "If ye do your part, ye will not be left unaided. The Father will send you Another, a Spirit like yours but beyond yours, [as] Paraclete [to you]." This removes a difficulty that attends the ordinary translation "He will give you another Paraclete besides myself" or "in the place of myself." For the latter assumes that Christ has called Himself a Paraclete in the previous context. This is not the case. Without any such previous mention it is difficult to attach any great force to "another" in the sense "another than myself": but it is both appropriate and forcible if it means "other than yourselves"—promising the disciples that they will not be left to their own unaided efforts².

[2794] Origen quotes xiv. 16 thus (Lomm. x. 127, about the "well" in Numb. xxi. 16) "Et rursus tertium puto videri puteum posse, cognitionem Spiritus Sancti. Alius enim et ipse est a Patre, et Filio, sicut et de ipso nihilominus in Evangelio dicitur Mittet vobis Pater alium paracletum spiritum veritatis," where "mittet" represents δώσει and "Pater" is supplied from the context. Before this, Origen says, "Alius enim a Patre Filius, et non idem Filius qui et Pater, sicut ipse in Evangeliiis dicit: Alius est qui et testimonium de me dicit, Pater." For this, Lommatzsch's footnote refers the reader to viii. 18 "I am he that beareth witness about myself and the Father that sent me beareth witness." But more probably the reference is to v. 32 "Another is he that beareth witness concerning me," and "Pater," as in xiv. 16, is supplied for sense. It was shewn above (2730) that ἄλλος in v. 32 was taken by Chrysostom and Nonnus as referring to John the Baptist, but by Cyprian as referring to the Father. Origen, it would seem, takes the latter view.

² [2793 b] The passage is quoted inaccurately (Resch) by Ephrem, Epiph. (thrice) and Eusebius. To his instances add Origen (Lomm. x. 127) "mittet vobis alium paracletum." Chrys. and Nonnus both lay stress on ἄλλον, as meaning "another like myself," Chrys. ὡς ἐμέ, Nonn. Χριστῷ σύγγονον ἄλλον ὁμοῖον. Chrys. also lays stress on it as indicating "the difference of hypostasis," and he uses it against "those infected with the Sabellian disease."

[2793 c] The Greeks seem to have regarded Hercules as the type of "the friend in need," and, besides calling a friend ἄλλος ἐγώ, they had the proverb ἄλλος Ἡρακλῆς, ἄλλος οὗτος (? αὐτός). Comp. Aristot. Eth. Magn. ii. 15 (Weise) ἄλλος οὗτος Ἡ. ἄλλος φίλος (? ἐγώ, Eth. Eudem. vii. (viii.) 12 (Weise) ὁ γὰρ φίλος βούλεται εἶναι, ὥσπερ ἡ παροιμία φησὶν, ἄλλος Ἡ., ἄλλος οὗτος. Is there some allusion to the story that Hercules helps those who help themselves?

[2795] In accordance with the difference of context, "another" means "another than myself" in v. 32, and "Another than yourselves" in xiv. 16—in both cases, however, referring to a supernatural power. In iv. 37 ἄλλος ἐστὶν ὁ σπείρων καὶ ἄλλος ὁ θερίζων, the meaning of ἄλλος is defined (1) by the following ἄλλος, (2) by the statement that it is a "proverb." Hence ἄλλος is here correctly rendered "one," and refers primarily to man and to the facts of social life, "one soweth, another reapeth." But Christ goes on to say that this worldly proverb is "really and genuinely true" in another interpretation, and that a spiritual one, namely referring to the spiritual harvest (1727 i). Hence it is not fanciful to see a latent allusion to the invisible "Sower," the Holy Spirit: "He that soweth is Another [one without whom all human sowing by prophets and apostles would be vain]."

[2796] What is the meaning of "another" in the prediction of Peter's martyrdom xxi. 18 "Another (ἄλλος) shall gird thee"? Several authorities and mss. read the plural ἄλλοι. And indeed, if the "girding" and the following words allude—as everyone admits—to Peter's crucifixion, how can the plural be dispensed with? Even if one man could perform the binding, how could one man perform the lifting up on the cross or the carrying to the cross¹? The sense seems to demand, "Others shall bind thee round the loins and carry thee where thou wouldst not be [i.e. to the cross]²." But what if the evangelist here again uses "Another" to mean "One stronger than thyself," namely, Christ, or the Spirit of Christ, which constrains the Apostle to go on the Path of the Cross¹, and which “girds” him for the conflict—as the Psalmist (xviii. 32) says, “It is God that girdeth me with strength”?

[2797] Chrysostom takes pains to explain the final words in “shall carry thee where thou wouldest not,” as implying “weakness after the flesh.” In the Martyrium Petri et Pauli and the Acta Petri et Pauli, Peter is described as retiring from Rome, and Christ as commanding him to return, in order to be crucified, saying “Follow me” and “Fear not, because I am with thee².” Thus, in effect, Christ “girds” him with strength and “carries” him “whither he would not.” Perhaps, however, in the Johannine tradition, there is no reference to a temporary weakness of the Apostle just before his martyrdom, but the meaning of the whole is an antithesis—rather implied than clearly expressed—between “doing one’s own will” in youth, and “doing the will of Another” in old age: “When thou wast young thou wast strong [as thou didst suppose] in thine own strength and didst walk according to thine own will; but when thou shalt be old thou shalt stretch out thy hands [on the cross]³, and Another shall gird thee [for thy martyrdom] and shall carry thee [to the cross, obedient now to His will] where according to thine own [present] will thou wouldest not (οὐ θέλεις) be carried⁴.”

On “authority” in Epictetus (2740—4)

[2798] Epictetus looks forward to the hour of death when he will stretch his hands up to God and say “Because thou (emph.) didst beget me I give thee thanks for the things thou gavest...take them back again and dispose them in what place thou wilt: for they were all thine; thou (emph.) hast given them to me.” The things

given are described in the context as "perceptions" and "pre-conceptions," "helps received from thee that I might understand thy ordinance [of the universe] and might follow it¹." Over this internal and spiritual realm the philosopher has "authority," unshackled, unhindered². No one can take it from him—this "authority" to be virtuous, temperate, courageous, untroubled. No doubt, occasionally, Epictetus suggests that this absolute fearlessness and rectitude of conscience gives the philosopher some "authority" over others. This comes out clearly in a passage where he proclaims the superiority of Diogenes, the natural king—the wielder of the sceptre³

² [2798 b] Epict. Ench. i. 1—2 ἐφ' ἡμῶν μὲν ὑπόληψις, ὁρμή, ὀρεξεις, ἐκκλισις... καὶ τὰ μὲν ἐφ' ἡμῶν ἐστὶ φύσει ἐλεύθερα, ἀκώλυτα, ἀπαραπόδιστα. The self-controlled movements of the mind are (ib.) "our own works (ἡμέτερα ἔργα)" and are "in our power (ἐφ' ἡμῶν)," and the philosopher says, iv. 10. 30, ἀρκεῖ μοι ὧν ἔχω ἐξουσίαν, "sufficient to me are those things over which I have authority," iii. 3. 9—10 "can anyone defraud me of my trustworthiness or of my love for my brethren? This is an estate from which none can eject me—not even Zeus! Not that He would desire it for a moment. Nay, He has placed this at my own disposal, and gave it to me even as He Himself possessed it—unhindered, unconstrained, unshackled."

³ [2798 c] See iii. 22. 57 "the sceptre of Diogenes," ib. 63 "the sceptre and the kingdom" of the Cynic. The whole chapter deals with the essential nature of royalty, which belongs to the Cynic because men recognise in him both their unselfish Benefactor and their natural Master. How is it possible, asks the pupil, that a naked, homeless, squalid creature—without a slave to attend him, or a country to call his own—can live a life of equable happiness? To which Epictetus replies, iii. 22. 46—50 "Behold, God hath sent unto you the man that shall demonstrate in act this possibility. Behold, [all of] you, that I am without country, home, possessions, slaves, making my bed on the ground—no wife, no children, no paltry palace, only the earth and the sky and one poor cloak! And what do I want? Am I not painless! Am I not fearless? Am I not free? When saw ye me missing anything that I longed for? Or falling into any evil that I shunned? What fault found I ever, either with God or man? When did I accuse anyone? Saw ever anyone my face clouded with gloom? How do I confront the great men before whom you stand frightened and abashed? Do of man's conscience—to Nero, Sardanapalus, Agamemnon, and Alexander: "These kings and tyrants were wont to receive¹ from their armed guards the [privilege of] rebuking this man or that and the [brute] power of even inflicting punishment on offenders—and this though they themselves were bad: but on the Cynic this authority is bestowed not by arms and guards but by the conscience"—i.e. the consciousness² of being a disinterested toiler for mankind, of being a friend of Zeus, and of knowing men (whom he counts as his brethren or children), as a general knows his soldiers, so that he may reprove them freely³. Still, this "authority" is shackled and hindered. The only absolute "authority" given to man is over his own heart.

[2799] On the other hand there is the false "authority" of the despot, which so imposes on the pseudo-philosopher that he cries

I not treat them as [cringing] slaves (ἀνδραπόδοις)? Who that sees me does not think that he beholds his own [true] King and Master?"—This, says Epictetus, is the Cynic's message, this is his true character.

¹ [2798 d] iii. 22. 94 Lit. "were wont to supply to these kings." Mrs Carter's transl. has the pres. "give." But Epictetus is looking back at the long line of kings of the old dispensation (comp. Jn x. 8 "all that came before me are thieves and robbers") including (iii. 22. 30) Agamemnon, "though he was better than Sardanapalus and Nero." Not that Epictetus denies Agamemnon the title of "shepherd." "Shepherd in truth," he says (iii. 22. 35), "for you weep like the shepherds, when a wolf has snatched away one of their sheep!" The "shepherd" as fighting for the sheep against the wolf is not considered by Epictetus. He dislikes the metaphor: "And these [Greeks]," he says, "are sheep indeed, who are ruled over by you." As for the true Cynic, he is to abstain—at all events (iii. 22. 67) during the present state of society—from the distractions of wife and children so that he may devote himself wholly to his subjects, who include the whole human race, and may play his part as the king (Iliad ii. 25) "to whom the nations are entrusted and [the burden of] so many cares," going about the world and doing good as Ruler and as Healer (iii. 22. 72).

² [2798 e] "The consciousness," txt iii. 22. 95 ὅταν ἴδῃ ὅτι ὑπερηγρόπνηκεν ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων. But the sense is improved by reading εἰδῇ. It has been shewn (2659 e) that Ν sometimes uses ι for ει. Moreover B—which frequently uses ει for long ι—sometimes uses ει for short ι as (2654 b) in Jn i. 9 ἀληθινον, Jas iii. 7 ἀνθρωπείνη, ib. iv. 14 αἱμαίς. And, in Epictetus itself, Schweig. Index testifies that εἰδῶ, sciam, "interdum perperam cum εἰδῶ permutatur." See also 2515 (i) e. By reading ὅταν εἰδῇ here ("Knowing as he does," or "conscious as he is") we shall keep the connexion between εἰδῇ and the preceding συνειδός. It is the Cynic's own "conscience"—as well as the conscience of those whom he controls—that gives him a kingly power over his subjects.

out "But he has authority to kill me¹!" To this Epictetus replies elsewhere that the despot has "authority" over our body and other possessions but not over our will. To the objection "So you philosophers teach people to despise kings!" he replies, "God forbid! Which of us teaches [anyone] to lay claim, in rivalry with them, to the things over which they have authority? Take my body—[we say]—take goods, take reputation, take my friends and relations... 'Yes,' [says the despot], 'but I desire also to rule your [inmost] convictions.' And who gave you this authority?" It follows that the despot's "authority" is a mere vapour², and that the pupils of Epictetus might ask to be allowed to release themselves from it by self-slaughter: "Here [on earth, are] robbers and thieves and courts of justice and so-called despots, who fancy they have some sort of authority over us—simply because of [their hold on] our paltry body and its possessions. Suffer us [O Epictetus] to shew them that they have authority over nothing³." According to

² [2799 δ] Epict. i. 29. 9—11. Did God, then, give the tyrant this "authority"—transient and unreal though it is—over the bodies of men? Epictetus implies that He did, in a passage (iii. 22. 5 foll.) where God is represented as allotting their several parts to the sun, to the heifer (which has to run away from the lion), to the bull (which has to fight), to Agamemnon and to Achilles: but he never says that God assigned a part to Thersites. The burden of this difficulty is thrown (iv. 1. 100—1) on the ὀρμαί—the "tides," or "motions," of God's universe, which we must carefully consider: "Our will is unshackled," but "the body of clay—how was He able to make that unshackled? Therefore He made subject to the [ever moving] circle of the universe (ὑπέταξεν οὖν τῇ τῶν ὄλων περιόδῳ) possessions, utensils, house, children, wife. Why, then, should I fight against God?"

⁴ [2799 δ] Epict. i. 9. 15. Epictetus will not consent, he bids his pupils await God's sign. In iv. 10. 29, τὰ ἀλλότρια ὀψεται αὐτὰ δς ἂν φέρῃ, ὡς ἂν δίδωται παρὰ τοῦ ἔχοντος ἐξουσίαν... ἀρκεῖ μοι ὧν ἔχω ἐξουσίαν... τὰ δ' ἄλλα ὡς ἂν θέλῃ ὁ ἐκείνων κύριος, some have taken ὁ ἐκείνων κύριος as God. But κύριος is almost always used

Epictetus, then, as also according to the Fourth Gospel, all men that receive the Logos of God receive authority over the will within them, which enables them to conform their will to His and to become His children; and this—the authority to lead a virtuous life—is the only real authority¹. The authority to pronounce judgment is not real authority unless the judge knows the truth². That power which has “authority” to bestow the greatest “profit” is “divine (θεῖον)”³.

by Epict. in a bad sense. His advice everywhere is, in effect, “Call no man lord.” Here ὁ ἐκείνων κύριος means “the lord or master of those transient objects.” Comp. ii. 2. 25—6 “But if you gape after external objects, you must needs wobble at the dictate of the lord (ἄνω καὶ κάτω κυλίσσθαι πρὸς τὸ βούλημα τοῦ κυρίου). And who is ‘lord’ (τίς δ’ ἐστὶ κύριος)? He that has [from time to time] authority over the things that you covet or avoid.”

¹ [2799 e] Jn i. 12 “But as many as received him [the Logos or Light] to them gave he authority to become children of God.” Epictetus frequently describes the Cynic as (i. 9. 6) “Son of God” (comp. i. 3. 2 “knowing that thou art son of Zeus”), i. 19. 8—9 “When the tyrant says to anyone ‘I will fetter your leg,’ the man that consistently honours (τετιμηκώς) his leg says ‘Don’t, for pity’s sake!’ But the man [that honours] his own will says, ‘If it appears advisable to you, fetter it.’ ‘Won’t you bend?’ [says the tyrant]. ‘I will not bend.’ ‘I will shew you that I am lord (κύριός εἰμι).’ ‘You! Impossible! (πῶθεν σὺ;) I have been freed by Zeus. Do you really suppose that He would purpose to allow His own Son (τὸν ἴδιον υἱόν) to be made a slave? But of my corpse you are lord. Take it.’”

² [2799 f] Epict. i. 29. 50 “‘But,’ say you, ‘the authorities (ὁ ἔχων τὴν ἐξουσίαν) have given sentence [saying] I judge you [guilty] of impiety and profanity.’ What [harm] is there [in that] for you?” i. 29. 52 “This man, whoever he be, that has authority to sentence you—does he know what piety or impiety is?” Such “judgments” therefore are futile, i. 25. 2 “What can henceforth cause us trouble or fear? Can it be any of the objects of our life? No one has any authority over these. As for the things over which the others have authority, we do not care a jot for them,” ii. 13. 14 “Consequently, Zeno, for his part, felt no anxiety when he was going before Antigonus. For what the former admired, the latter had no authority over...but Antigonus was anxious at the prospect of meeting Zeno,” iii. 24. 48 “And further remember that [in going to a great man] you have in effect gone to a shoemaker or greengrocer, to one that has no authority over anything that is great or serious—though he may sell [his goods] at a great price.” These extracts have a bearing on Pilate’s judgment. Pilate sat as judge to decide the truth: but he confessed that he did not know what it was (“what is truth?”). He also “was afraid,” as Antigonus before Zeno.

³ [2799 g] “Profit,” ὠφέλεια (Epict. seldom uses σωτηρία except in a fashionable asseveration). Comp. Epict. iv. 1. 61 ἐννοοῦμεν γὰρ ὅτι τὸ ἔχον ἐξουσίαν τῆς μεγίστης ὠφελείας θεῖόν ἐστι. But, says the context, we think the things of greatest “profit” are wealth, office, etc. Then it follows that (ib. 59—60) “those who have authority over these things are our lords,” and “thus then we have many lords (κυρίους)” because we have many worldly desires. It is assumed that the only true Lord is He that can bestow on us the only true "profit," namely, virtue. In his doctrine about lordship, Epictetus had to deal with the difficulty that "lord" was regularly used in conversation to mean little more than "Sir." He does not forbid the use of the word thus, provided that it be used merely as a form. But iv. 1. 57 "If you hear anyone say heartily and feelingly (ἔσωθεν καὶ ἐκ πάθους) 'Lord,' then—though twelve fuses go before him—call him 'Slave.'"

These and many other passages indicate that educated Greeks at the beginning of the first century must have been familiar with the contrast between true authority and false so vividly exhibited in the Fourth Gospel (1594).

[2799 (i)] Addendum on ὅτε. Jn's use of ὅτε differs little from the Synoptic, exc. in the frequency of the phrase "there cometh an hour...when (ὅτε)..." iv. 21, 23, v. 25 (but v. 28 ἐν ᾗ), xvi. 25. In ix. 4 "there cometh night, when," W.H. make no pause; but a comma is required after νύξ, to distinguish it from "a night when." In v. 25 ἔρχεται ὥρα, καὶ νῦν ἐστίν, ὅτε, a pause is also necessary, to avoid the familiar juxtaposition ἔστιν ὅτε, and also for the sense, "there cometh an hour [appointed by God], and even now it is [here], when...." Here "when" is almost equivalent to ἐν ᾗ "in which hour," or "in that hour" (as in v. 28). In xvi. 2, 32, "the hour cometh" is not followed by ὅτε but by ἵνα—probably because here the phrase exceptionally introduces, not an "hour" of blessing or resurrection but an "hour" of persecution or trial, and it is desired to emphasize the fact that this trial is part of God's purpose, ordained "in order that" the trial may come to pass.

[2799 (ii)] Addendum on σύν. Jn agrees with Demosthenes and Epictetus in hardly ever using σύν (while abundantly using μετά with gen.). Σύν is also non-occurrent in Rev. These facts stamp σύν as belonging to literary as distinct from spoken Greek. Accordingly σύν occurs in 1 Esdr. ii. 7, viii. 14 where μετά occurs in the parall. Ezr. i. 4, vii. 16; and the instances of σύν in Luke (including Gospel and Acts) as compared with all the rest of N.T. are as three to two. Σύν with neut. pl. "along with these things," may have various meanings (Lk. xxiv. 21 "along with" [i.e. in addition to] but Nehem. v. 18, Epict. Ench. xxxii. 3, xxxiii. 13 "along with [and in spite of]"). Σύν with persons regarded statistically may mean "reckoned up with," contrasted with μετά which implies helpful companionship, as in Epict. i. 24. 19 "I reckon myself with the multitude (συγκατατάττω ἐμαυτὸν σύν τοῖς πολλοῖς) and walk companionably with many individuals (καὶ μετὰ πολλῶν περιπατῶ)." In σύν θεῷ, σύν τῷ δικαίῳ, οἱ σύν αὐτῷ, etc. the dat. mostly represents God, a Cause, a Leader on whose side (not "by whose side," παρά) one is fighting or working and with whom one identifies oneself (as with Christ in the Pauline Epistles). Σύν occurs thrice in Jn, xii. 2, xxi. 3 (which need no comment), xviii. 1—2 ταῦτα εἰπὼν Ἰησοῦς ἐξῆλθεν σύν τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ...εἰσῆλθεν αὐτὸς κ. οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ...συνήχθη ἱ. ἐκεῖ μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ. Both here and elsewhere Christ is described by Jn as in helpful companionship with (μετὰ) the disciples, but not elsewhere as σὺν τ. μαθηταῖς. Nonnus omits the σὺν clause, and so does Chrysostom (exc. in the title of his homily). But Origen quotes it. Doubtless it is genuine and bears upon Lk. xxii. 39 "according to the (τῷ) custom...there followed him [also] the disciples." Did space allow, it might be shewn that Lk. and Jn appear to take different views of "the custom"—Jn interpreting it as referring to Christ's customary reception of the disciples in a certain place. But the discussion of this point must be deferred to a treatise on "Johannine Interventions."

[2799 (iii)] Addendum on λόγος (sing. and defined) in Christ's words

(1) IN THE SYNOPISTS. The first Synoptic mention is in the Parable of the Sower Mk iv. 14 ὁ σπείρων τὸν λόγον σπείρει, parall. Mt. xiii. 19 παντὸς ἀκούοντος τὸν λόγον τῆς βασιλείας, Lk. viii. 11 ὁ σπόρος ἐστὶν ὁ λόγος τοῦ θεοῦ (foll. by Lk. viii. 21 μήτηρ μου καὶ ἀδελφοί μου οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ ἀκούοντες καὶ ποιοῦντες, which is parall. to Mk iii. 35 ὃς ἂν ποιῇ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ θεοῦ, Mt. xii. 50 ὅστις γὰρ ἂν ποιῇ τὸ θέλημα τ. πατρὸς μου τ. ἐν οὐρανοῖς). The only other mention in Lk. is xi. 28 (pec. to Luke) μενοῦν μακάριοι οἱ ἀκούοντες τὸν λόγον τ. θεοῦ καὶ φυλάσσοντες. Apart from the Sower and its explanation (and Mk vii. 29 "for this saying go thy way") Christ's only use of ὁ λόγος, in Mk, is in the charge brought against the Pharisees that they make void "the word of God"—which enjoins the honouring of parents—for the sake of their tradition (Mk vii. 13, Mt. xv. 6 txt "the word of God," but marg. "law of God"). The impression given by these passages is that "the word" in Mk iv. 14 means the word of God as set forth in the fundamental principles of the Law of Moses, interpreted and expanded in the Sermon on the Mount—the law enjoining the love of God and of "neighbour"—dealing primarily with motives, and claiming to override the sabbath in respect of works of healing, but not as yet illustrated by Christ's Sacrifice on the Cross.

(2) IN JOHN. (a) "My word," "his word," "thy word." The first Johanne mention of ὁ λόγος (apart from iv. 37 "the saying [about the harvest]") is in v. 24 ὁ τὸν λόγον μου ἀκούων καὶ πιστεύων τῷ πέμψαντί με ἔχει ζωὴν αἰώνιον. This is part of Christ's reply to the Jews, who first persecute and then desire to kill Him for healing on the sabbath, and for saying "My Father worketh hitherto and I [too] work." Chrysostom (twice, but varying with pl. and sing.) quotes this as "my words," and so does Nonnus. But "the word" seems to mean the word of the Son, which is also that of the Father—the word, or law, of love and kindness exemplified in the healing on the sabbath—which is a principle, or seed, of spiritual life, so that it abides in men, if they make room for it in their hearts by "belief," as above stated, v. 24 "He that heareth my word and believeth him that sent me hath eternal life," v. 38 "Ye have not his word abiding in you," viii. 37 "My word hath no place in you," viii. 51—2 (bis) "if any one keep my word"; or else men may be described as abiding in it, viii. 31 "If ye abide in my word." Concerning this "word" of the Father, the Son says, viii. 55 "I know him [i.e. the Father] and I keep his word." In the Last Prayer He thrice calls it "thy word" thus, xvii. 6 "They have kept thy word," xvii. 14 "I have given unto them thy word," xvii. 17 "thy word is truth"—which implies that the vital recognition of the true relation between God and man, and between man and man, has been implanted by the Son of God in the hearts of men His brethren. After saying (xiv. 23) "If any one love me he will keep my word," Christ is represented as implying the identity between the "word" of the Son and that of the Father in

xiv. 24 "and the word that ye hear (or, are hearing) is not mine but [the word] of the Father who sent me."

(δ) "The word of God," in Jn, occurs only in x. 35 "If he called them 'gods' unto whom the word of God came (πρὸς οὓς ὁ λόγος τ. θεοῦ ἐγένετο)," referring to Ps. lxxxii. 6 "I said ye are gods, and all of you sons of the Most High, nevertheless ye shall die like men." The Psalm is about "judges" to whom "the word of the Lord came"—as it is freq. said to "come" to prophets (Through Letter etc. 850 ἐγένετο πρὸς)—to enable them to judge justly, as the Spirit of God was imparted to the Seventy through Moses (Numb. xi. 25) for the same purpose. The judges mentioned by the Psalmist judge unjustly. Nevertheless it is implied that they had in themselves the potentiality to become "gods" and the "sons of God" because He offered them His Word, i.e. the seed of spiritual life, though they rejected it. See Origen (on Rom. iii. 4, Lomm. vi. 155—6).

(c) "The word that is in their own law, [there] written" occurs in xv. 25 referring to Ps. xxxv. 19 "They hated me without a cause." On viii. 43 "my speech...my word," see 2251, and on xv. 20 "the word that I said unto you" see 2405—6.

(d) "The word that I spake (ὁ λ. ὃν ἐλάλησα)—that (ἐκεῖνος) shall judge him" (xii. 48), describes "the word" as rejected, so that it can no longer be an internal source of life, a friendly ally, but is forced to become an external judge. This must be contrasted with xv. 3 "Already are ye clean because of the word that I have spoken (ἐλάληκα) to you: abide in me, and I too in you"—where "the word" is the new Law of Love inculcated in the Washing of Feet. This "word" has been taken by the disciples into their souls. Judas indeed rejected it; but concerning the rest it is afterwards said, xvii. 6 "they have kept thy word." The cleansing influence of the Logos may be illustrated from Epictetus, who says, iv. 11. 4 "But since it is impossible that man's (αὐτῶν) being should be completely clean (καθαράν)...the word, received from [God], so far as is possible, attempts to make it cleanly (ὁ λόγος, παραληφθεὶς, εἰς τὸ ἐνδεχόμενον, ταύτην καθάριον ἀποτελεῖν πειράται)." But Epictetus regards ὁ λόγος as little more than "reason." John uses ὁ λόγος in the words of Christ to represent not only the word announcing the sonship of man to God, but also the thought of sonship, so taken into man's heart that the personal Son enters along with the thought, as into a home, and makes His abode there—or else so rejected that it becomes a Judge.

(e) "Their word"—Christ's last mention of λόγος—occurs in xvii. 20 "I pray...for them that believe on me through their word," contemplating a time when "the word" of the Son, transmitted to the disciples and assimilated by them so that it becomes "their word," will be a power diffusing belief in the Son throughout the world.

Addendum on "Synonyms"

By "synonyms" are meant (1595) "words so far alike that at first the reader may take the thought to be the same, though it is always really different." A more exact term—if it were English—would be "homoionyms." Strictly speaking, some might say that there are no "synonyms" in John, i.e. no words that convey precisely the same shade of meaning.

INDICES TO "JOHANNINE VOCABULARY"

III. WORDS (GREEK)

[The main object of this Index is to guide the reader to some paragraph in "Johannine Vocabulary" where a characteristic Johannine word is mentioned or discussed. It does not contain e.g. ἄρτος, σὰρξ, or ὕδωρ, because these words are not characteristically Johannine. But "bread," "flesh," and "water," in the English Index, will guide the reader to passages illustrating the Johannine characteristic use of these common words.

For conjunctions, prepositions, pronouns etc., the reader is referred to Index III. of "Johannine Grammar."]

III. WORDS (GREEK)

[This Index deals mainly with conjunctions, prepositions and pronouns. Nouns and verbs in it are regarded mainly in their grammatical and syntactical aspects and not so much with reference to their separate meanings—for which the reader is referred to Index III of "Johannine Vocabulary." If a word, e.g. ἀγαπάω, is occasionally mentioned in a non-grammatical aspect, it is because of a desire to supply some defect in "Johannine Vocabulary," e.g. the testimony of Origen to the difference between ἀγαπάω and φιλέω (2584 c).]

 βλέπω: hist. pres. 482; βλέπετε, initial, imperat. 237¹

¹ In 2237 it was said that "βλέπετε would naturally be imperative." In N.T., βλέπετε—except with relative or negative—is almost always (abt 20) initial and, when initial, alw. imperative (1 Cor. i. 26 being no exception). In Poet. Scen. βλέπετε is only in Eurip. Cyc. 211 (imperat.). Initial ὁρᾶτε in Poet. Scen., though possibly interrog., prob. always means "See!"—Aesch. Prom. 119 "See [me outraged because of my love for mankind]!", Ag. 1217 "See [these spectres]!", Soph. El. 1228-30 "See [Orestes restored to life]!" to which the Chorus replies "We do see," Oed. Col. 871-2 "See [these insults]!" to which Oedipus replies, "They do see," Ant. 806 "See [me led away to death]!", Eurip. Fragm. Alcm. 11 "See [the tyrant in exile]!" In Aristoph., too, ὁρᾶτε initial, or after a pause, is almost alw. imperative, or may be so taken. In N.T., ὁρᾶτε is alw. imperat. exc. perh. in Jas ii. 24 ὁρᾶτε ὅτι (after βλέπετε ὅτι) R.V. "ye see that"; and, even there—in view of Epictet. iii. 13.9 ὁρᾶτε γὰρ ὅτι, "videte enim" and the frequency of ἦρα ὅτι in Epictet., as well as i. 3. 9 ὁρᾶτε οὖν καὶ προσέχετε—the meaning may be "see [and note] that." These facts bear on 2762 a, which rendered Il. i. 120 λεύσσετε imperatively, though rendered in Monro's Hom. Gramm. p. 190 "ye see." The scholiast says, "ὁρᾶτε, βλέπετε," perh. intending not only to explain the poetic λεύσσετε by a prose word, but also to shew that it was imperative, like initial ὁρᾶτε and βλέπετε.

¹ It should have been stated in 2456 a that Jn—who uses φημί only in i. 23, ix. 38, xviii. 29—never applies it (as the Synoptists do) to Christ. Mt. and Lk. agree (agst Mk) in applying it to Christ in His answer to Pilate, "Thou sayest it." It is a mark of classical style. In Pentateuch, of seven instances, five are in the prophecy of Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 3-15. In N.T., it occurs mostly in Acts, 24 times. In the Synoptists, Mt. uses it most freq. (17), Mk (6), Lk. (7). It is never used by three Synoptists in common. Lk. mostly uses it in traditions peculiar to himself.

A GUIDE THROUGH GREEK TO HEBREW SCRIPTURE

Demy 8vo. cloth. Price 7s. 6d. net.

"So far as we can judge, they (the arguments) are learned and ingenious, though perhaps insufficient to carry the whole weight of his hypothesis."—Times.

"Worked out in great detail and with unflagging interest. For Dr Abbott throws life into everything he touches....A contribution to the 'Synoptic Problem,' claiming examination and commanding attention."—Expository Times.

"We have nothing but thanks to offer Dr Abbott for the patient industry with which he has collected and put before us, with great clearness, dozens of experiments upon which even those who are not experts either in Hebrew or Greek or Biblical criticism can exercise their common sense."—Guardian.

"A very ingenious and very interesting argument."—Daily News.

"Of extraordinary interest and suggestiveness."—

Manchester Guardian.

"The theory may be commended as most ingenious, and its application as very interesting and full of light on many vexed readings."—

Scotsman.

"Certainly, as far at least as the Septuagint is concerned, he has found a Vera Causa."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Learned, acute, and ingenious."—British Weekly.

THE CORRECTIONS OF MARK ADOPTED BY MATTHEW AND LUKE

Demy 8vo. cloth. Price 15s. net.

"There is something very attractive in the way in which Dr Abbott forces the documents to tell their secret history, not by brilliant guess-work but by the use of rigid scientific method."—Manchester Guardian.

"There is a great deal of valuable information in this second instalment of Dr Abbott's great work, whether one agrees with the main thesis or not."—Guardian.

"Full of acute and learned criticism."—Pilot.

"The industry and ingenuity displayed through the work are marvelous. In this attempt to solve the Synoptic variations Dr Abbott is as ploddingly persevering as he is dazzlingly original."—Expository Times.

"One excellent feature in it is the effort to bring the whole evidence within reach of an intelligent English reader."—Dundee Advertiser.

"As an exposition of the documentary theory of the origin of the Gospels, Dr Abbott's work promises to hold a high place."—

Glasgow Herald.

"Deserves to be read with the utmost care."—Outlook.

"A monument of patient, scholarly labour."—Christian World.

Part III

FROM LETTER TO SPIRIT AN ATTEMPT TO REACH THROUGH VARYING VOICES THE ABIDING WORD

Demy 8vo. cloth. Price 20s. net.

"The candid and reverent spirit in which the book is written wins the reader's sympathy....The criticism exhibited is often acute and it is set forth with an accumulation of detail which is evidence of persevering research ;...For the writer's ability, labour, and candour we have great respect..."—Guardian.

"The book is noteworthy as a defence on new grounds of the historical tradition present in the Fourth Gospel, and the author's diligence in collecting details from every quarter must be universally admired."—Athenæum.

"A monument of painstaking comparison and analysis.....The appendices and indices teem with suggestive material.....He has steeped himself in the spirit, and he has logically explained much which to other critics is mere opportunity for wriggling."—Outlook.

"The notion that St John wrote not to supplement the Synoptics but to substitute a spiritual for a materialistic conception of Jesus...is exceedingly suggestive and worked out with much ingenuity."—Daily News.

"A fresh illustration of the author's sound learning and keen exegetical insight."—Daily Chronicle.

"Very original and suggestive."—Cambridge Review.

"To the proving of his case Dr Abbott brings all the wealth of curious learning and the singular fertility of linguistic conjecture for which he is so justly distinguished among Biblical critics of the day."—Scotsman.

"There is in the book...a large amount of careful work which will be found helpful to all who are seeking their way through the letter to the spirit of the Gospels."—Bookman.

"Has the true scientific temper.....The discussion does not fail to be stimulating and suggestive."—Literary World.

"The result at once of great learning, indomitable industry, and remarkable ingenuity, this is a work that stimulates and rewards."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Often throughout the book the incidental matters which crop up are of the greatest interest. For instance, what Dr Abbott says on the probability of Christ's teaching about 'taking on oneself the yoke' becoming misunderstood and perverted to 'taking up the cross' is luminously suggestive.....It is a storehouse of learning, and, quite apart from the conclusions which Dr Abbott seeks to establish, it will be valued for the recondite material both from Jewish and Christian early writings which it brings together and makes easily accessible."—Christian World.

"He spares no pains to bring a very ingenious discussion up to date and well within the reach of those who have no knowledge of Greek or Hebrew."—Dundee Advertiser.

"The accumulation of such facts is a task of great labour, but is valuable to all workers in the field of Biblical criticism, whether they agree with Dr Abbott's view of the Synoptic problem or not.....The curious facts which he has gathered about the Rabbinical beliefs concerning 'voices from heaven' contain much that is new to us."—Pilot.

"A valuable contribution to the Synoptic problem."—Leeds Mercury.

"The strength of his position lies in the accumulation of particulars. He must be examined page by page and point by point."—

Expository Times.

"Warm thanks are due to the author for the immense labour he has undertaken."—Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review.

"With thorough and penetrating scholarship, and a degree of toil beyond all praise, Dr Abbott has sought out parallels to facts and expressions in the Gospels for the purpose of elucidating their meaning, and tracing them to their original sources.....Such a work as this, which certainly puts to shame the sluggishness and the spiritual indifference, and the miserable formality ordinarily displayed in the study of the Gospels, will require prolonged and serious investigation, such as cannot be given to it in a notice like the present. It materially advances our comprehension of the intellectual conditions and methods of instruction of Christ's age...."—Baptist Magazine.

"They are full of minute and curious learning, and help to advance Dr Abbott's plea that the study of the Aramaic versions is of essential importance for the interpretation of the Gospels."—Manchester Guardian.

"The book is not more remarkable for its striking hypotheses than it is for its careful and systematic collection of evidence....Dr Abbott's recent series of volumes (soon happily to be followed by another) really constitute a new and enlightening commentary on some of the most important passages in the New Testament. And the commentary is equally illuminative of the Rabbinical passages quoted.....It is full of learning, of originality, but above all of suggestiveness.....Page after page scintillates with brilliant points.....Dr Abbott has clearly relied a good deal on secondary sources, but he has so carefully verified and examined his materials, he has applied to them so penetrating and sound a criticism, that his book is distinguished by its accuracy in details. Dr Abbott stands forth as a conspicuous example of the salvation which lies in precision of thought and exactness of method."—Jewish Quarterly Review.

The Classical Review, stating in detail "what results the writer has attained which seem tolerably certain to be correct," adds "Incidentally Dr Abbott gives us a most valuable dissertation of 43 pages on Bath Kol, i.e. Voices from Heaven in Jewish Tradition, reprinting in an Appendix Pinner's collection of examples from the Talmuds and Targums; he gives us a useful restatement in another Appendix of the reasons for believing that the so-called Second Epistle of St Peter is a forgery, and in yet another a convincing review of Eusebius' promise to record the evidence accessible to him that bore on the canonicity or authenticity of Christian writings. He demonstrates anew the correctness of Bishop Lightfoot's interpretation of that promise.....The temper of Dr Abbott's writing is worthy of his subject...he has shown us the true significance of unregarded words."

“IN THE NIGHT IN WHICH HE WAS (?) BETRAYED”

Demy 8vo. cloth. Price 7s. 6d. net.

“We are inclined to think that the present instalment, although the thinnest in bulk, is the most valuable of the four.....Dr Abbott exhibits his customary industry, acuteness, and learning.....One finds oneself, much more often than usual, able to follow not only with interest, but with willing assent.”—Guardian.

The Dundee Advertiser, while calling attention to the “conjectures in the chain of argument,” says “There is, however, a strong temptation to think Dr Abbott’s hypothesis established when it is seen to be the key that fits into one difficulty after another,” and adds “For ingenious and scholarly work there is nothing being done at present in the English language like the series of volumes by Dr Edwin A. Abbott. It is research work, painstaking and slow and elaborate.”

“In great detail and with learned elaboration the various passages are examined; but the main topic of this book is often the occasion for interesting digressions into paths in which Dr Abbott is always an instructive, if not always a convincing, companion.”—

London Quarterly Review.

“A marvel of minute scholarship and of patient industry.”—

Westminster Magazine.

“He has, in a rare degree, the true scientific temper, which knows that far-reaching implications may be hidden in apparently trivial facts. Indeed it may safely be said that, had he never established a single conclusion, his investigations would, for their patient and unobtrusive thoroughness, alone suffice to earn him an honourable name. This latest book, the fourth part of the ‘Diatessarica,’ is a case in point.....The real value of the book, however, is not in the conclusion but in the way in which the conclusion is supported.....Dr Abbott works out his argument with great elaborateness and detail, and to follow it conscientiously is to be amply repaid, whether one end in agreement or dissent. One of Dr Abbott’s incidental remarks is too valuable to pass without reference: ‘We need,’ he says, ‘to become more, not less, anthropomorphic in our thoughts about God, after the pattern of the best anthropomorphism of the prophets of Israel and the Son of God.' Not many more useful reminders could come to those who have the forming of modern theology."—Christian World.

"Unwearied industry and remarkable ingenuity, a word which we use honoris causa, distinguish this as they distinguish all Dr Abbott's work."—Spectator.

"The criticism is marked by that singular nicety that marks Dr Abbott's work, particularly in an explanation of the intrusion of 'Galilee' into the Resurrection narratives."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"We are struck once more by the ingenuity with which Dr Abbott follows his theory of an Aramaic original, and finds in subsequent misunderstandings of its text a reason for many of the divergences in the canonical Gospels.....The conjectural character of a great deal of his work is inevitable in such an unexplored field, but he is providing us with a mass of new material for the literary study of the Gospels, especially in the direction of accounting for discrepancies in parallel narratives."—

Manchester Guardian.

"In fearless scientific criticism of the Gospels as documents, Dr Abbott occupies a front place among modern scholars, but his criticism is instinct with deep reverence, and always in his own happy phrase 'an attempt to reach through varying voices the abiding word.'"—Literary World.

"We gladly confess that we have learned a great deal from the work before us."—Record.

"It is characterized by the same extreme care and minuteness of detail and thoroughness of scholarship which are found in preceding volumes."—Leeds Mercury.

"A scholarly work, worthy of Dr Abbott's great reputation as a Biblical critic."—Outlook.

"This is the fourth part of Dr Abbott's great work, 'Diatessarica,' and, like its predecessors, 'Clue' and 'From Letter to Spirit,' is full of acute criticism and painstaking inquiry. It is indeed monumental in its breadth and thoroughness.....Novel as this interpretation is, no one has a right to set it aside who does not study the contents of this learned, reverent, and careful work."—Baptist Magazine.

Part V

JOHANNINE VOCABULARY

A COMPARISON OF THE WORDS OF THE FOURTH GOSPEL WITH THOSE OF THE THREE

Demy 8vo. cloth. Price 13s. 6d. net.

"This is likely to prove the most useful of the five volumes that have now appeared in the series which Dr Abbott has called 'Diatesarica.'...It exhibits the marvellous industry which is so characteristic of Dr Abbott's work quite as much as any of the earlier volumes...the accumulation of facts which it contains is likely to be of permanent value to students of the language of the Gospels, and especially of the Fourth Gospel."—Guardian.

"The whole inquiry is a wonderful exhibition of patient and delicate scholarship. Both beginners and experienced students may profit greatly from Dr Abbott's masterly treatment of verbal and grammatical minutiae. The handling of tenses is especially instructive....And as a storehouse of facts laboriously collected from many sources and carefully marshalled the work will be invaluable to students of the Fourth Gospel."—Christian World.

"The Synoptic variations, similarities, and peculiarities are admirably set out above condensed and lucid notes. It is a book full of good things on a question already full."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The reader, learned or unlearned in the technical sense, will find in the book abundant matter to engross his attention and to stimulate reflection. It is of the same high quality as Dr Abbott's other works, a minutely accurate, scholarly, and stimulating production—another volume of a remarkable series."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"No other work on Greek Testament synonymous words, especially those in St John, so completely brings to light their precise difference and applies them to the clearer elucidation of the Gospel narrative, as this volume, which throws much original light on obscure passages, and often reconciles seeming difficulties in text and context and shows that in some cases what appears to be mere tautology or redundancy is in reality a most important statement of either incident or doctrine."—Academy.

"The present sympathetic and laborious study promises to be an extremely valuable addition to the literature of the subject....The book is an extremely suggestive study, and the temptation to see more in the original than can fairly be taken out of it is, on the whole, wisely restrained."—Glasgow Herald.

"The plan, it will be seen, is thorough, and so is the execution; yet there is nothing abstruse, nothing beyond the comprehension of the ordinary student of the New Testament. Almost every page of this volume offers some fresh fact, suggestion, or discussion bearing on the actual meaning of the evangelist, and there is none of that pedantic philology which would confuse the real issues."—Dundee Advertiser.

"Dr Abbott has rendered very real services to students of the Fourth Gospel by this scholarly and laborious work....Sometimes he seems to us to incline to draw large inferences from his own hypotheses, yet when we turn again to these hypotheses they commend themselves to us, and we feel that they have been reached by a very original and acute mind. Dr Abbott has given us an invaluable guide to the interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, a guide which some of us will very often consult."—Examiner.

"With confidence we recommend this book to all serious students of the gospels....For English readers of the gospels it is, we believe, the best piece of work that Dr Abbott has wrought."—Literary World.

"It is a good deal—but not too much—to say that no one can thoroughly understand the Fourth Gospel who has not studied the material brought together by Dr E. A. Abbott in his 'Johannine Vocabulary.' It is a masterpiece of minute, patient, and ingenious scholarship....Teachers and preachers especially will find it rich in raw material for their work."—Great Thoughts.

"A substantial contribution to the knowledge of the greatest of Christian writings."—British Weekly.

"A marvel of industry and scholarship, into which it is impossible to enter in any adequate way within the limits of an ordinary review."—Record.

"An exceedingly useful theological text-book."—Globe.

"It is all that the title indicates....But it is far more than that....The consequence of such an investigation is that new, or at any rate clearer, light is thrown on passage after passage....We hope we have said enough to show our readers the value of this volume as a student's book."—Church of England Pulpit and Ecclesiastical Review.

"The results which he brings out are very striking....The upshot of the whole is in accord with the general tendency of recent criticism—to put the Fourth Gospel on a higher plane of authority."—Westminster Gazette.

"The author brings out the exact meanings and subtle inflections of the original in a very striking manner. The different shades of meaning and the manner in which such important words as believing, authority &c. are exemplified, makes the work one of great value to the Bible student."—Rock.

"The notes are packed with painstaking scholarship....And the whole evidence is surveyed in a masterly manner at the end."—Expository Times.

"The vocabularies, with their exhaustive apparatus of notes, represent a large amount of patient linguistic research....But it is only when we approach the question of the right method of interpreting the Gospel as a whole, particularly in its literary relations to the other three, that the real value of all this critical spadework can be made apparent. We hope that Dr Abbott's scrupulous scholarship will allow him before long to attack this work of constructive interpretation."—Manchester Guardian.

"His discussion of Johannine synonyms, e.g. the words for 'seeing,' 'hearing,' 'knowing,' 'coming,' and other simple but fruitful ideas, is most illuminating. Microscopic, it may no doubt be styled: but if examination under a lens of high power reveals new beauties in the structure of an organism, microscopic investigation proves both instructive and fruitful. We are inclined to say that this volume was well worth publishing were it only for the complete account it contains of the Johannine key-word 'believing.'...These minute linguistic inquiries may at first sight appear to be meticulous and useless. But it is only by slow patient underground work of this kind that such subtle points as the relation between the several lines of tradition concerning Christ can be determined. And where the subject is so sacred and vital and the end so important, time and trouble should not be begrudged. Dr Abbott spares neither. He deserves the thanks of all careful and earnest New Testament students for the work he is carrying through with such patience and perseverance. Those who cannot accept all his conclusions must admire his learning and his zeal, and they cannot help receiving profit from his company and guidance."—London Quarterly Review.

"The present volume is full of valuable material....We do not know of any investigation into the vocabulary of the Fourth Gospel so minute and thorough as this. The labour expended in producing it deserves the warmest recognition, and we shall look forward with great interest to the publication on the Johannine Grammar."—Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review.
